Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FOURTH SESSION OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

VOLUME LXIV—PART 4

FEBRUARY 8 TO FEBRUARY 22, 1923

(Pages 3235–4342)

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1923

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

J11
.R5
4th ret

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
RECEIVED
MAY 25 19[illegible]
DOCUMENTS DIVISION

SURPLUS - 1
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DUPLICATE

Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS FOURTH SESSION.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1923.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 5, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

SOUTHERN PINE LUMBER INDUSTRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the commission on the costs, prices, and profits of the southern pine lumber industry for the years 1917 and 1918, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

CLAIMS OF CONTRACTORS UNDER TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the number of claims filed under the act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department and the present status of the work involved in connection with their adjudication, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the town clerk of Hancock, Mass., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HANCOCK, MASS., February 6, 1923.

CLERK OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the annual town meeting of the voters of the town of Hancock, Mass., held February 5, 1923, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of Hancock, in town meeting assembled, request the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to designate or to create some agency of the Federal Government which shall have all the powers essential to fix, and power to fix a maximum price on coal whenever and wherever sold, either by producer or dealer, any or all such powers to be exercised, the need being shown therefor, for the benefit of any congressional district or part thereof whenever said agency is so requested in writing by the Members of Congress representing said district; any or all such powers to continue in force so long as, in the opinion of the Congressman making request, the need of such Federal control exists.

"Resolved, That we further request legislation which shall provide that, in the sale and shipment of coal at the mines or elsewhere, orders for coal from consumers and dealers selling directly to consumers shall take precedence over all other orders, said legislation to provide also for prompt transportation of such shipments.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the town clerk to the clerk of each branch of Congress, together with the vote thereon."

Respectfully, A. D. MCSORLEY, Town Clerk.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts relative to the coal situation in New England, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1923.

In the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.

Resolutions favoring the passage by Congress of legislation placing an embargo upon coal.

Whereas there are now pending before the Congress of the United States various bills and resolutions providing for and favoring the passage of legislation placing an embargo upon the export of coal from the United States during the present period of coal shortage; and

Whereas the Hon. JOHN J. ROGERS, Congressman from Massachusetts, has introduced a bill in Congress entitled "A bill declaring an embargo on anthracite coal," being H. R. No. 12827, which declares that the conditions at present prevailing in the production and distribution of anthracite coal constitute a national emergency; and

Whereas great distress and hardship exist in New England on account of such coal shortage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts urgently requests that Congress take immediate steps for the passage of appropriate legislation to relieve the great distress existing in New England, and hereby records itself in favor of immediate passage of H. R. No. 12827; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In the house of representatives, adopted January 29, 1923.

A true copy.

Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. MCNARY presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Joint Memorial 2.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas your honorable body has under consideration a bill compelling every manufacturer or handler or seller of woolen fabrics and woolen garments to place thereon a tag plainly stating the exact percentage of virgin wool and also how much and what other materials enter into such cloth; and

Whereas such a law will be of inestimable value to both those who wear clothing and also to producers of wool and mohair; and

Whereas Oregon is interested both as a producer and as a user of woolen goods: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the house January 29, 1923.

CYRIL G. BROWNELL,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 23, 1923.

JAY UPTON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed: "Senate Joint Memorial No. 2. Introduced by Senator Zimmerman. John P. Hunt, chief clerk. Filed February 1, 1923. Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state.")

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 2 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon February 1, 1923, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 2d day of February, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL.] SAM A. KOZER, Secretary of State.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted by the Episcopalian Club of St. Thomas Church, of Dover, N. H., favoring an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seattle, Wash., praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from L. C. Manson, attorney for the Federation of National Farm Loan Associations, a part of which bears on Senate bill 4130 and Senate bill 4453, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it also relates to House bill 14041, which is pending in the House. Mr. Manson gives certain reasons why these bills ought not to be passed, and those reasons I think are sufficiently sound and substantial to be laid before all interested in the measures. I therefore ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1923.

DEAR SIR: The Strong bill (H. R. 13125) has been rewritten by the committee and reintroduced as H. R. 14041.

The new bill (H. R. 14041) is a more vicious measure than H. R. 13125.

H. R. 14041 was reported for passage January 27 and is now before the House for action.

Whatever is to be done to defeat this measure must be done at once.

H. R. 14041, like H. R. 13125, authorizes direct unindorsed loans, the direct borrower to become a direct stockholder in the Federal land bank.

H. R. 14041, however, eliminates the provisions of H. R. 13125, attaching a double liability to stock to be held by direct borrowers.

This new bill not only strikes at the foundation of the cooperative system but discriminates against the association borrowers by requiring them to assume twice the risk of loss assumed by direct borrowers. It reduces by one-half the margin of capital security behind the bonds.

I appeal to you for your prompt assistance in preventing the passage of this bill. If you have written your Congressmen and Senators relative to H. R. 13125, please write them again at once, or preferably wire them, to oppose H. R. 14041. If you have not written, please do not fail to do so at once. Also get your officers and directors and as many of your members as possible to do the same.

ASSOCIATIONS MISREPRESENTED TO CONGRESS.

The committee has been misled, and Congress is being misled by misrepresentations as to the situation. The associations are being blamed for the failure of the system to properly function at a time when shortage of money and delay was entirely due to the policy of the Farm Loan Board and its appointees in charge of the bank.

During the time the system was tied up by litigation, during the whole of 1921, and during the first few months of 1922 the Federal land bank system did not meet the demand for money. After the litigation was over the demand was overwhelming and but few bonds were placed on the market for sale. The result was that many farmers desiring loans could not get them.

So few appraisers were employed by the banks that applicants were required in many cases to wait for months before their farms were appraised. The internal organization of the banks was such that interminable delays occurred before many of the applications were passed upon.

This shortage of funds and delay in the banks led to great dissatisfaction among the farmers, many of whom blamed the associations and complained to their Members of Congress and Senators. They did not know where the trouble lay, but did know there was something wrong. Complaints also came from farmers whose applications were rejected because the associations did not consider the risk good. These farmers claimed that the associations, having secured their loans, would not let others in.

This general dissatisfaction has been capitalized by those seeking to destroy the associations. Although the trouble was entirely due to the Farm Loan Board and the banks, and the associations were loud and vigorous in their protests, they are now being blamed because they did not function when they had nothing to function with.

* * * * * * *

H. R. 14041 AUTHORIZES DIRECT UNINDORSED LOANS.

The new bill (H. R. 14041) wipes out the provisions of section 15 of the original act requiring agents to indorse loans and provides "that whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed, or the local national farm-loan association is not in the opinion of the Federal Farm Loan Board properly serving the needs of its territory in any locality, said board may, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans on farm lands through agents approved by said board."

This provision looks innocent. It would appear to be meant to cover a situation where farmers can not do business through an association. Let us consider its origin.

This provision was recommended to Congress in the fifth annual report of the Farm Loan Board, dated December 15, 1921. At that time and for months after the banks were so far behind in filling applications forwarded by associations that the right to apply for loans had been shut off by most of the banks. At the time this recommendation was made there could have been no demand for new agencies to procure business, because the banks could not take care of the business forwarded through the associations. We are forced to the conclusion that the real purpose of those who are behind this provision is to substitute subservient agents for independent associations, instead of to merely use them where associations do not cover the field.

A committee of the American Bankers' Association came to Washington last winter for the purpose of pushing the same plan, but deemed the time for doing so inopportune. These bankers wanted to get the commission, but did not want to indorse the loans.

Under this bill it is to be left to the opinion of the board whether an association is serving the needs of its territory. Thus, if an association which is required to indorse the loan rejects an application because, in the opinion of its directors, the risk is bad, if a secretary-treasurer does not happen to be in his office when a farmer calls, or if he can not get his directors to meet as soon as an applicant desires, any of these facts may, in the opinion of the board, justify the conclusion that the association is not satisfactorily serving its territory. It can then set up an agency across the corner which can make loans without indorsement.

Section 5 of this bill provides that the direct borrower "shall contribute 5 per cent of the amount of his loan to the capital of the Federal land bank and shall become the owner of as much capital stock of the land bank as such contribution shall warrant."

This bill (H. R. 14041) eliminates the provision of H. R. 13125 and S. 4130, making such direct stock subject to a double liability. In my memorandum published in Rural Credits and in my previous communications discussing H. R. 13125 and S. 4130 I pointed out that the double liability attached to the stock held by direct borrower does not mean the same thing, either as an obligation of the stockholder or as an element of security to the bank and the bondholder as the double liability of stockholders in the associations. By entirely eliminating the double liability on direct stock the direct borrower is required to assume just one-half the liability of loss assumed by a borrower through an association. The capital stock of the bank and the double liability of stockholders in the association are additional elements of the security behind the bonds. To the extent that direct loans may be made, this additional security is reduced by one-half.

DIRECT UNINDORSED LOANS A DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ASSOCIATIONS.

I am not going to repeat the arguments against direct unindorsed loans. They are fully set forth on pages 17 to 22 of the pamphlet sent you.

THE ASSOCIATIONS CAN NOT COMPETE WITH AGENTS MAKING UNINDORSED LOANS.

No sensible borrower will assume the double liability incident to the ownership of stock in an indorsing association if he can get his loan through an agent without it.

It is discrimination to require association loans to be indorsed (with the indorsement backed by the double liability) and to permit agency loans to be made without indorsement. It is further discrimination to require a part of the dividends to associations to be set aside as reserves while the full dividends will be paid direct borrowers. Additional discrimination will result in association borrowers being required to lose a part or the whole of their dividend to cover defaults of fellow borrowers while the direct borrower is required to stand no loss at all in this respect. In addition to all this, the association as a stockholder in the bank must stand its share of the losses on direct loans which fall directly on the bank, while the direct borrower does not share the association losses on indorsements.

REDUCING THE SECURITY WILL INCREASE THE INTEREST.

This indorsement (backed in the double liability of stockholders in the association) is an element of security behind the bonds. It is prominently advertised by the bond houses in selling the bonds. To eliminate it is to create a different security, for which a new market must be created.

What is the necessity for this change? The associations have produced more business than the banks have been able to handle promptly. What is the need for additional agents to bring in business?

By doing business through associations which are required to indorse their loans, the poor risks have been kept out, and the banks have suffered practically no losses. Why do business through agents who will have no interest in a loan except their commission?

A market has been created which is taking the present bonds as fast as they are offered, at constantly decreasing rates of interest. Why destroy this market by substituting a different security?

LOAN LIMIT $16,000.

The Strong bill 14041 increases the loan limit to $16,000, with the provision that the Federal Farm Loan Board may in special cases authorize loans up to $25,000, but that loans of $10,000 and under shall be given the preference. In this connection, I call your attention to the fact that the increase in the loan limit is not dependent upon the passage of this bill. The Capper bill which has already passed the Senate contains an unqualified provision increasing the loan limit to $25,000.

PERMANENT MANAGEMENT.

By the provisions of this bill the permanent management of the Federal land banks is to be in boards of seven directors. Each Federal land bank district is to be divided into three divisions. The associations and direct borrowers are to elect a director and nominate a candidate for director at large for each division. The board is to appoint the director at large from among the three nominated and is also to appoint three district directors.

While this provision limits the board in selecting the seventh director to one of three nominated by the stockholders, yet it gives the board the power to appoint four out of the seven directors. The director at large will know that unless he votes with the other three appointed by the board he will not be reappointed. He will be responsive to the wishes of the board, instead of to the wishes of the stockholders, whenever there is a conflict of views.

While even such a plan of choosing directors would be a distinct gain over the one contained in H. R. 13125, and standing alone might be worth a trial, yet the cooperative method of making indorsed loans through farm-loan associations should not be sacrificed to secure any such doubtful provision for permanent management as this. It is the inherent right of the stockholders to control their own property by choosing, without interference, at least a majority of the directors. Congress will recognize and observe this right when the associations unite in asserting it.

ALL BILLS AIMED AT DESTRUCTION OF COOPERATIVE SYSTEM.

The enactment of any of these bills (H. R. 13125, H. R. 14041, or S. 4130) will result in the disintegration of the farm-loan association, the elimination of cooperation, an increase in interest rates, the killing of the present market for bonds, and an eventual destruction of the system. The essential features of all these bills are the same as the recommendations of the Farm Loan Board in its fifth annual report. Soon after this report was made public, in response to Senator FLETCHER'S questionnaire, hundreds of associations expressed their disapproval of these changes in the act.

* * * * * * *

Very truly yours,

L. C. MANSON,
Attorney for the Federation of National Farm Loan Associations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4448) for the relief of certain disbursing officers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1111) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Finance, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 13774. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property (Rept. No. 1113); and

H. R. 13827. An act relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States (Rept. No. 1114).

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12368) to abolish the inspection districts of Apalachicola, Fla., and Burlington, Vt., and the office of one supervising inspector, Steamboat Inspection Service, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1115) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 8, 1923, they presented to the President of the United States the bill (S. 4029) to amend and supplement the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas & Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874.

MOBILE RIVER BRIDGE, ALA.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 4469) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River in the State of Alabama. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is anxious to have the bill passed, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles, authorized by the act of Congress approved October 5, 1917, as revived and reenacted by the act of Congress approved February 14, 1922, to be built by the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, over and across the navigable channels of the mouth of Mobile River from Bay Port, in township 4 south, range 2 east, on the east shore of the waters of Mobile Bay, in Baldwin County, Ala., on a direct line to a point on Blakely Island, in Mobile County, on the east shore of Mobile River, opposite the municipal docks of the city of Mobile, Ala., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION TO PUBLIC DOMAIN OF LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 5224) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1112) thereon. I may say that the bill has passed the House and come to the Senate and has been unanimously reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. I think it will not take more than a minute to consider and pass the bill, and, as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is interested in it, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If its consideration shall take more time than I have indicated, I will withdraw the request.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, on page 5, line 11, after the word "half," to strike out "or" and insert "of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be certified to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the whole or such portion or portions of the several tracts of land in the State of Louisiana heretofore set apart and reserved for naval uses as are no longer required for the purposes for which they were reserved or for any purposes connected with the naval service, and upon such certification the tracts of land described herein shall be duly restored to and become a part of the public lands of the United States; and a preference-right entry for a period of six months from the date of this act shall be given all bona fide settlers who are qualified to enter under the homestead law and have made improvements and are now residing upon any agricultural lands in said reservations, and for a period of six months from the date of settlement, when that shall occur, after the date of this act: Provided, That persons who enter under the homestead law shall pay for such lands the value heretofore or hereafter determined by appraisement, not less than the price of the land at the time of entry; and such payment may, at the option of the purchaser, be made in five equal installments, at times and at rates of interest to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the certification of lands hereby authorized by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Interior shall be subject to confirmation of title, as follows:

Title is hereby confirmed to the original entrymen, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives to the lands upon which entries were made at the United States land office at Opelousas, La., paid for at the legal rate at the time of entry for Government lands in that locality, and for which lands the said land office issued certificates of purchase to the original entrymen, as follows, to wit:

In township 14 south, range 11 east, on Cypress Island—

Fractional sections 31 and 32, Joseph T. Hawkins, August 7, 1844; certificate No. 4184.

In township 15 south, range 11 east, on Cypress Island—

Lot 1 of section 6 and lots 1 and 2, section 5, John Dawson, December 26, 1843; certificate No. 4115.

Lots 3, 4, and 5, section 5, and lots 2, 3, 4, and 5, section 6, John D. Alston, December 26, 1834; certificate No. 4114.

In township 15 south, range 12 east, on Navy Commissioners Island—

Fractional section 38 and lots 1 and 2, section 36, Henry Bradley, April 29, 1843; certificate No. 4081.

Lots 3 and 4, section 36, John L. Baize, September 5, 1838; certificate No. 1998.

In township 14 south, range 11 east—

Lot 3, section 27 (with other lands), John Brownson and Daniel Fisher, May 27, 1839; certificate No. 2604.

East half of southeast quarter section 27 (with other lands), Daniel Fisher, October 27, 1840; certificate No. 2799.

Lot 5, section 28 (with other lands), John Brownson and Daniel Fisher, May 27, 1839; certificate No. 2607.

Lots 3 and 4 and southwest quarter of southwest quarter section 28, Daniel Fisher, September 15, 1840; certificate No. 2759.

Fractional section 29, Daniel Fisher, September 16, 1840; certificate No. 2760.

Fractional section 32, Daniel Fisher, September 16, 1840; certificate No. 2762.

Northeast quarter section 33, John Fowler, May 10, 1839; certificate No. 2581.

West half and southeast quarter section 33, Daniel Fisher, September 16, 1840; certificate No. 2763.

East half of northeast quarter section 34, Daniel Fisher, October 27, 1840; certificate No. 2802.

Lots 3 and 4, section 34 (with other lands), Pierre Jupiter, May 10, 1839; certificate No. 2582.

Southwest quarter section 34, Daniel Fisher, September 16, 1840; certificate No. 2761.

Southeast quarter section 34 (or lots 5 and 7 and south half of southeast quarter), John Brownson and Daniel Fisher, May 27, 1839; certificate No. 2603.

West half of northwest quarter section 35, Daniel Fisher, October 27, 1840; certificate No. 2800.

Southwest quarter and west half of southeast quarter section 35, John Brownson and Daniel Fisher, May 27, 1839; certificate No. 2605.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana why the lands are not ceded directly to the State? So far as I am concerned I should be willing to have them ceded to the State.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will state to the Senator that away back in 1832 these lands were set aside, consisting mainly of live-oak forests, for the purpose of constructing ships. In 1879 some of these lands were restored to the public domain in the State of Florida, and in 1895 in the States of Alabama and Mississippi. The lands in the State of Louisiana were never restored to the public domain. Through an error these lands were certified by the Land Office to the State of Louisiana, and under the laws of the State were rented by citizens of the State of Louisiana. Later it was discovered that the lands belonged to this naval reservation. We are now asking that the lands be restored in the State of Louisiana, just as they were in Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi—merely that they be restored to the public domain and be disposed of under the Federal laws.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I stated, I think it would be wiser and fairer to transfer these lands to the State. What business has the Federal Government with those lands that the people of Louisiana have been occupying for years? I believe in extinguishing so far as it is possible the title of the Federal Government to lands that the Federal Government does not need within the States and transferring the jurisdiction to the States. I should be willing to transfer these lands directly to the State of Louisiana and let the State dispose of them as it sees fit.

Mr. BROUSSARD. We did not propose to introduce a bill here that was contrary to the existing law. That was the reason for it.

Mr. KING. I would be more generous than the Senator if I had the disposition of these lands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. We merely want them restored to the public domain.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator makes a mistake. I think he ought to provide that title shall be taken by the State of Louisiana, and I feel sure that the Senate would vote to give the State the lands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that this bill has passed the House, and we would like to have it become a law.

Mr. KING. If the Senator is satisfied, I am satisfied, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask whether the lands will be subject to entry and patent just exactly as other lands are?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; they will be.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4498) to authorize the purchase of a general and surgical hospital in Los Angeles County, Calif., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 4499) granting a pension to Affie M. Crockett; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4500) authorizing the appointment of William Schuyler Woodruff as an Infantry officer, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4501) providing for the closing of Weaver Place NW., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4502) to authorize the construction of a subway for the transmission of mail in the city of New York, N. Y.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 4503) granting the consent of Congress to Bethlehem Steel Co. to construct a bridge across Humphreys Creek at or near the city of Sparrows Point, Md.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4504) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Parish, La.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4505) granting a pension to Eldora Mallon; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment providing that so much of section 24 of the act approved June 4, 1920, as provides that any person originally appointed under the provisions of said act at an age greater than 45 years shall, when retired, receive retired pay at the rate of 4 per cent of active pay for each year of commissioned service shall not be construed as applicable to said officers when retired for disability incident to the service, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13793, the War Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10819) relating to the Department of Agriculture, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4029) to amend and supplement the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas & Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10819. An act relating to the Department of Agriculture was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REGULATION OF RADIO COMMUNICATION.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, House bill 13773 is the radio bill which passed the House a few days ago, and has not yet been referred. The bill would properly go either to the Interstate Commerce Committee or to the Commerce Committee. The original radio bill came from the Commerce Committee; but after consulting with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], he thinks that as the Interstate Commerce Committee has taken some testimony on this subject the bill ought to go to that committee, and I ask that it be so referred.

The bill (H. R. 13773) to amend an act to regulate radio communication, approved August 13, 1912, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to submit a conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The principal items in the bill are reported in disagreement. The conferees on the part of the House will submit some proposals to the House, which will later come to the Senate. Otherwise the agreement simply covers minor items in the bill. I ask for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report presented by the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13660) "making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 16, 29, 32, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 47, 48, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 77, 78, 80, 81, 82, 90, 92, 93, 97, 107, 109, 110, 111, 113, 119, 122, 128, and 130.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 50, 52, 59, 66, 70, 72, 73, 79, 85, 86, 89, 91, 94, 95, 98, 99, 102, 108, 114, 115, and 125; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$154,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and two Ford runabouts of the 'slip-on' body type without self-starter, not exceeding $550 each; in all, $3,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: " : Provided, That after April 30, 1923, until the constitutionality of the act creating this board shall have been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States there shall not be expended from this appropriation or from the appropriation for this board for the remainder of the fiscal year 1923 a greater sum than at the rate of $1,600 per annum for personal services and $400 per annum for contingent and miscellaneous expenses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including an allowance to the secretary of the Board of Charities, not exceeding the rate of $20 per month, for the maintenance of an automobile to be furnished by him and used in the discharge of his official duties, $47,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "other than motor vehicles for the police and fire departments, but no such vehicles shall be transferred from the police or fire departments to any other branch of the government of the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$573,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$55,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", $20 per month for an automobile, and $10 per month for a motor cycle"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", $20 per month for automobiles, and $10 per month for motor cycles"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$860,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "give his whole time from 9 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p. m., and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$240"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or contracts as in this act provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: " : Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or obligated toward the construction of or addition to any building the whole and entire construction of which, exclusive of heating, lighting, and plumbing, shall not have been awarded in one or a single contract, separate and apart from any other contract, project, or undertaking, to the lowest bidder complying with all the legal requirements as to a deposit of money or the execution of a bond, or both, for the faithful performance of the contract: Provided further, That no architect's fee shall be paid or obligated for plans, specifications, or any professional services whatever unless they are such as will enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or those letting a contract, to secure a legal bid within the amount authorized by Congress for the building or other projects: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as repealing existing law giving the commissioners the right to reject all bids"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "The total cost of the sites and of the several and respective buildings herein provided for, including heating, lighting, and plumbing, when completed upon plans and specifications to be made previously and approved, shall not exceed the several and respective sums of money herein respectively appropriated or authorized for such purposes, any provision in this act to the contrary notwithstanding"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$325; maintenance of motor vehicle used in performance of official duties, at not to exceed $20 per month, $240"; and, on page 69 of the bill, in line 7, strike out "$5,137" and insert "$5,065"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "$56,000, and all moneys hereafter received at the reformatory as income thereof from the sale of brooms to the various branches of the government of the District of Columbia shall remain available for the purchase of material for the manufacture of additional brooms to be similarly disposed of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$136,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: On page 91 of the bill, in line 3, strike out "$40,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$45,000," and on page 91 of the bill, in line 18, strike out "$8,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$10,000," and on page 92 of the bill, in lines 2 and 3, strike out "$20,000, payable wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," and in lieu thereof insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the preparation of designs and estimates for development of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, $4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 24, 33, 55, 56, 64, 65, 75, 76, 83, 105, 112, 116, 117, 118, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 129.

LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
W. L. JONES,
L. HEISLER BALL,
CARTER GLASS,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator if the House provision has been agreed to relative to the question of passenger-carrying automobiles?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Senate receded from its amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate receded from its amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill and shall ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Is the report a complete agreement?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 12, and 13.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
THOMAS STERLING,
LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. B. SLEMP,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
CHAS. F. OGDEN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

STREET-RAILWAY FARES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, some days ago Commissioner Keller, of the District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission, published a reply to certain statements I had made about 5-cent fares, in which reply he took occasion to say I ought not to complain of 8-cent fares here when we had 7-cent fares in Memphis, Nashville, and Chattanooga, and 6-cent fares in Knoxville. In making the statement I suppose Commissioner Keller must have thought I was in favor of such fares in Tennessee and was only opposed to such fares in Washington. Mr. Keller is very greatly mistaken.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the present high rate of street-car fares in Washington and I am opposed to the present high rates of street-car fares charged by street-car companies in Tennessee. I want to say that the same cause of the high fares exists in Tennessee that exists in Washington, namely, a public utilities commission. I shall not speak of the street-car situation in Nashville, Knoxville, and Chattanooga, because I am not absolutely familiar with their contracts. I think, however, that each of those cities has a contract with the respective street-railway companies for a 5-cent fare. I know this is true in Memphis. It is a charter contract, just as it is in Washington.

However, a public utilities law was passed in Tennessee for the ostensible purpose of regulating public utilities, and there, as here, instead of the commission regulating the public utilities, it has permitted the public utility companies to violate their contracts by raising their rates of fare. So incensed were the people of Tennessee at the action of the public utilities commission in raising street-car and other fares that the question of the abolition of the utilities commission became an issue between the Democratic and Republican Parties in the last campaign, Governor Peay, candidate of the Democratic Party, taking the position that the utilities commission should be abolished. He was elected by 38,000 majority. A bill is now pending to abolish the utilities commission of that State, and I have no doubt that the platform pledge will be lived up to and the utilities commission abolished and all the street-car companies of the State required to operate their lines in conformity with their several contracts.

I am in favor of the abolition of the public utilities commission in Tennessee just as I am in favor of abolishing the Public Utilities Commission here in Washington. In both places, without making any charges whatsoever against the members of the commissions personally, the result of their action in regard to street-car fares has been favorable only to the street-car companies and not in favor of the people. In both places the utilities commission has assumed the right to permit the street-car companies to violate their contracts. The utility commissions were never created for any such purpose. At the time of their creation there was never any claim made that they would have any such power, and their exercise of the power is wholly unwarranted and, in my judgment, without the pale of the law. If the constitution and laws were properly administered, the action of the Tennessee Utilities Commission in raising fares in violation of contracts would be unconstitutional and void as contrary to that provision of the United States Constitution which inhibits a State from passing any law impairing the obligation of a contract.

Mr. President, there is another similarity between the Memphis street-car situation and one of the Washington street railway companies, namely, that in each place the street-car company is undertaking to secure fares high enough to earn dividends on watered stock. During the time I have been in Memphis the street-car company has been reorganized two or three times, or possibly more, and each time there was an enormous addition to the stock issued. Just now, even with 7-cent fares, that company is not able to make dividends on its watered stock and is in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. Keller claims that the Washington Utilities Commission is not undertaking to say that the Washington companies shall earn dividends upon watered stock, but that the purpose of the commission is to keep the fares at such a rate as will earn a reasonable return on the valuation of the company. Of course, Mr. President, we all know that this is just another way of providing for the earning of dividends on watered stock. Valuation is always a matter of opinion. The real question is, What amount of money has been invested by the present stockholders? It has never been denied that much of the present stock of one of the companies is watered stock, and that watered stock is now selling at a very high price solely because the commission has raised the rates so high as to earn money on such watered stock. The Congress owes it to the people in the District of Columbia to prohibit the earning of dividends upon watered stock regardless of valuation. The Utilities Commission was created to prevent the street-car companies from exploiting the citizens of Washington. Instead of its carrying out its original purpose, it is aiding the street-car companies in exploiting the citizens. The Congress also owes it to the people of the United States to set a good example to the rest of the country in prohibiting the exploitation of the people of the District of Columbia for the benefit of these stock manipulators.

I want to take this occasion also to say, Mr. President, that high street-car fares is not the only subject upon which our Public Utilities Commission here is at fault. I have no doubt the commission is permitting the gas company and the electric light company and other public utilities to charge rates higher than are permitted in their contracts. I am inclined to believe that the whole public utilities commission law should be repealed, but for the present I am not going to take up the matter. My first purpose is to confine myself solely to reducing street-car fares in Washington to accord with the contracts between the Government and the companies. The adoption of the amendment I have offered to any one of the District bills would effect this purpose. When we get street-car fares reduced in accordance with the contract, we will take up the remainder of the reduction program afterwards. I have offered amendments to various District bills upon which I propose to obtain a vote, if possible, whenever the bills come up. The fight is on and is going to be continued until the matter is settled and settled right.

On yesterday a purported interview was given out by Mr. Keller or one of the other Utilities Commissioners which reads in part as follows:

If any member of the Senate or anyone else can tell the Utilities Commission how it can reduce street-car fares below the present point we will welcome the information, but it is time that Members of the Senate and others also should cease discussing something about which they apparently have never taken the trouble to inform themselves properly. The capitalization of the car companies, I repeat, has nothing to do with the rate of fares, which is fixed on the valuation of the property, which in turn was set by the Utilities Commission.

Mr. President, I shall pass over this lecture of the Senate or Senators by the Public Utilities Commissioners. It is the old story of the attitude of one possessed with a little brief authority. The commissioner who made the statement does himself no credit by making such a statement and does the cause of the street-railway companies no good. I suggest to him that if he wants to continue to serve the street-car companies well and faithfully he had better quit criticizing Senators in their efforts to defend the people of Washington against the depredations of the predatory interests.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday the President of the United States came before the Congress and delivered his message. We had thought, indeed many of us had hoped, that it would be confined to the very important question of the agreement entered into between the representatives of this country and of Great Britain with respect to the funding of the British debt. That part of the message touching the agreement entered into between the representatives of this country and the representatives of Great Britain with respect to the funding of the debt was couched in eloquent language and was most adroit. It was a very beautiful picture of the possibilities that are interwoven in the agreement. I shall not to-day, in the brief time I shall occupy the floor, take issue with the President on anything he said respecting the funding of the debt. I think that he exaggerated the situation; that he magnified the possibilities; and that he gave greater weight to the agreement than the facts would warrant.

In the course of his message, touching the funding of the debt, the President said:

> The call of the world to-day is for integrity of agreement, the sanctity of covenants, the validity of contracts.

Then he said that the agreement—> is a covenant of peace and recuperation, of respect and cooperation.

He said further that—

> It is a new element * * * a reminder of the ways of peace.

Then he drew a picture of the encouragement and inspiration that would come from it when the world, as he said—> is staggering in discouragement and bowed with the sorrows of wars that were and fears of wars which humanity is praying may be avoided.

Now, I can not see why this very beautiful picture was drawn with respect to the covenants of peace. I wonder if the call of the world to-day for integrity of agreement is greater than it was three years ago? I wonder if the call of the world to-day for sanctity of covenants is greater than it was three years ago? I wonder if the call of the world to-day for the validity of contracts is greater than it was three years ago?

I am wondering in my own mind, and I am sure people throughout the country as they read the message of yesterday are wondering, why it is that the distinguished President did not feel the same impulse three years ago that he feels now when the call of the world is for integrity of agreements, the sanctity of covenants, the validity of contracts. I am glad, however, that the President at this late time, almost five years since the war clouds have passed and the armistice was signed, can now say as he said in his message—

> Here is the first clearing of war-clouded skies in a debt-burdened world.

I am wondering, since all the power was placed in his hands and he has wielded the scepter now for three years, why during that time he has not done something before that might clear the war-clouded skies in a debt-burdened world. Why, may I ask, has the President of the United States seen fit, at this late day and for the first time on yesterday, to do the first positive act that might lift the war clouds from a war-burdened world?

I can not attach such great significance to the agreement. It may be that the representatives of Great Britain should be praised for their work. I shall not criticize it nor shall I condemn the representatives of this country for the agreement into which they have entered. But I see no occasion for great and profuse praise for Great Britain in this instance. They have done nothing more than every American citizen who knew the history of Great Britain expected them to do. Is it not an honest debt? Were not the American people taxed in order to help them to the amount of the indebtedness? When we made the loan did we not expect Great Britain to comply, as she always has complied, with her promises in the matter of the payment of her indebtedness? What is it the representatives of Great Britain have done in the agreement that the American people did not expect them to do when the money was loaned to them? Why all this praise of Great Britain for entering into the agreement? They have done nothing more nor less in funding the indebtedness, in entering into the agreement, than was expected Great Britain would do.

Some of us, not only on this side of the Chamber but on the other side as well, will defer judgment as to what we shall do until the matter is laid before the Senate. Personally I want all the facts. I do not want to see the agreement delayed in the Senate one day longer than is necessary for the facts to be laid before us and an honest discussion of the agreement had upon the floor of the Senate. So much for that.

Now, Mr. President, when we had expected a message to be delivered on a high plane, as it was on a high plane so far as the funding of the British indebtedness is concerned, namely, the first part of the message, why should the President have come to the Congress and offered insult to the Senate of the United States? About the only time applause was elicited during the delivery of the message was when he said that the Senate of the United States by its delay had shown and exhibited a mark of impotence.

Read between the lines, analyze the language, place the interpretation upon it as those who heard it yesterday did, and no other conclusion can be reached than that the President intended to have the country believe that we were but marks of impotence in the Senate of the United States. He raised that issue and did the unseemly thing of coming down from the high pedestal upon which he should always stand as President of the United States to tie a ship subsidy bill to his message and offer insult to the Senate of the United States. Here is what he said:

> Congress owes to itself, to the executive branch of the Government, and to the American public some decisive action.

He was speaking then of the ship subsidy bill. He said:

> Mere avoidance by prolonged debate is a mark of impotence on a vitally important public question.

He said further:

> I plead for a decision.

Ah, Mr. President, mere avoidance by prolonged debate was not believed in by the President of the United States when he was a Senator from Ohio and with others who entered into the conspiracy with him held up the treaty of Versailles. It was then not a mark of impotence upon the part of Senators to take that course. On yesterday he said:

> I plead for a decision.

Yes; and the then President of the United States pleaded for decision with reference to the treaty of Versailles. President Harding did not believe at that time that a mere avoidance by prolonged debate was a mark of impotence, and yet debate was continued in this body and unnecessarily prolonged. Instead of a few days, as has marked the consideration of the ship subsidy bill, it wended its weary way along for, I believe, almost a year. Not only did the now President of the United States, who was then a Senator from Ohio, assist in prolonging the debate and avoiding the issue and not making decision with respect to the treaty of Versailles, but he was one of the Senators who signed the round robin serving notice upon the representatives of this country at Versailles that no matter what they did if the League of Nations, which was intended to promote the peace of the world, should be included within the treaty of Versailles it would be not only avoided and delayed but would be defeated.

Ah, Mr. President, he said:

> There is call for congressional expression, not mere avoidance.

And further:

> I plead for a decision.

It is almost enough to make one who is familiar with the attitude of the President of the United States, the attitude that has marked his course as Chief Executive of this Nation, laugh when he hears him tell the Senate of the United States that it must show some mark of decision, some action, some program, some policy. The President of the United States telling us that we ought to evidence some qualities of decision! Why, Mr. President, the executive department of this Government does not know what the word "decision" means, and it has not since it took control of the Government two years ago. The executive department have supplanted the word "decision" with the word "vacillation," and no one, not only with respect to our domestic policies but with respect to our foreign policies, has been able to tell one day what would be the policy the next. The administration has worshiped at the shrine of isolation and has marched to the tune of a program of negation. Decision! The administration does not know that the word is in the dictionary; yet the President comes to the American Congress and offers an insult to the Senate of the United States by his expression, as such, because, forsooth, for a few days, during the short session of Congress, some of us have seen fit to oppose his program affecting the ship subsidy bill. Mr. President, I accept the insult that is offered as a compliment to me and to my people. I have been able in part up to this good hour, in common not only with Senators on this side of the aisle but with some on the other side of the Chamber, to prevent the additional burdens to the amount of $875,000,000 which are carried in the ship subsidy bill from being imposed on the American people.

The President should have known that we have done pretty well in the Senate of the United States during this session of Congress. He saw fit to call an extraordinary session solely to deal with the ship subsidy bill, and yet during the two or three weeks we were then in session the ship subsidy bill did not come before the Senate; we did not have it here for discussion. So no blame could attach to us for any delay during that time. The blame for delay must attach to those in the majority who have attempted to steer the bill through the Senate of the United States. Since we met in regular session in December last what has been the record of the Congress? Does it warrant the President in finding fault with us for asking a reasonable time within which to discuss the ship subsidy bill, a measure which proposes to revolutionize our merchant marine and at the same time, as I have said, which would carry additional burdens to the American people?

A few years ago—in 1919, I think it was—the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, reported to the Senate a bill to take care of the merchant marine. We were told at that time that the measure thus reported embodied the policy of the Government with respect to the merchant marine; we were told that if we passed that legislation we should be able to boast of a merchant marine second in all the world only to that of England. I recall that at that time the President of the United States was a distinguished Senator from the State of Ohio, and I shall never forget him rising in his place and making a speech in support of that measure. I recall how he pleaded for its passage; how he said it would guarantee a merchant marine to America; and yet we are now told by the President, who has fallen under the influence of Lasker, who jumps when Lasker pulls the string—and it is due more to Lasker's influence and power of persuasion over the President than to anything else that to-day we have the ship subsidy bill in the United States Senate, which hardly a Republican Senator in his heart indorses—that the funding agreement and the ship subsidy bill "are inseparably related to our good fortunes at home and our high place in the world."

He thought when we passed the Jones merchant marine act that we had enacted a piece of good legislation which would insure to us a merchant marine, but now he tells us that should the ship subsidy bill fail, not only shall we have to liquidate but that we shall also be humiliated in doing so.

Mr. President, what is it that this administration has done which proves that we are trying to take our "high place" in the world? Has it done it by erecting barriers with tariff rates so high that they hamper our international trade? Does it do it by refusing to attend economic conferences in order to stabilize the world which is in distress? Does it do it by refusing to permit the majority Senators here to pass the so-called Robinson resolution to remove the obstacle which the Republican Party incorporated into the law by the ratification of the separate treaty with Germany forbidding the President to name a representative upon the Reparation Commission without the consent of Congress? Is the Republican Party promoting good relationship with all the world and carrying us to a higher level among all people by refusing to permit the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to secure consideration for his resolution proposing an economic conference of Eurpean powers? Yet the President has stated that because we have asked for a liberal discussion relative to the ship subsidy bill we are going to lose our "high place" among all the peoples of the world.

Mr. President, I care not how long a Senator may have served in this body, I assert there is not a Senator here who in all his experience ever saw legislation affecting the general supply bills go through more quickly and with less discussion than has been the case as to such legislation during this session of Congress. Have we thrown obstacles in the way of their passage? No; we have cooperated with the majority to provide to all branches of the Government the necessary appropriations in order that the Government might be run in an orderly manner. We have passed every supply bill save one, and it has been done through the cooperation of the minority in this body. Indeed, the only bill concerning which it could have been hinted that there was the slightest filibuster was the agricultural credits bill; and I recall that twice I myself offered a request for unanimous consent to close debate so that we might vote on it. Both times, however, the objection came from the other side of the aisle; and finally when a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into to vote on that bill, the request for unanimous consent came from the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], a Democratic Member of the Senate.

We on this side proposed a unanimous-consent agreement to stop the debate upon the pending bill. We have been willing to stop debate upon it; but the objections which have been made to closing the debate, as my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] knows, because he made such a request, came from a Republican Senator, a friend of the present administration. Yet the President of the United States comes to Congress and with the power and influence he has endeavors to create the impression that we here are recreant to our legislative duty and have not cooperated with the majority in passing legislation through this body. I deny the assertion.

For my part, if the President of the United States and the leadership on the other side of the Chamber would say, "We want to vote on the ship subsidy bill to-morrow, and we will use our influence upon those Members of the Senate who went down to defeat at the November election and who do not now represent the wishes of the people affecting this matter, to cause them to refrain from voting," we would be ready to vote. If such an understanding or agreement could be reached, Senators on the other side of the Chamber know that the ship subsidy bill would be defeated by at least 8 votes in the United States Senate. The most optimistic champions of the ship subsidy legislation in this body claim only 2 majority if any vote should come on the ship subsidy bill, and that 2 majority comes from the fact that at least 10—I believe it is 10, though perhaps the number may be greater—of the Senators who went down in defeat in November will vote for the ship subsidy bill.

Do you think, Mr. President, that the American people when they understand the situation will be hoodwinked or misled about it? If the President wants action on the ship subsidy bill upon the part of Senators who represent the people as well as Representatives in the other House who represent the people, let him call an extra session of Congress on the 5th day of March, so that we may meet here, and then we will give you "a run for your money," and let you have a vote pretty quickly. Are we asking an unreasonable thing when we make that suggestion? Are we to rest under the imputation that we are asking anything unfair when we are trying to defeat a piece of legislation that is wicked; that is monstrous; that is unfair and wrong, which seeks to take from the people $875,000,000 and give it over to the shipping trust? Because we rise here and protest against that are we to be held up to the country as emblems of impotency?

Now, Mr. President, one more thought and I am through. The shipping trust of this country is not in a bad shape. It made tremendous profits during the war. I will tell the Senate, however, a class of people who are in distress, who have been in distress not for a month or two months, as my friend from Colorado and my friend from Oregon and others know, but have been in distress for three years and more, and that is the American farmer. I do not know what the price of wheat to-day is, but I am told that the wheat growers can not get a reasonable price for it and that every farmer who raises wheat is losing money. I will ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] what is the price of wheat to-day?

Mr. BROOKHART. The price is now about $1.15 a bushel.

Mr. HARRISON. The price is about $1.15 a bushel for wheat, while corn only a little while ago was selling for from 25 to 30 cents a bushel. I do not know what the price of corn now is, but I know it is not over 60 to 65 cents a bushel. There is distress in every agricultural district throughout this country. Farmers have had their mortgages foreclosed. They have seen their deposits and balances in the banks dwindle and disappear. Distress is everywhere. Rising to the emergency, rising to the hour, this body, which on yesterday the President of the United States lifted his voice against and criticized, passed only last week or week before last two measures intended to help the agricultural interests of the country, one of them known as the Capper bill, the other known as the Lenroot agricultural credits bill, both seeking as best they could to help the farmers and the live-stock men of the country to procure credit so that they might exist and prosper. Mark you, Mr. President, those two bills passed this body by the unanimous indorsement of every Senator here. On the Capper bill there was not even a roll call, so unanimous was the support accorded it; and on a roll call on the Lenroot agricultural credits bill 62 Senators raised their voices and voted in the affirmative, and every one who was absent was for it. Those bills have gone to the House, and yet I read in the paper this startling headline:

No farm credits until ship subsidy passes—Harding may outmaneuver the blocs after all.

The article says that the leader of the Republican Party in the House went up to see President Harding, and he came back and said: "I am not sure that an agricultural credits bill will pass the House of Representatives."

What is it that this administration would do in order to carry to fulfillment their nefarious measures that can not be defended before an honest citizenship in this country? When the President yesterday was speaking so eloquently in behalf of the Shipping Trust and for the passage of the debt-funding measure, why did he not lift his voice and exert the power of his office, in view of these statements that are printed and the rumors that are here and the plans that are being promulgated, and say to the House of Representatives: "Gentlemen, the Senate has passed two pieces of legislation for the farmers—the Capper bill and the Lenroot agricultural credits bill"? He could have then said: "Gentlemen, they received the unanimous indorsement of the Senate of the United States. I want to appeal to you—because when Congress adjourns on the 4th of March it will not meet, perhaps, unless I call it back, until December, 1923—let me appeal to you, Representatives, to pass the rural-credits legislation." No; the President's time was too much occupied in telling about the ship subsidy bill, and in reflecting on the Senate of the United States, and in urging the passage of that bill.

Why, I have heard it said that some of the high officials connected with the ship subsidy bill say that the word will come down the line that this funding agreement will not be ratified until the ship subsidy bill is out of the way. I hope that is not true, but if you start tactics of that kind you will be to blame for whatever the consequences may be.

The American farmers will read that message of yesterday, Mr. President, and they will wonder not one time but many times why it was that the President, with only these few days remaining, did not appeal to the House, as he appealed to the Senate to pass the ship subsidy bill, to pass the two measures that we have given them to facilitate credits for the agricultural interests of the country.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when I was interrupted yesterday by several very lengthy statements of Senators I had commenced to read from the report of the engineers that had been printed in the RECORD the day before some items that it seemed to me required at least some additional evidence to justify their presence in this legislation. It is true they are not in the bill; this is a lump sum; but we have been informed by this report where the money is to go if the lump sum remains intact and the bill is passed in that form. It seemed to me that where there was a river or a harbor already completed, or nearly completed, and the cost of maintenance that must come out of the Treasury of the United States was practically the same and in some instances more than the entire tonnage that went through the river in the preceding year, the burden of proof was placed upon those who wanted to use the money for that purpose, and that unless it did affirmatively appear that the item was a meritorious one it was a good reason why the lump-sum appropriation should be cut down. I assume that if the lump-sum appropriation is cut down, those in charge of the distribution of the sum will divide it up among those projects which, in the judgment of the Board of Engineers, are the most meritorious, and that the least meritorious propositions will be excluded in the division of the fund.

I had read only one of these items—there are a great many of them—when immediately I was attacked by those who favor the bill in its entirety. I can not be put in the class of Senators who are opposed to river and harbor improvement. I believe in it; but I had called attention yesterday to the fact that river and harbor appropriation bills were in bad repute with the country because history had shown that they contained so many unworthy projects for development and improvement at the expense of the taxpayers of the country, and that the people had begun to regard the river and harbor bill as a pork-barrel proposition gotten together by logrolling tactics, and that by a combination of a whole lot of inferior propositions, a great many of them unworthy propositions, the votes of the Representatives and the Senators were massed in sufficient quantity to give a majority at all times and put the bill through.

For the sake of good legislation for rivers and harbors, for the sake of the fair development of river and harbors and the improvement of our commerce, that condition ought to be eliminated by putting the river and harbor bill and all the items in it above suspicion. While I think it has been improved, that state of affairs has not been brought about and does not exist now in reference to this lump-sum appropriation. Instead of jumping on a Senator or a Representative who modestly calls attention to some item that he thinks ought to be excluded, we ought to have the assistance of all believers in fair development of the rivers and harbors of our country. We ought to unite all those who believe they ought to be properly developed in order to throw off that suspicion and let the bill be able to stand before the country on its merits and eliminate the suspicion that I think was well grounded and that exists yet. So I am not speaking as an enemy of river and harbor appropriations; I am pleading for what I believe to be legislation that will fairly develop those harbors and those rivers that under existing conditions and the condition of the Treasury can be with good business judgment improved and developed.

Mr. President, in the report to which I have referred there are some other items to which I wish to call attention; and I want to hurry on, because I understand several other Senators perhaps want to debate this proposition, and the debate is limited to 4 o'clock, and I do not want to deprive anybody else of reasonable debate.

I notice here an item where the maintenance charge is $34,500, and the tonnage is 5,165 tons.

Here is another one where the maintenance charge is $2,000, and the entire tonnage the preceding year was 2,900 tons—practically a dollar a ton. The other one that I mentioned is much more than a dollar a ton.

Here is another one where the engineers propose to use $5,000 for maintenance in the coming year, and yet the entire tonnage of that stream during the preceding year was only 2,215 tons; more than $2 a ton.

Mark you, Mr. President, this must be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Unless there is some specific reason out of the ordinary why these things should be done, it seems to me that we are not justified in taxing all the people of the United States a sum that is from $1 to over $2 a ton for all the tonnage that goes down the stream in order that it may be kept open for navigation. As a business proposition no business concern on earth would continue to do such a thing.

[At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives, which appears earlier in the proceedings.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I submit a request for a unanimous-consent agreement, which I would like to have read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Friday, February 9, 1923, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill H. R. 13793, "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment thereto that may then be pending, or any amendment that may thereafter be offered thereto, or on any motion made relative to the bill or amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the proposed agreement may be entered into.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I suppose the Senator agrees that there ought to be a quorum call, in order to have all the Senators present?

Mr. NORRIS. If that is to be done, I hope it will take place later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not necessary under the rule to have a quorum. No hour is fixed for a final vote on the bill in the proposed agreement. It is simply an agreement to limit debate to 10 minutes after 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, I am willing to assent to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have consulted with quite a number of Senators, and I find no disposition to object to the agreement.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator consult with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did.

Mr. KING. And he argeed to it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He agrees to it.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator consult the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART]?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I did not.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator withhold the request until the Senator from Iowa is present?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will withhold it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, another item similar to those I have previously read is an instance where the maintenance charge is $2,000 and the tonnage is 1,800 tons. Another one is where the maintenance charge is $2,000 and the tonnage is 1,050 tons, practically $2 a ton. I could go on and give many other items similar to these, some worse and some not so bad. I wonder if we understand that it is proposed that we shall take, for some little locality, for some local community, for their benefit entirely, enough money from the Treasury of the United States to pay $2 a ton, or 50 cents a ton, for the tonnage which passes through the stream or enters into the harbor?

Can we, under any system of government, justify that? I appeal to those who are behind river and harbor appropriations, where there is some justification for appropriations, can we afford to put before the country the good propositions jeopardized by putting in with them a lot of unworthy propositions? Are we not now, under the present parliamentary situation, up to this point, that if we have any river and harbor improvements at all, we must cut down this lump sum in order to compel those who are to distribute the money to divide it up among the good ones and cut out the poor ones?

There is a reason now why we ought to be more careful than under ordinary conditions, which I mentioned yesterday. It is the condition of the Federal Treasury and the necessity for the levying of heavy taxes in order to make both ends meet, speaking in a governmental sense. We ought to be more careful now than under ordinary circumstances. It is only good business that we should.

Complaint was made when I called attention to the Ohio River, in connection with which the report shows that if we do not appropriate this large sum the engineers will not be able to begin three dams which are necessary before work on that stream can be completed. I would be glad if those improvements could be completed to-morrow. I would be glad if we could carry enough money in the bill to complete them next year or permit them to go as far toward completion as possible, but the question arises, under the financial condition of the country and the people, Can we afford to do it? Would it not be better to postpone the construction of those three dams? There would be no loss to the taxpayers because of their postponement. If we cut down the appropriation so the engineers could not go on with the work on the dams which are partially completed, then good business judgment would dictate that perhaps we ought to strain ourselves in order to keep that work going so that there would not be a loss, but where something has not been begun we ought to take the condition of the country and the Treasury into very serious consideration.

I frankly admit that if we reduce the appropriation it will postpone for another year at least the completion of some of the projects—for instance, the work on the Ohio River—but it would not result in navigation on that river being blocked. Senators yesterday referred to the immense volume of traffic now passing along that river. There will be more when the plan laid out for the entire stream is completed, and I will be glad when that is completed. But we can not do it all at once. It has been the argument of Senators—and in one sense it is a good argument—that the quicker we can complete these works the better; and if we had unlimited funds we ought to go on with them.

There is another reason why there should be a postponement. In all probability this work can be done cheaper in a few years than it can be done now. That is another consideration for the taxpayer. Unless we have it started and in such a condition that it would be injurious not to continue the work, where we would be apt to lose some if not all the money already expended on an improvement, then, it seems to me, we ought to hesitate.

We have gone way beyond the estimates. In this bill we have practically doubled the estimates made under the Budget law. Yesterday a question was raised about an item for an improvement down at Galveston, Tex., and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] was laboring under the impression that if we did not give the entire amount they could not do anything with that. He thought it was a new project. As a matter of fact, the testimony of General Taylor shows that if we cut the appropriation down to what the Budget estimated that work will be completed.

Mr. SPENCER. Is the Senator referring to Galveston?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator that neither Galveston, or Coos Bay, or the improvement at Milwaukee, to which I particularly referred, can be touched if the appropriation is cut down to the Budget figure, except by the elimination of projects which have already been begun and whose maintenance is essential. It may be that Galveston will be of such tremendous importance—the extension of the improvement there is included among the 35 new projects adopted by Congress in 1921—that the engineers may include the improvement at Galveston out of any fund they get, because of its importance; but if they do, it can only be at the expense of cutting out some established project, because the $27,000,000 is only enough for the existing harbors.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that is true, and that we can not cut down the amount proposed to be appropriated without cutting out some of these projects. If we cut down the amount, something will have to be dropped out. Is it not fair to presume that the most unworthy projects will be dropped out if we put it up to those who have charge of the matter, our engineers, our scientific men, and say they can have only so much money, and that they will have to curtail some of these things? Is it not fair to presume that they will cut out the most unworthy ones and will use whatever amount may be given in carrying on those which are most worthy? It is true that we can not cut the amount down without cutting out some of the improvements.

Something was said yesterday and the day before about the effect of these improvements upon railways. I think there is a great deal in that. During the war we built some very fine barges as a war proposition, because of the congestion of freight traffic on the railroads. I do not know how many there were, but we built quite a large number to be used on the Mississippi River. When the war was over some of them were put on other streams. We built barges without any engines in them, barges which had to be towed by other boats. We also built quite large river steamers which carried their own power. We paid the war cost for them. We built them at the peak of prices, but we built good ships. As far as I know, no man has ever denied that they were up to date in every respect. We got the best there was to be built. Now, when the war is over, when we could duplicate those barges and those ships for 50 cents on the dollar compared with what they cost during the war, if a business man were operating them he would charge off half of the cost, or whatever amount of it might be necessary to bring them down to present prices, and he would compute his overhead charges on that basis. It seems that the Government has not done that. These barges and these ships are being operated. As a whole, they have made a profit. Even with their fictitious value, they have been doing a great work. They are operated by the Government. Contrary to the statements of those who are always opposed, honestly and conscientiously, to the Government operating anything, Government operation in this case has been a success. It has been the means in a great many instances of cutting down the freight charges where they compete with the private owners. I understand that one tug can start at St. Louis with six or eight barges and take several trainloads of freight at once down to New Orleans.

They are equipped for unloading from the train onto the barges. One of the handicaps now existing is that even with the barges built during the war we do not have enough to take care of that traffic, to meet the railroads which center at St. Louis and bring in from all over the West and Middle West various kinds of agricultural products. I am glad to say we are utilizing the barges and ships for that purpose. I would like to extend operations and business of that kind. I would like to have it go further and on other rivers. If it is successful there and cuts down freight rates and thus reduces the cost of living to the consumer, on the one hand, and gives additional profits to the producer, on the other hand, it is a good thing, because we all know that our freight rates are too high. Our civilization can not live under them and prosper; we can not stand it.

I think I mentioned a few days ago, while the debate was progressing, that several of the boats built by the Government are on the Warrior River in Alabama. They go down the Warrior River and carry freight clear to New Orleans. When they were put on that river the freight rates on various kinds of commodities within 50 or 60 or 100 miles of the river to New Orleans and adjacent points were cut down, automatically put down to begin with, and those barges have not had a square deal with the railroads. I have heard Senators here discussing who was to blame for it. If they had had a square division of profit, even with that fictitious capitalization, the boats would have made money for the Government. Taken as a whole, they made money anyway, but in many instances they have lost money. They have been capitalized at double what they should have been capitalized for. Where they had to divide the freight rate on any article between the railroads and themselves they have gotten practically nothing and the railroads nearly all of it, although in most instances the haul made by the boat was three or four times longer than the haul made by the railroads.

Now, Mr. President, one reason why there is objection to river and harbor legislation—one reason in addition to the one I mentioned a while ago that gave to this kind of legislation the reputation of being a logrolling or pork-barrel institution—is that the railroads have put water transportation out of business. The taxpayers put up the money and dig out the stream and make it navigable. The railroads put down the rates in competition with the boats which are put on the stream until they get the boats out of business, and then the rates go up. I believe, therefore, that we will not be able to get results for the money that we spend in the development of our rivers and harbors until some action in that direction is taken. It may be that the Interstate Commerce Commission have authority to take it, but whether they have or whether they have not, they have not taken any action.

I believe we will not get results until Congress takes some action in regard to the differential in rates between the river boats and the railroads. We ought to provide some law, even an arbitrary one, if we can not get the Interstate Commerce Commission to act, by which the practice of putting the transportation business off the rivers would be prohibited. We can not fairly ask the taxpayers of the United States to develop the Mississippi River, for instance, or ask the Government or business men to build boats to ply up and down that stream, if it is known that whenever they go on there they are going to meet unfair competition and are going to be put out of business, and then the people will have to pay all the expense back to those who put them out of business.

There must be some plan of fair division of rates where there is a division. There should be some law that would prohibit rail transportation companies from lowering a rate below a compensatory basis in order to put the water carriers out of business. Otherwise what is the use of spending the people's money to make the improvements in the streams? We might develop every harbor, every stream, every river in the United States, but unless we right that condition we would not get the worth of the taxpayers' money that would be expended.

I want to be regarded by the friends even of this appropriation proposition as one who is willing to go even to the extent often of experiment in order that we may bring about a reduction of freight rates. Even though I had doubts, if we were in normal condition I would be in favor of expending money to see whether by its expenditure we could not reduce the cost of transportation. That must be done, and personally I believe it can be done.

Mr. President, there are several other Senators who want to talk on the pending proposition. I am loath to use any more time because of the limitation on debate. I think, although there are several other things to which I should like to call attention, that in order to be fair to my colleagues I had better close at this point. I therefore yield the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I renew the request for a unanimous-consent agreement, which I submitted a short while ago. I may say that I think I have now discussed the matter with all the Senators who are interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from New York will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New York asks for the following unanimous-consent agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Friday, February 9, 1923, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill H. R. 13793, "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes"; nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment thereto that may then be pending, or any amendment that may thereafter be offered thereto, or on any motion made relative to the bill or amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to entering into the unanimous-consent agreement as read?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make no objection to the request for unanimous consent; I think it is quite reasonable; but I desire to inquire whether it is the purpose that at the close of its business to-day the Senate shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow? I think we ought to do that if we enter into the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So far as I may do so, I am willing to agree that the Senate shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow if we may get this unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FLETCHER. With that understanding, I have no objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McKELLAR. There will be no trouble about the Senate recessing until 12 o'clock to-morrow, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement submitted by the Senator? The Chair hears none, and it is entered into.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who have so bitterly assailed the item in the pending bill relative to river and harbor improvements, should have been called out of the Senate as soon as they had concluded their remarks. I wish briefly to discuss statements made by those Senators.

The Senator from Nebraska was very much concerned because, as he stated, the rivers and harbors bill was falling into disrepute, and he appealed to friends of river and harbor improvement to take some action to restore such improvements in the confidence of the people. I wish to say, Mr. President, that if legislation for the improvement of rivers and harbors is falling into disrepute, it is because of statements assailing the advisability, the propriety, and even the honesty of making such appropriations, which are made by Senators who live in sections of the country where there are no rivers to be improved and where there are no harbors. They assail river and harbor improvements each year and then imagine, because the newspapers published in their localities reflect their opinions, that the improvement of rivers and harbors as a governmental policy has fallen into disfavor.

I do not question the patriotism and the desire to be of service to the whole country of the two Senators, but what is remarkable to me is that every improvement that is to be made in their particular sections of the country, including the reclamation of the desert, the building of roads through national parks, the setting aside of great areas to be maintained at public expense as national playgrounds, is always a justifiable and a wise expenditure of public money.

The Senator from Arizona yesterday waxed fervid in his criticism of the river and harbor item of this bill and those who support it. He said:

This river and harbor provision of this bill was prepared to pass. This Congress is officially in extremis and it can do no more fitting thing as a capstone to its discreditable record than to reach its hands into the Treasury and squander $28,964,150 of the money of already heavily burdened taxpayers. One discreditable feature of this item is that this unnecessary expenditure is included in the military appropriation bill.

The President of the United States, I believe, would veto this item if he could separate this excess above the Budget recommendations and approve as to the amount actually needed. The Budget officials know how much money is necessary, and they have estimated for that amount, to wit, $27,625,170.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is wasting his time in opposing this measure. This bill is loaded to pass. The "skids are greased" so that this item will easily slide through. Not 20 votes can be mustered against it under any circumstances. I desire to vote for the Army appropriation bill, but I fear that to do so I must vote for an excess expenditure of nearly $29,000,000. The Budget cracks and collapses when the pork barrel rolls over it.

Passing over, Mr. President, the inference, which really amounts to more than an inference, that all those who expect to vote for this appropriation are "pork-barrel" statesmen; that they are actuated by motives that would not bear investigation; that they are looters of the Public Treasury; that it is an unpatriotic thing to do—I say passing all that, I wish to call attention to the fact that no one on this floor has been more insistent than has the Senator from Arizona in getting appropriations for his own particular section of the country. There great reclamation projects have been built, when it has cost so much to reclaim the lands that the people who went upon them have never yet paid a penny they contracted to pay for the land; they have not paid for the water they have used; they have not even paid the interest. Ever since I have been in Congress for 10 years we have passed bills to extend the time when they should comply with the various provisions of their contract.

We have during the present Congress at different times voted appropriations to give seed wheat to these people. It was called a loan, but we made such a loan to them year before last and last year the crop was worse each year than it was last. So we wiped that off and extended them another loan, which all of us know is not a loan but a gift. That money comes out of all the people of these United States; and yet the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Nebraska have no complaint against that policy, but I will not say because the money is to be expended in the particular sections of the country which they represent. That is honest statesmanship, but it would be "pork barrel" if any other section of the country gets a penny.

I know how the Senator from Arizona stood here day in and day out and accused other Senators of lacking vision because they would not give him a duty of 35 cents a pound on cotton that grew in Arizona and in a little valley in California whenever a dollar given to the producers of that cotton in Arizona and California had to come out of the pockets of the poor people of this country who wear cotton clothes. But that was wise, because it would be spent in Arizona; it was something that ought to be done.

I regret that the Senator from Arizona is not here. I called his attention to the fact that I wanted to discuss his speech. Of course, he has a right to go away; I presume it will not interest him; but I do not want anyone to imagine that I am criticizing his attitude in his absence without his knowledge. It would seem that Budget recommendations have nothing to do with legislation that is to bring money to that particular section of the country but are sacred things if they are to prevent the expenditure of public moneys in some other section.

The Senator from Arizona in effect said, "I want to vote for the Army bill; I want to spend $250,000,000 to build a machine to destroy life; but I am against spending $29,000,000 as an absolute waste of public funds if it will help to increase the wealth of the people of this country by spending it upon river and harbor improvements."

That is good local statesmanship, Mr. President; but if that policy were to be pursued, we people who tried to go out of the Union in 1861 were respecters of the Union as compared with those who want to nullify the Government's activities except where those activities shall be used for their particular locality and their benefit. We never did go that far. There were at least 11 States of us who agreed to stand together, but this attitude would mean that each State shall fight every other State for every dollar of the public funds and for every activity of the Government.

I have been tolerant of the opinions of people who do not agree with me. I have voted for appropriations when I realized that I did not know the wisdom of them, but I was willing to take the word of Senators who were more familiar with the matter. I have voted to extend the interest payments on all the reclamation projects. I have voted for these projects whenever they have been presented to me. I voted for every one of the measures to give free seeds to the people in the West. I voted for $20,000,000 to buy corn to ship to Russia, and yet I knew that largely it was to relieve the necessities of the corn growers of the North and West. I did not object to it. I hope to God I shall be able always to remember that there are 48 States in these United States, and that each one of them has as much right as the particular section that I represent. I hope I never shall forget that it is no part of the duty of a Senator to fight everybody else for every dollar there is in the Public Treasury, that it may be spent in his own particular locality.

However, I am willing to say that if that is to be the policy, if the Senators who represent these arid areas are to demand everything for their section and fight everybody from every other section, if that is to be the policy of the Senate, it is as well that the rest of the country shall know it. Nobody said, when these matters were up for the arid sections, that they were grabbers or pork-barrel people. Nobody accused them of "greasing the skids" that they might get a measure favored by them through the Senate, or get something to which they were not entitled. I never have heard that charge made in either branch since I have been a Member of Congress. It is left for the Senators from that section to talk about the pork barrel when it comes to river and harbor measures.

It would be so much better if we could have just a little vision—if the two Senators from Utah, who fight this measure so viciously, had the vision of the founders of Utah and could look a little into the future. All of us know that when unfortunately a mob killed the leader of the Mormon church in Illinois, and these people started west, and went west and west and west to beyond the mountains, there was not anything there then. There was no traffic there. There was no commerce there; there were no farms there; but they had vision, and they founded a great State, and increased the national wealth of the entire United States, and builded a wonderful civilization.

There was not any commerce when the Pilgrim fathers, beaten by the storms, were tossed upon Plymouth Rock one winter day in 1620. There was not any commerce on the James River when the people came there in 1607 and made the beginning of European civilization in America; but the people had vision, and they looked forward to a future.

When Thomas Jefferson for $15,000,000 bought all the Louisiana Purchase from France people opposed it, and Senators in this body opposed it. They said it was worthless; and yet if Thomas Jefferson had not had vision, and had not expended that money, all of the States that are now the homes of these people who now fight the rivers and harbors appropriation would not have been. That part of the country would have remained a desert, inhabited by coyotes and Indians and buffaloes, as it then was.

If there had not been vision, we would not have bought Alaska. The administration was ridiculed for buying that frozen strip, and yet in one year it paid back five times as much as it cost the Government. It took some vision when the Thirteen Colonies stretching along the Atlantic coast were willing to reach out and develop a wilderness. The State of Virginia, for instance, gave up an empire to which she had as good a title as had she to any foot of land that now is within that great Commonwealth. She gave it up for the public good; and yet, if her Senators stand here on the floor and ask for an appropriation to take care of her rivers and harbors they are denounced as "pork-barrel" statesmen by these people who profited and never paid.

There ought to be some limit to such extravagant statements. I am in favor of river and harbor improvements; and yet, when we try to take care of our situation, the Congress, wise or otherwise, said: "For every two dollars the Government shall put up, you must put up one"; and we went into our pockets and taxed ourselves when our country was a swamp, and we are paying taxes to-day, and our children's children after us will keep paying taxes, to meet our part of it.

I am not complaining about it. I do not think it was the same attitude that had been adopted toward other sections, but we took whatever the Congress gave us. We did not denounce it. We do not denounce it now. We do not say that people who got better treatment were pork-barrel beneficiaries, or that they "greased the skids" in order that legislation might pass. I have never thought it. I have been willing to concede that Senators vote for a measure or against a measure because, in their judgment, it is wise. I can say that I have not discussed with a single Senator in this body whether "if we will support this proposition, you will support that." It never has been discussed, so far as I know, by anybody who is in favor of this appropriation.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has picked out some particular projects—talked with great fervor about the waste of money. I should like to call his attention to the fact that the so-called minor rivers receive in this appropriation $181,820, and no more, for improvement; and yet these streams that he denounced carried upon their half-improved bosoms last year a total freight of 4,798,709 tons. If freight were moved at a dollar a ton cheaper by water than by rail, there would be practically $5,000,000 paid back to the people of this country for an expenditure of $181,820, but the record that I produced yesterday, which came from the Interstate Commerce Commission, shows that the saving to the people where they may have water rates and for that section of the country where river improvement has made water transportation possible is twice as much as a dollar a ton, or, in other words, the country is richer by $10,000,000 for the expenditure of $181,820; and yet, because people advocated the expenditure of this money to save this tremendous burden, they are called "pork-barrel statesmen," and it is said that the "skids have been greased" to pass this "iniquitous measure."

Oh, Mr. President, it is so easy to fall out with people and denounce them without analyzing the motives that actuated them. I say that the great cry of this country is for transportation—reasonable transportation—transportation that will let the city live as well as the farmer live, because whoever imagines that because we cheapen the production of farm products or cheapen the transportation of them to the markets all that benefit inures to the farmer has not studied economics. People in the country produce. If they ever are to have the cost of production, we must take into consideration the cost of transporting their production to market. The people in the city must live, and they can not live unless they buy those things that the farmer produces. Therefore, if there is a single appropriation that reaches every man, woman, and child that breathes it is something that cheapens the cost of living, because all must eat and all must wear, and every bite of food they eat and every yard of cloth they wear must be produced in the country. It is not produced on Broadway, nor is it produced on the old historic Commons in Boston. It is produced on somebody's farm; and now, with some chance to develop waterway transportation so that we may demonstrate that the rivers can be used, we are called "pork-barrel statesmen."

Mr. President, here is the truth: Knowing how much cheaper river transportation could be than rail transportation, when we provided for the operation of the Government barges we wrote into the law that they should not reduce their freights more than 20 per cent below those that the commission might approve for rail-competing transportation. If it were not for that, Mr. President, we could to-day haul the freight on the rivers of this country for 50 per cent of the rail charges.

In order to keep the barge lines from cutting below that, we wrote into the law that they must charge 80 per cent of the rail rates. The lower Mississippi last year carried 10,000,000 tons of freight. It could have carried much more if some little stretches in the river were improved. From Cairo to St. Louis there are times in the year when the channel can not be used, not because there is not plenty of water, but because it is scattered over such a wide channel. With a very nominal improvement it would be possible to reach the Gulf with practically half the wheat and corn that is grown in the great upper Valley of the Mississippi River between the Rockies and the Allegheny Mountains at an enormous saving; and yet, because that is suggested, somebody from an arid State says we have "greased the skids," and how happy they would be to vote against the measure if it were just put out on its merits; and what is funny, Mr. President, is that both of these gentlemen who so denounce that matter were for the rule under which we tied our hands. I voted against it. I wanted to get a chance to present the matters on their merits, but other Senators who did not agree with us tied their hands and ours, and now complain as if we were responsible for a condition for which they themselves solely are to blame.

I heard the rather remarkable statement made here yesterday that it might be profitable to transport freight by river short distances but not long distances. Everybody knows that the advantage comes more when the distance is great. Loading a barge with coal or iron or structural steel at Pittsburgh and sending it to New Orleans, over 3,000 miles as the rivers run, it can be carried for practically nothing. It can be carried 3,000 miles almost as cheaply as it can be carried 300, because the cost is in the loading and unloading.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I take this occasion to add that freight can not only be carried more cheaply from Pittsburgh to New Orleans by water, but it can be carried with greater celerity. A steamboat plying that river makes comparatively few stops, and will make 15 miles an hour. It will run 24 hours in the day, with the exception of the time it stops at a few stations to unload. A freight train travels less than 30 miles a day.

If a contractor in New Orleans is putting up a steel building, and has a steamboat loaded with structural and standardized shapes, and has need, before his boat gets there, of these articles, he knows exactly where his steamboat is; he knows just where it will land, and he can go to dealers and without hesitation take their entire supply of that same commodity, with the understanding that he will replace it, where they do not want to sell out their stocks entirely.

There is no reason in the world why semifinished products and heavy freight should be transported by rail instead of by water, except under such conditions as we find on the Ohio and the Mississippi Rivers, especially the Ohio, where you can not always count on river transportation because the stream is not canalized. In addition to that, wherever merchants doing a heavy freight business patronize the river, they are discriminated against by the railroads. There has been a system of blackmail exercised by the carriers against the users of river transportation which ought to be investigated in this country; and I am not railing against the railroads, either.

Mr. CARAWAY. Another thing, Mr. President. We know the difficulty of moving freight at all by rail. If the higher class freights only were moved by rail, it could bear the higher commodity prices, but when the tremendous rates which are now in force are applied to all classes of freight, industry all over this country is paralyzed.

As an illustration of the difference between water transportation and rail transportation, I had occasion at one time to buy screen doors and windows in Maine. They came to Savannah by sea and then crossed from Savannah to Memphis, Tenn. I live 60 miles from Memphis, and my freight bill for the last 60 miles was more than the bill for the first 4,000 miles because of the difference between the rail rates and the water rates.

It does not avail much, however, to argue about these matters. If the rule is to be laid down in the Senate that if the improvement to be made is not in my immediate vicinity it is a waste of public revenue, it is not worth while to argue about this matter, because then the question becomes one of geography only, and all one has to do is take down his map and see how far he is from a river. According to that theory a Senator is guilty of an offense if he votes for such appropriation if the improvement is beyond a certain milepost. The appropriation is always wise or otherwise as it may be near or remote. I say that if that rule is to be adopted arguments might as well cease. It is but a question of geography, depending on whether more people live remote from the improvement than near it. It is not a question of general benefit. I hope, however, that rule is not to prevail.

There is now a motion pending to reduce the appropriation to what it was last year. Some Senators have the impression that this $13,000,000, if added, is to be distributed among the projects which were taken care of with the $43,000,000 appropriation last year. That is not true. The new appropriations are for new projects which the Senate authorized last September. That appropriation was to take care of projects contained in a bill which was approved the 7th day of last September. Therefore, if we cut off that $13,000,000, we will cut it off from projects to take care of which we appropriated $43,000,000 last year. Many of them are projects which are already carrying tremendous freight tonnages, one of them to cost $600,000, for the improvement of a ship channel, which last year lacked just a few tons of carrying 9,000,000 tons of freight. It is desired that that be cut off. Senators want to cut off all those projects which do not show tremendous freight-carrying capacity and use. If the policy of never providing means to transport freight until freight was being hauled over the route had been pursued, the pioneers would never have built a railroad. They builded railroads into the trackless desert, into the wildernesses, and civilization and commerce followed them. It seems to me to be so unreasonable to say that we will never make provision for carrying freight until freight is being carried. The other rule should prevail; first improve the freight-carrying arteries and then expect commerce to follow the improved highway, and not that it shall precede the improvement.

THE FERTILIZER PROBLEM AND THE FARMER.

MUSCLE SHOALS AND NITROGEN FIXATION.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, since the question of an appropriation for the future development of Muscle Shoals, for the construction of a dam, and for other purposes is involved in the present Army appropriation bill, I feel that the present is an opportune time to discuss some phases of this highly important subject, which is attracting not only the attention of the American people but has come to be a matter of concern before the legislatures of several sovereign States, and must in all fairness be disposed of in the near future.

Failure to have permanently settled this perplexing political question, which should have been only the economic question of national protection and in time of peace an adequate supply of fertilizers for the farmers of America, has been an unfortunate affair. The delay is depriving agriculture of an essential supply at reasonable prices of the nitrogen fertilizer that is so necessary to economical food production and for soil enrichment and is costing the people untold amounts.

Can we afford to continue the present "watchful-waiting" policy or should we act in accordance with some definite national policy which may have been developed during the past five years in study and research in this great and important field for our national defense and for the purpose of insuring cheap fertilizers to our farmers in times of peace? Thus far only one definite, practical policy has been worked out, and of this I expect to speak more fully at a later time.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has indicated his intention to propose an amendment to the Army appropriation bill which would call for appropriating $2,000,000 to carry out certain experimental operations at nitrate plant No. 1, at Muscle Shoals, Ala. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator's evident desire to see the nitrate problem solved, but, Mr. President, my studies of this subject convince me that this is not a move in the right direction.

It is not my purpose in addressing the Senate to make a speech, Mr. President, but merely as a chemist to make a plain statement of the facts in the case, for the facts are a matter of record and anyone interested can confirm them for himself.

SIGNIFICANT ATTITUDE OF AMERICAN CAPITAL.

Before discussing the technical questions involved I would like to point out this undeniable fact: The supremacy of the American people in business matters has been established beyond question. American capital and American enterprise is constantly seeking opportunity. If the development of Muscle Shoals constitutes a great opportunity to secure financial rewards running into the hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars, as has been represented by the opposition, it is inconceivable to me that these great financial interests, amply supplied with capital, able to buy the best brains which the most advanced country on earth has produced, should decline to come forward with a proposal for this enterprise.

EFFORTS OF DOCTOR GLASGOW.

The Senate will recall that the former nitrate director, Dr. A. G. Glasgow, earnestly sought to interest private capital in the operation of the nitrate plants, offering them the plants rent free until they should earn 9 per cent on whatever investment was necessary for their operation, and thereafter dividing additional profits evenly with the Government.

His associate, Mr. G. J. Roberts, described Mr. Glasgow's efforts before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (hearings on S. 3390, pp. 84–85, on March 22, 1920) in the following language:

> The question naturally arises, Why does not private industry undertake the operation of these plants? I shall not attempt to give what is in the minds of those who are most interested in the production of nitrates in this country. All I can state is that months of time were expended attempting to get the fertilizer industry interested in taking over and operating the Government plants. The presidents of all the large fertilizer companies in the United States were seen and the matter fully discussed with them, and they were asked if they would undertake the operation of these plants if they were to pay no rental to the Government until they had received 9 per cent on their working capital, and after that the profit should be divided between them and the Government. A part of the agreement was that the United States would complete the plants so as to provide storage and bagging facilities, a sulphate of ammonia plant, and all the work outlined in Mr. Glasgow's letter of October 22. But they could not be brought to the point of making a formal offer. An effort was also made to get certain financiers in New York to undertake to form a company to operate these plants. Scant consideration was given to the scheme and no investigation undertaken. An appeal was likewise made to the coke-oven interest, with the same result. There seems to be a decided antipathy of capital to engage in any partnership arrangement with the Government.

The very fact that no proposals have been forthcoming is in itself conclusive evidence to my mind as to what American business thinks about these plants. They very well know that Muscle Shoals is not an opportunity to collect great profits with an insignificant investment, but it is an opportunity to invest great sums of money in a partially developed art, promising enough, perhaps, in its future possibilities, but requiring the investment of millions upon millions of dollars, with no assurance whatever that this investment will earn any return of interest or principal.

It is true that these properties cost $87,000,000, built, as they were, in a time of war, when the United States was getting perhaps 30 cents' worth of labor and material for every dollar it invested. It is only to be expected that the total cost of these great plants was an amazing sum of money; but the mere fact that this is true does not argue that these plants have any such value at the present time or that Mr. Ford under the circumstances should have offered more for them than he did.

NITROGEN FIXATION A RAPIDLY DEVELOPING ART.

Mr. President, the fixation of nitrogen is in its merest infancy. It is an art which in commercial form has sprung up within the last 15 years, and no one can study the progress of commercial chemistry without being impressed with the fact that the first years of any industrial process are years of change and of rapid obsolescence on the part of any existing scheme of operation.

HISTORY OF NITRATE PLANT NO. 1.

Nitrate plant No. 1 was not modeled after any commercial plant; there was no commercial plant in operation which was available to the War Department as a guide in designing this plant. The facts are that on March 9, 1917, the Secretary of War appointed the so-called nitrate supply committee, and this committee adopted the recommendations of Dr. Charles L. Parsons, who at that time was chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines. Doctor Parsons submitted a report on April 30, 1917, in which he called attention to a process developed by the General Chemical Co. to produce ammonia by direct combination of nitrogen and hydrogen at somewhat lower pressures than those which previously had been considered necessary under the patents of this process which had been granted to a Dr. Fritz Haber in Germany.

The General Chemical Co. did not have all the secrets of the German Haber process, but they had been carrying on some experiments on something more than a laboratory scale, and Doctor Parsons, after visiting their experimental plant and studying their plans for a modification of this German Haber process which the company was expecting to build at Shadyside, N. Y., advocated very strongly the acceptance of a tentative proposal which, it appears, the General Chemical Co. had made on their own account, granting to the Government of the United States the use of its process and designs or apparatus for the manufacture of ammonia by this method, and asking a royalty of $5 per ton of fixed nitrogen if the process should be used for the manufacture of fertilizer products.

NITRATE DIVISION HAD LITTLE TIME TO INVESTIGATE PROCESS.

The nitrate supply committee seems to have accepted fully Doctor Parsons' recommendations, and in turn recommended them to the President. Thereupon, on July 21, 1917, a separate division of the Ordnance Department, known as the Nitrate Division, was formed. This division, which was created to have charge of nitrogen fixation problems, had as its first duty the execution of the recommendations of the nitrate supply committee. By way of explanation, the official report of the Nitrate Division states that—> plans for the location and construction of the synthetic ammonia plant naturally absorbed the energies of the new division for the first few weeks and left little time for investigating the process. This, however, had already been favorably reported upon by the nitrate supply committee, and orders for the construction of the plant were mandatory, so that every effort was bent toward carrying out the program, with the assumption that expectations with regard to the processes would be fulfilled.

A THIRTEEN-MILLION-DOLLAR ASSUMPTION.

It is therefore evident that nitrate plant No. 1, costing more than $13,000,000, was built upon an assumption. Instead of waiting until the process had been demonstrated upon a commercial scale in a pilot plant of some kind, the Nitrate Division proceeded to build a plant with an estimated capacity of 22,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum, and constructed the special equipment, housed in special buildings in an entirely permanent way, as though they were dealing with a well-established and unquestioned matter of industrial chemistry, the performance of which was a matter of mere routine. They laid out and constructed this permanent plant, with permanent houses for employees, all based on the assumption that the process would work.

THE FIXATION PROCESS WAS NOT A SUCCESS.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the process did not work. Testifying before the House Committee on Military Affairs, Maj. J. H. Burns, former chief of the Nitrate Division, stated on February 13, 1922:

> The plant was not only to fix nitrogen and form ammonia but also to change the fixed nitrogen or ammonia into nitric acid, and finally to form ammonium nitrate or the explosive. * * * The fixation process, however, was not a success. (Hearings, p. 208.)

And on May 19, 1922, Major Burns testified before the Senate Committee on Agriculture:

> If you put in the Haber electrolytic process at No. 1, you would have to scrap everything you have at No. 1. Nothing there would be of any great value. I imagine putting in a 30-ton unit would cost in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. (Hearings, p. 694.)

The efficient report of the Nitrate Division on the Fixation and Utilization of Atmospheric Nitrogen explains (p. 202) that the Sheffield plant was not a success, and that this was partly due to insufficient technical information in connection with the various physical-chemical steps which go to make up the process. The report describes the difficulties which were experienced (p. 272); changes were found necessary at every stage of the attempted operations.

"FIXING" ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN TO FORM AMMONIA.

Ammonia, it should be understood, is formed by the welding together of hydrogen and nitrogen in gaseous form. Under this process this is accomplished at very high pressure, about 1,450 pounds per square inch, or about seven times the pressure of an ordinary steam boiler, and a very high temperature. Moreover, the gases must be very pure. Pure nitrogen is not a difficult thing to secure, as this can be had by liquefying air by well-known processes and distilling off the nitrogen from the liquid product.

To secure hydrogen two general methods have been employed. One is to secure it by passing steam over incandescent coke. This forms what is known as water gas, which contains a large proportion of hydrogen. This water gas is then brought in contact with steam in the presence of what is known as a catalyst. A catalyst is a peculiar substance which although it does not enter into a chemical reaction will cause that reaction to take place merely by its presence.

When this water gas and steam are brought together in the presence of this catalyst, which in this case is iron oxide containing cerium oxide and chromium oxide, the steam is broken down and free hydrogen is released. After the removal of the excess steam a resulting product has been obtained running as high as 98 per cent pure hydrogen.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PURE HYDROGEN.

Another curious feature, however, is the fact that certain impurities which are present in water gas have a poisoning or destructive effect upon the action of the catalyst, so that it is necessary to remove these impurities as completely as possible.

The net result is that in the Haber-Bosche process, which was the process employed at Sheffield and in which the hydrogen was secured from water gas, about 20 per cent of the total cost of the process is for the production of the water gas and about 50 per cent of the cost is for the purification of this gas, so that about 70 per cent of the cost of the ammonia represents nothing but the cost of securing pure hydrogen (p. 246).

It is very evident, then, that the Haber process is an economical process if a supply of by-product hydrogen at low cost or at no cost at all is available, and the information which I get from most excellent authority is that the reason the German plants using this process have been able to supply cheap fertilizers to the farmer is that they have been operated in connection with a supply of hydrogen obtained in large quantities as a by-product in the manufacture of caustic soda. This has also been pointed out as a reason for the establishment of the modified Haber process on a small scale at the soda plant of the Solvay Process Co., at Syracuse, N. Y.

Needless to say, there are no caustic-soda plants at Muscle Shoals and no supply of by-product hydrogen. There is, however, another plan that might be utilized for producing pure hydrogen. This has never been worked out on the large scale that would be required at Muscle Shoals, but in view of the investigations that have been made it seems probable that this method might be used successfully.

ELECTROLYTIC HYDROGEN.

This is simply the decomposition of pure water by electrolysis in an electrolytic cell and utilizing secondary or off-peak electrical power for the purpose. The hydrogen obtained by such a method would be very pure and there would be produced at the same time an enormous supply of by-product oxygen, which is of great value in securing high temperatures for metallurgical purposes, for destroying bacteria, for medicinal purposes, and for use in the oxyacetylene torch or blowpipe for cutting steel.

There is also a possibility of producing cheaply such a product as sodium peroxide, which would serve as a convenient means of distributing oxygen gas without the use of the heavy steel cylinders in which the liquified gas is now shipped under heavy pressure.

Commenting on these possibilities, Prof. Hugh S. Taylor, of Princeton University, in a recent article in Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering, points out that the production of nitrogen and hydrogen for synthetic ammonia represents at least 75 per cent of the cost of its production, and he predicts the use of electrolytic hydrogen where very cheap power—that is, power which could be sold as low as 1 mill per kilowatt hour, and probably not to exceed 2½ mills per kilowatt hour—is available. In closing his paper, Professor Taylor states:

> Initiation of electrolytic manufacture of hydrogen for ammonia synthesis will constitute a bold experiment. If successful, it will lead to industrial development far outside the range of ammonia synthesis alone, by reason of the simultaneous oxygen production, uses for which would inevitably be sought. (Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering, December 27, 1922.)

DEVELOPMENT OF NITROGEN FIXATION A "BOLD EXPERIMENT."

Mr. President, I want to say that I agree with Professor Taylor; the development of synthetic ammonia and the fixation of nitrogen at Muscle Shoals does constitute a bold experiment; and when we have an offer from a responsible party, who agrees to enter this field of costly experimentation and produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually at his own expense, taking all of these risks in this partially developed technical operation, I say we should let him do it.

There is another feature of this Haber process at nitrate plant No. 1, which this Senate will do well to keep in mind. I have no desire to take the position of an alarmist or to magnify dangers that in reality are insignificant, but you will notice that in Mr. Ford's offer he has not agreed to use the Haber-Bosche process nor the Haber electrolytic process nor the cyanamide process nor any other particular process for the production of this large tonnage of nitrogen—nitrogen enough to supply this element in 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 commercial fertilizer—and while I can not claim to be familiar in detail with Mr. Ford's plans, I do not believe that he contemplates using the Haber process. One reason for this, I feel sure, is to be found in the history of the development of this process itself.

HISTORY OF EXPLOSIONS IN THE HABER PLANTS.

The world has not forgotten the terrific explosion that occurred about 7.30 on the morning of September 22, 1921, at the Haber process plant of the Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik at Oppau, in Germany. It has been claimed that this explosion was due to the blasting of a stored supply of a new nitrate fertilizer compound which was not believed to be explosive. The account of the explosion from the Philadelphia Ledger of September 22, 1921, is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Ledger, September 22, 1921.]

MORE THAN 1,000 KILLED IN EXPLOSION ON RHINE; SUSPECT BOLSHEVISTS—GREAT CHEMICAL PLANT NEAR LUDWIGSHAFEN AND TOWN OF OPPAU DESTROYED—TELEPHONE WIRES CUT AT TIME OF CATASTROPHE—PEASANTS IN FIELDS KILLED.

(Special cable dispatch. Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Co.)

BERLIN, September 21.—More than 1,000 lives were lost and property valued at 2,000,000,000 marks was destroyed in a few minutes this morning, when the famous Oppau ammonia works of the Badische Anilin-Fabrik Co., near Ludwigshafen, were wrecked by an explosion.

It is the worst catastrophe of the kind that has ever occurred in Germany, and there are well-founded suspicions that the Bolshevists are responsible.

As far south as Heidelberg and farther north than Frankfort on the Main and up and down the broad Rhine Valley the tremendous shock following the explosion made people think an earthquake was taking place, and they ran from their houses, which showered glass splinters from broken windows upon them.

The scene of the disaster itself was one impenetrable mass of black smoke, which rested immovable from 7.30 o'clock in the morning until late this afternoon upon the ruins and extended on all sides, crawling even across the Rhine and south to the sister works about a mile distant. The Badische anilin factory at Ludwigshafen itself, the greatest of its kind in the world, though it was not the scene of any explosion, suffered greatly from the shock.

POISON VAPOR HALTS RESCUERS.

The first explosion at Oppau, according to an engineer employed at the factory, was that of a gas compressor, and a few seconds later it was followed by another and even stronger one, and for a short time there was ceaseless thunder caused from many explosions following in quick succession among the masses of ammonia in progress of manufacture, causing thick clouds of poisonous vapor, which stuck close to the ruins and would not permit the rapidly arriving firemen and ambulances to approach near enough, though they could hear the stifled cries of choking victims.

Not only the Oppau factory but also the village of Oppau was completely destroyed by the blast. Many children, not having risen so early, were killed or more or less wounded in their beds. In Mannheim, Ludwigshafen, Frankenthal, and all of this thickly populated industrial district much damage was done, and many people miles away were hurt by flying débris.

Here, too, at first the people believed there had been an earthquake, and the streets were crowded with half-clothed persons, some carrying satchels, boxes, even loose garments and other articles in their hands and rushing toward the open country. And still the explosions continued and the vapor from across the Rhine crawled nearer and nearer.

HUNDREDS OF DEAD BODIES.

Meanwhile some of the laborers at the Oppau works, almost stifled by the poisonous gases, had managed to escape the vaporous net and told confused stories of hundreds of dead bodies counted in their flight.

Firemen from Mannheim, having secured gas masks, now made a brave attempt to enter the black sea of smoke, but they never got far, their masks not availing them against that cloudy poison. However, some 20 victims were saved by their efforts. When later they arrived in the factory hospitals they found them already overcrowded by the wounded and dying taken from the ruins of the villages and factories that had been collapsing from the shock.

Toward noon it was estimated that of 900 persons employed in the Oppau works, at least 700 must have been buried in the ruins, and there seemed to be no chance of saving them. The greenish fire now began to flicker and dance on top of the poisonous fog and mocked all efforts of firemen from Frankfort, Mannheim, Ludwigshafen, and Karlsruhe, who had meanwhile arrived and vainly directed hundreds of streams of water at the vicious elements.

The ambulances, though they could only work at the fringe of the scene of the catastrophe and ruins near by, soon had all the hospitals full in the neighboring towns and cities, and the railway authorities arranged for hospital trains to carry away the victims that might yet be saved to Darmstadt and Frankfort.

SUSPICION POINTS TO BOLSHEVISTS.

As there was danger of still further explosions, the police drove back the immense masses of people that had gathered around the scene of the disaster. The French troops of occupation stationed in Ludwigshafen refusing assistance in maintaining order or saving victims, as—so explained a French officer—they had been commanded to stand ready for an alarm at the barracks, suspicion having arisen that the explosion was the work of Bolshevists, who might use the general confusion for revolutionary purposes. This rumor seemed to receive some confirmation from the fact that telephone and telegraph connections had been destroyed on many lines leading to or past Ludwigshafen in places where the shock could not have had any such effect.

Toward afternoon many dead and dying had been collected by daring firemen from the scene of the disaster, as a light wind had chased the vaporish mass from the Rhine. These victims, some awfully mutilated and all blackened by smoke, soon numbered several hundreds awaiting either ambulance or dead wagon; and whole families, made homeless and having lost everything by the catastrophe, camped beside the dead.

All peasants working in neighboring fields were killed by heavy iron girders weighing many tons being thrown about by the explosion like so many matches.

Three firemen succeeded in penetrating the center of the ruins, where they discovered a crater 315 feet in diameter and 100 feet deep caused by the original explosion. Here had been situated a basin containing 5,000 tons of a mixed mass of ammonia, sulphur, and saltpeter, which only a short while before the explosion had been carefully examined and—so the director of the Oppau works asserts—could not have exploded except without certain chemicals having been added by a criminal hand.

Later this afternoon, for the reason mentioned above, a French general appeared on the scene and French troops took over responsibility for maintaining order.

I would like to point out that in this cable dispatch, written at the time of the disaster, the following statement is made:

The first explosion at Oppau, according to an engineer employed at the factory, was that of a gas compressor, and a few seconds later it was followed by another and even stronger one, and for a short time there was ceaseless thunder caused from many explosions following in quick succession. * * *

Whatever the cause may have been—and it will probably never be proved beyond a doubt just what did occur, for everyone in the neighborhood was killed, the loss of life amounting to some 1,500 people while 4,500 were injured—it has been pointed out by a former Army officer that this is not the first explosion which had occurred at that plant.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LADD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If the Senator has not stated in his address and will not state it later, for information I would like to ask if the view of the Senator is that there were some defects in the process or whether it was the Haber process that was responsible for the explosion, or, in the plenitude of his experience and wisdom as a chemist, what was the cause of it, in his judgment?

Mr. LADD. I think the inherent cause is the impossibility of producing machinery, compresses, of sufficient strength to withstand the pressure of 1,450 pounds per square inch, which is seven times that of the average boiler, together with a very high temperature. Until the Germans had developed a special steel, which is very thick, as I will point out later, they were unable to use the process. I think that is one of the dangers and difficulties of the Haber process.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it was nitrogen alone which exploded, or nitrogen in combination with other gases?

Mr. LADD. It was not nitrogen, but hydrogen, probably in combination with other gases generated in the course of the process.

Mr. KING. It was not a solid?

Mr. LADD. It was not a solid, although a large amount of solids did explode. I have asked that photographs be passed around the Senate in order that Senators may appreciate the magnitude of the explosion at Oppau, where a mass of this fertilizer material exploded and made a crater in the ground 315 feet in diameter and 100 feet deep. That only came after the other explosion and was not in reality the cause, as it is believed now, of the real explosion.

Mr. KING. Was the fertilizer at the time ready for use in its perfected condition?

Mr. LADD. Whether it was in its perfected condition I can not say, but it was being blasted out to be used for fertilizer purposes. Whether it was intended to treat it further I have no knowledge.

THE GREAT EXPLOSION NOT THE FIRST ONE AT OPPAU.

I would ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an article which appeared in the New York Times of September 23, 1921, describing the experience of Maj. Theodore Sill, who visited the Haber plant in 1919 and was told that in September 1917, while the war was in progress, there was an explosion of one of the high-pressure gas containers or "bombs," as they were called, an explosion in which about 100 people lost their lives. The concussion from this explosion was said to have been so great as to be fatal to workmen crossing a bridge half a mile from the scene of the accident.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Friday, September 23, 1921.]

GERMANS FEARED PROCESS—CALLED TANKS "BOMBS," ACCORDING TO AMERICAN WHO INSPECTED PLANT.

The explosion in the Oppau plant of the Badische Aniline Co. was not the first since the factories were completed. An account of others was given yesterday by Maj. Theodore W. Sill, of the Warner-Klipstein Chemical Co., 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, who was a member of the Inter-allied Mission appointed to study the German chemical industry.

Major Sill visited the plants of the Badische Co. in February and March, 1919. He said that the Germans in charge of the plant told of several explosions at Oppau in the war. One of the compression tanks blew up in September, 1917, causing a loss of about 100 lives.

So great was the danger of an explosion of any one of a dozen or more huge compression tanks into which nitrogen and hydrogen were introduced under enormous pressure and extreme temperatures that the German experts took no chances while operating the large drums. In stations about 100 yards from these tanks they manipulated the mixing process in the compression tanks by levers and valves.

The compression tanks, according to Major Sill, were constructed of alloy steel plates 6 inches thick. These tanks or "bombs," as they were described by the Germans, were constructed by welding two sections. The inner diameter of the towering gun-shaped chambers was 30 inches, and the height was about 40 feet.

Inside this larger tube was a smaller tube of steel one-fourth of an inch thick. The Haber process was used for the introduction of hydrogen and nitrogen into these long "bombs," where the two gases were compressed in the presence of a catalyzer. By this process nitrogen was taken out of the air and converted into ammonia, nitric acid, nitrates, fertilizers, and ammonium sulphates.

Until the Germans solved the problem during the war no steel had been manufactured strong enough to withstand the force of hydrogen gas under pressure. According to Major Sill, a special kind of steel at the Krupp works was used successfully in the nitrate works.

This steel was tested to withstand the pressure of more than 2,000 pounds a square inch when the hydrogen and nitrogen gases were compressed under a temperature running from 500 to 600 degrees. Sometimes the tanks burst, and the effects were first fully understood in the explosion of 1917, when workmen crossing a bridge a half mile away were killed by concussion.

The plant at Oppau was started in 1913 with a government subsidy, and in February, 1917, was producing 100,000 tons of nitric acid a year. According to information given to the Allied Mission by Doctor Gausse, director of the Badische Co., it cost $25,000,000, of which $1,000,000 was spent on the laboratory. The entire plant would cover roughly between 200 and 250 acres.

The nitrate plant was laid out on a rectilinear plan, and the buildings were constructed of brick. These structures, of which there were approximately 100 at the Oppau plant, were two stories high at the eaves, and another story higher in the center, the central portion being about 100 feet long and 50 feet wide.

Major Sill believes that it will take the Germans at least a year and a half to rebuild this plant if the first reports of the explosion are correct. Meantime, he said, the dye works of the Badische Co., which depended on the nitrate plant for fundamental chemicals, would be compelled to curtail their output unless they succeeded in procuring chemicals from the other two nitrate plants in Germany.

EXPLOSION AT THE SYRACUSE PLANT.

Mr. LADD. I also wish to put in the RECORD the following extract from Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering, of June 14, 1922:

[From the Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering, June 14, 1922.]

EXPLOSION IN SYNTHETIC AMMONIA PLANT OF ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN CORPORATION.

Four persons were injured in an explosion on June 11 at the new Haber process plant of the Atmospheric Nitrogen Corporation, at Solvay, just west of Syracuse, N. Y. Officials of the Allied Dye & Chemical Corporation, of which the Atmospheric Nitrogen Corporation is a subsidiary, were not able to explain the cause of the accident or to estimate the damage. It was stated, however, that operation will be normal within a few days. The damage was confined to the interior of the process building, the walls remaining intact.

Evidently the plant that has been pointed out as a successful example of Haber process operation in this country is not without its record of explosions.

ACCIDENTS AT NITRATE PLANT NO. 1.

Even nitrate plant No. 1 had its accidents, for in the report of the operations (No. 2041 Nitrate Div.) I find the following:

Great difficulties also were experienced with the ammonia synthesis and liquefaction systems. The ammonia catalyst is contained in a steel bomb about 48 inches internal diameter and 15 feet 2 inches long, with screwed heads, top and bottom. The main difficulty was the inability to keep this bomb tight, in view of the pressure of 1,450 pounds per square inch which had to be maintained. The catalyst operated at 500° C., which temperature is maintained by heat interchangers and a gas heater, which supplied additional heat at the entrance to the bomb. The tubes in the heater burned out frequently, permitting the escape of gas, which often caused the process to be shut down. The escaping hydrogen often ignited, but fortunately there was no loss of life in any of these accidents (p. 272).

Mr. President, experience in industrial chemistry has shown that accidents are apt to occur under those conditions of strenuous operation which accompany a state of war. For my part I should hate to see the United States dependent for its nitrogen upon a process so dangerous that a slip on the part of an operative, the forgetfulness of some one who fails to turn a valve at the right time, results in a catastrophe that, with great loss of life, wipes out an essential military operation. For my part, Mr. President, as a chemist I warn this Senate against depending upon such a process, for I do not believe that it is necessary.

VIOLENCE OF THE OPPAU EXPLOSION.

I have before me a photograph of what was left of the portion of the Haber process plant which exploded at Oppau. The principal feature to be seen in the foreground is a great hole, said to have been 315 feet across and 100 feet deep. Not even the "Big Bertha" which was a crowning achievement of German military effort could have caused this yawning crater. Only a volcano could be compared with the Oppau explosion.

I maintain, Mr. President, that the science of nitrogen fixation has progressed far enough so that it is not necessary to erect a volcano in a civilized community to supply this country with nitrogen for its military explosives.

TABLE VI.—Cotton—Continued.

IMPORTS.

[The great customers who use the bulk of the world's exportable surplus of cotton (stated in thousands of bales of 500 pounds gross weight).]

Year (average).	1 Canada.	2 Belgium.	3 France.	4 Germany.	5 Italy.	6 Japan.	7 Netherlands.	8 Spain.	9 Sweden.	10 Switzerland.	11 Great Britain.	12 Russia.	13 Austria-Hungary
1909–1913	137	496	1,435	2,258	896	1,405	277	382	93	113	4,164	886	905
1914	152	None.	949	None.	679	1,705	245	389	107	101	3,447	801	None.
1915	197	None.	1,052	None.	1,344	2,015	365	660	558	147	4,820	641	None.
1916	205	None.	1,178	None.	1,170	2,299	177	471	130	123	4,045	57	None.
1917	178	None.	1,260	None.	828	1,947	46	447	82	94	3,163	None.	None.
1918	226	None.	656	None.	601	1,886	1	277	33	38	3,114	None.	None.
1919	179	289	1,007	None.	826	2,190	114	341	80	115	3,816	None.	None.
1920	241	506	1,033	691	825	2,176	124	375	113	97	3,457	375	None.

TABLE VII.—International trade balance sheet between Europe-Canada and United States of America. Item I: United States bill to Europe and Canada; Item II: Part paid. Item III: Balance due and unpaid for eight years, January, 1915, to January, 1923, inclusive.

	Europe-Canada eight-year bill.	Debit.	Credit.
Item I. United States bill to Europe and Canada for eight years.
Invisible debits:
1. Agricultural products sold and exported to Europe	$20,430,625,433
Manufactured products, raw materials, and all other merchandise, sold and exported to Europe	7,945,233,225
Merchandise and agricultural products (total exports) sold and exported to Canada	5,038,146,108
Army and Navy supplies, sold by liquidation commissions in Europe after the war to Nov. 15, 1922	574,876,884
Supplies and merchandise, mostly agricultural products, sold and exported by American Relief, $84,093,963, plus United States Grain Corporation, $56,858,802	140,952,765
2. Interest accrued to United States Government on loans to European Governments of $10,126,140,829, to Nov. 15, 1922 [1]	2,115,471,345
Interest accrued to American investors on European loans at average rate of 6 per cent and average $2,881,501,000, less refund of $648,246,316, to January, 1923	584,097,106
Interest accrued to American exporters and bankers on an average (from Jan. 1, 1915, to Jan. 1, 1923) of $2,500,000,000 current open credits	819,000,000
Interest accrued to American investors on Canadian loans, rate 6 per cent (on $156,819,683, Jan. 1, 1915, plus $1,455,778,114, loaned since), on a total of $1,612,597,797	372,571,523
3. Discount at an average 4 per cent paid by Europeans in United States on sale of $2,881,501,000. European securities sold to American investors [1]	115,000,000
Discount at an average 5 per cent on resale of American securities sold by European owners to American investors on $2,500,000,000	125,000,000
4. War service of transportation and other items furnished allies in United States out of $10,000,000,000 loan in addition to items in sub 1, item 1	1,346,780,348
5. War liquidation items, incurred in United States on cancellation of allied war contracts and expenses of allied commissions in United States	100,000,000
6. Insurance, shipping, repairs, supplies in United States ports, tourists, $75,000,000 per year (war transportation shipping in sub 1, item 1) [1]	600,000,000
7. European agreement to repay occupational services furnished by War Department to United States on Rhine	255,862,608
8. European loans placed in United States taken up and paid off by Europe	650,500,000
		$41,214,117,346
Item II. Payments made.
Invisible credits:
1. All merchandise purchased and imported from Europe to Jan. 1, 1923	5,846,968,461
All merchandise purchased and imported from Canada to Sept. 20, 1922	2,972,276,711
2. Gold and silver net balance delivered to United States by Europe	771,715,000
Gold and silver net balance delivered by Canada—largely French and Italian gold deposited with Great Britain sent via Canada	1,418,392,000
Gold and credits delivered to United States Treasury by British Government from India	81,000,000
3. American securities purchased from European holders by American investors	2,500,000,000
European securities, public and private, purchased by American investors ($2,881,506,000, less $648,246,316 refunded through $10,000,000,000 loan by British)	2,232,259,684
Francs, marks, lire, pounds sterling purchased and held by American investors	1,000,000,000
Canadian securities, public and private, purchased by American investors	1,455,780,000
4. War merchandise and service by United States Government purchased in Europe for war, Navy aircraft, and United States Government needs to end armistice period paid in cash	2,509,442,889
War merchandise and service by United States Government for same purposes as sub. 4, Item II, paid by United States from francs, lire, and pounds sterling furnished by allied Governments	1,490,557,111
War merchandise and service by United States Government for same purposes from armistice period to present for occupational expenses on the Rhine	255,862,608
5. Interest accrued to European investor and holder of American securities on an average rate of 5½ per cent on $2,500,000,000 [1]	1,526,322,688
6. Remittances by European immigrants in America to Europe, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918, at $175,000,000 per year; 1920, 1921, and 1922, at $300,000,000 per year—all Europe [1]	1,600,000,000
7. Tourist and shipping, repairs for years 1919, $100,000,000; 1920, $150,000,000; 1921, $175,000,000; 1922, $200,000,000 [1]	622,000,000
8. American investments in Canadian and European properties and agencies (motors, tires, farm implements, oil, packing, etc.) [1]	50,000,000
9. Current revolving credit advances to European and Canadian merchants by American bankers and exporters for United States exports and imports [1]	2,000,000,000
			$28,335,557,132
Unsettled trade balance of Europe and Canada in favor of United States			12,878,560,194
Total United States bill to Europe and Canada for eight years		$41,214,117,346	41,214,117,346
Item III. Balance due and unpaid.
1. European allied Government notes received by United States Government for allied loans under Liberty loan act—unpaid balance to Nov. 15, 1922	9,386,422,558
2. European Government notes received by United States Government for War-Navy supplies sold since war, $574,876,884; sales American relief, $84,093,963; and sales U. S. G. Co., $56,858,802, plus $255,862,608, United States Rhine cost	871,692,257
3. Interest accrued and unpaid on sub. 1–2, Item III, by European countries to United States Government balance to Nov. 15, 1922	1,554,783,389
4. Total obligations of European Governments to United States Government	11,812,898,204

Farm industry's interest in the above—international transactions covering eight years:

(a) The $10,000,000,000 Allied loan by the United States was directly expended for agricultural products, $7,889,001,697; for manufactured and raw materials, $2,699,106,125; railroad freight, $136,083,774.

(b) The $871,692,257 liquidation sales—notes, United States Grain Corporation and American Relief—at least 80 per cent thereof, or $697,353,705, was for agricultural products.

(c) Of the total exported merchandise to Europe and Canada (excluding supplies to Army and Navy in Europe), $26,184,701,270 was agricultural products.

American banking and investment houses' interest in the above—international transactions covering eight critical years:

(a) The financing and sale of all securities purchased and sold in American markets.

(b) All credit arrangements and settlements on total exports and imports.

(c) Total shipments of all gold and silver imported and exported.

(d) Collections and payments of all interest and discount, together with the handling of invisible credits and debits of immigrant remittances, tourists, shipping, and insurance.

(e) Investigating, reporting, and passing, as well as establishing European customers' credits for merchandise exported, for which they have established in European countries large American branches.

(f) The American seaboard banks and American investment houses from New York to San Francisco handled $56,000,000,000 for our foreign trade during those eight critical years while the great American interior banks financed in addition the money for the planting and sale of the farm products during the same period.

TABLE VIII.—Looking backward from January 1, 1914, to January 1, 1900—Fourteen years pre-war peace period—International trade balance sheet between United States and all Europe, years 1900 to 1914, inclusive—Peace time pre-war trade sheet with Europe.

Fiscal years.	United States bill of items to Europe.						Europe's payment on bill.
	Fiscal year exports.	Fiscal year imports.	Fiscal year net excess of United States exports and imports.	Fiscal year net excess gold and silver to Europe.	To Europe United States securities sold as merchandise.	United States total bill to Europe.[1]	Total Europe payments.[1]	Interest 5½ per cent paid to Europe on United States securities purchased.	Interest 6 per cent paid to Europe on $1,500,000,000 on our world's trade.	Net excess of European ocean drayage for United States.	United States tourists' money in Europe.	Immigrant remittance to Europe.	Net excess gold and silver to United States.
1900	$1,040,167,763	$440,567,314	$599,600,449	$75,313,684	$70,000,000	$744,914,133	$737,600,000	$227,600,000	$90,000,000	$50,000,000	$170,000,000	$200,000,000	.....
1901	1,136,504,605	429,620,452	706,884,153	92,240,955	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1902	1,008,033,981	475,161,941	532,872,040	75,424,417	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1903	1,029,256,651	547,226,887	482,029,770	48,717,734	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1904	1,057,930,131	498,697,379	559,232,752	79,610,721	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1905	1,020,972,641	540,773,092	480,199,549	1,563,792	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1906	1,200,166,036	633,292,184	566,873,852	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	$785,818
1907	1,298,452,380	747,291,253	551,161,127	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	44,425,633
1908	1,283,600,153	608,014,147	675,586,008	2,134,700	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1909	1,146,755,321	654,322,918	492,432,403	82,331,925	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1910	1,194,062,988	790,134,594	403,928,399	71,877,002	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1911	1,293,072,862	770,293,236	522,779,626	34,525,802	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1912	1,467,451,834	900,003,944	567,447,890	64,138,330	150,000,000	781,586,220	776,750,000	26,675,000	90,000,000	50,000,000	170,000,000	200,000,000	.....
1913	1,499,573,363	864,666,103	634,907,260	.....	150,000,000	784,907,260	793,360,330	275,000,000	90,000,000	50,000,000	170,000,000	200,000,000	8,360,330

[1] 1922 exports and imports used as basis for 1923.

Looking backward: To the close of this normal 14-year period Europe's credit position, as a result of an almost uninterrupted half a century of peaceful commercial civilization, was as follows:

(a) Europe, with the rest of the world, was enjoying the benefits of international trade, which was at its highest point, with 45,000,000 tons of shipping facilities sufficient to adequately handle the world's commerce.

(b) In the world's commerce Europe was the great financial center, supplying the new money for United States, Russia, Japan, China, India, South America, Africa, Australia, Canada, and the Balkan States—in a word, to the world.

(c) The investors of Great Britain alone owned and controlled $250,000,000 of the $300,000,000 of the annual gold supply of the world.

(d) The investors of Great Britain alone had invested capital in the countries of the world of $18,000,000,000.

(e) Europe had purchased and held American securities to the extent of $5,000,000,000.

(f) Great Britain had invested in the financing of our foreign trade an additional $1,500,000,000.

(g) Europe was collecting annually from the United States an interest charge at 5½ per cent on $5,000,000,000 and 6 per cent on an additional $1,500,000,000 invested in our foreign trade—a total annual interest of $365,000,000.

(h) Europe was doing our annual ocean drayage in excess of $50,000,000 over that carried in American bottoms.

(i) Europe was loaning to the United States new capital at the rate of $100,000,000 a year.

(j) All of the European nations had a small national debt, the interest on which was easily met by small annual tax of $1,600,000,000 for interest on their national debts.

(k) The franc, lira, crown, ruble, and pound sterling were sound and approximately at par the world over, with all the European nations solvent.

(l) European merchants were well known and financially strong, with unquestioned credit the world over.

These were the financially strong and the good customers for the exportable surplus of the American farm, factory, and mine.

Let us now look at Europe—our same good customers—as of January 1, 1923, after the destructive calamity of a world-destroying war.

Looking forward—from January 1, 1923, to the years to come—10, 20, 30, 40 years:

(a) The United States has become the financial center and great creditor nation of the world, with $250,000,000,000 of national wealth and a comparatively small national debt—to-day the only world market for substantial amounts of new capital.

(b) The lines of the world's international commerce broken down and largely destroyed, except for taking care of only the almost actual necessities of life for many of the countries of the world—their buying reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

(c) The world's shipping facilities greatly overbuilt, with 54,000,000 dead-weight tons of steel cargo shipping, in desperate competition, to carry the "world's commerce," which does not require to-day more than 35,000,000 dead-weight tons of shipping.

(d) With a total of $28,000,000,000 paid on our $40,000,000,000 of trade balance, there is hanging over and menacing our foreign trade relations with Europe a $12,878,560,194 unsettled trade balance in favor of the United States.

1. This terrific unsettled trade balance exists, too, even after Europe has exhausted almost all of her available resources to settle it. Great Britain, realizing the effect of this unsettled trade balance and its menace to world conditions, endeavors in a statesmanlike manner to promptly accept our terms and thus reduce her portion of that trade balance by approximately $5,000,000,000.

2. Hanging over the European nations to-day are great unfunded external debts, owed principally to the United States and Great Britain, of $11,812,898,204 to the United States alone, with an annual interest charge of $354,000,000, menacing and destroying the reasoning powers of the afflicted nations of Europe, which must be met by taxes upon her people.

(e) To meet forty billions of trade balance in favor of the United States during the last eight critical years, of which trade $26,000,000,000 was for agricultural products, our great customers in Europe have since 1914—

1. Returned to the United States two and one-half billion dollars' worth of American securities, and the United States, through the Alien Property Custodian, has impounded $400,000,000 worth of German securities.

2. Sent to us a $2,271,107,000 net balance of gold and silver, mostly Russian, Austrian, German, Italian, and French, together with new world production, which the United States holds, and as a result these nations are off a good basis.

3. Borrowed new money in the American investment markets of $2,232,259,684.

4. Canada has borrowed in the American investment markets $1,455,780,000. Europe in pre-war days furnished Canada all her new capital; and

5. The United States has taken over from Europe the financing of her own world trade and has invested in it about $2,000,000,000 of American banking money.

(f) Europe is collecting interest to-day from us on $1,500,000,000 of American securities, as against $5,000,000,000 held by her investors in 1914.

(g) The countries of Europe staggering under national external and internal debts, with interest charges from those debts equaling $11,000,000,000 a year, as against $1,500,000,000 of interest charges for 1913.

(h) While the dollar and pound sterling are practically at par, the lira is a little over one-fifth of par and the franc a little less than one-third of par, with the ruble, Austrian crown, and the German mark depreciated to practically nil.

(i) The credits of a large percentage of the merchants of Europe are weak and gradually shriveling up. Yet midst all the financial chaos that exists in Europe to-day, Great Britain, with $15,000,000,000 of world securities still in the hands of her private investors, within the very heat of the firing line, stands cool and set at home like the sentinel "Rock of Gibraltar," while promptly honoring her obligations abroad. The world has confidence in her statesmanship because Great Britain always leans in her international affairs upon the tried and experienced men of her country, in her hours of success as well as in her hours of need. They know the present-day history of "world commerce" and they can read the future. What a lesson to this country—her debt-funding commission arrived home on Saturday, reported to the Government, and by the following Wednesday that nation had accepted and taken on its obligations of principal and interest to the United States Government, assuming for its people, already heavily taxed, a further tax burden of $170,000,000 a year for 66 years.

(j) Great Britain, along with the neutral countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, and Portugal, are alone left with foreign financial credit and stability.

England, is carried on commercially. I have no positive information to that effect, but my impression is very strong that it is. As I said, there is no recovery of ammonia from producers in this country, as far as known to me, and I know many of the works where the big producer plants are.

I think Mr. Summers made a slight error in dates in regard to the introduction of the by-product oven in this country. It was started in Syracuse by the Sement-Solvey Co. in 1893. They were the only ones until the Glassport installation, and that was quickly followed by the Dunbar installation.

H. K. HITCHCOCK. There was a producer plant for recovery of ammonia erected in this country by the Columbia Chemical Co., Barberton, Ohio. Before it was decided to erect this plant Mr. Galt carefully investigated the operation of these same producers in England and found they were operated successfully there and giving very excellent commercial results. After these producers were erected here, however, the patentees were not able to operate them with the coal which was used at the Barberton plant, so as to get a commercially economical result. Theoretically the process should have been commercially successful. But while it was technically successful, it was never a practical success from an economic point of view.

In this connection there is another possibility for the by-product coke industry which might be interesting. Quite recently I have heard suggestions for utilizing the by-product coke oven to make coke and by-product gases; then pump the gases through existing natural-gas pipe lines, in order to deliver the fuel gas at the point of consumption and at the same time make the by-product coke at the mine where the coal is produced. An arrangement of this kind should be commercially available, and every time a supply of natural gas falls short and the demand for gas fuel becomes acute the problem bobs up. I have no doubt it will eventually be done to considerable extent in the Pittsburgh district and considerable ammonia recovered.

FRANCIS C. FRARY. In regard to the statement about by-product ammonia in Chicago and neighborhood, to my personal knowledge the Sement-Solvay Co. erected a plant there about nine years ago which has been continuously producing by-product ammonia ever since.

L. L. SUMMERS. I spoke extemporaneously. I will make one statement. In regard to the Mond process for washing gas, there have been a number of plants tried in this country, but the fundamental weakness is the fact that in washing a low-grade gas, primarily the producer gas is used for combustion purposes, and in gas running from 80 British thermal units to 140 British thermal units per cubic foot, which is the range of blast-furnace gas and producer gas, you sacrifice its physical temperature, so instead of having a temperature of 1,500°, 1,700°, or 1,800° F., which you might get direct from the producer (or, in the Mond process, 1,000° F., on account of the excessive steam used), you sacrifice the sensible heat, and you have reduced the calorific value of the fuel about 18 or 20 per cent. To show such a large volume of gas requires quite a large plant, and commercially you are on the wrong side of the books.

President LIDBURY. It is a fact, I might mention, that the plants in England are in connection with the engines used for combustion power purposes.

L. L. SUMMERS. The primary installation was laid down by Dr. Ludwig Mond many years ago in his own works at New Castle, and that is where the greatest development has taken place.

JOSEPH W. RICHARDS. The gas was made near the mines and piped to the point of consumption, and therefore the original heat of the gas, in that distribution system, would be lost anyhow.

LEO BAEKELAND. I know there are many important sources of ammonia which have up to this time practically remained untouched. In this country there are immense deposits of peat, which, in conjunction with the production of gas, would furnish an enormous supply of ammonia; peat has been utilized successfully for this purpose in some European countries where good coal is less abundant than in the United States.

J. E. JOHNSON, Jr: They tried it in Canada also.

PROGRESS IN NITROGEN FIXATION REQUIRES COSTLY EXPERIMENTING.

Mr. LADD. Mr. Peacock has shown in a general outline certain reactions which he thinks should be utilized at such a location as Muscle Shoals. These reactions have been combined into a series of processes which has been the subject of most careful study and investigation. I do not know whether the application of these processes will result in the production of 5-cent ammonia or not, but as a chemist it does seem to me that this procedure is a start along the right road. These particular processes may or may not succeed, but sooner or later some development will be made which will succeed. How soon such a process is made commercial depends largely upon the amount of money which is available for the preliminary work.

In brief, then, the situation is just this: American capital has rightly appraised Muscle Shoals, not as an opportunity to make untold millions but as a half worked-out development on which many millions must be spent before the problem is solved. Neither the cyanamid process, with its complications and large expense, nor the Haber process, which offers little hope of ammonia for less than 10 cents a pound and which is accompanied by dangers unpleasant to contemplate, is likely to be the process desired. Neither of these processes represents the last word in nitrogen fixation. What the ultimate process will be only time can tell. One thing is certain, and that is that before the answer is reached and the problem solved somebody must spend a large sum of money.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is only the first step, the mere beginning on a long road of experimentation. If the first step costs $2,000,000, I leave it to Senators to judge for themselves how expensive this undertaking ultimately will be. To deliberately engage in such an enterprise contrary to the recommendations of the Ordnance Department, and particularly in view of the fact that private capital has already offered to shoulder this responsibility, appears to me to be a policy which the taxpayers in this country will never understand, and which we who authorize such a policy will never be able to explain.

It is unfortunate that the importance of the fixation of nitrogen is not better understood in the United States. The chemist well knows the facts, but he does not speak the language of the farmer, and when he undertakes to express his views he finds difficulty in making himself understood.

Nitrogen, Mr. President, is both bread and meat, although in the United States it is seldom thought of as an essential article of food. Germany understands how important it is. One of her four leading physicists and chemists is Dr. Nikodem Caro, inventor of the cyanamid process of nitrogen fixation and of a very successful process for generating hydrogen gas; during the war he was appointed minister of raw materials and was charged with the responsibility of providing German industries with raw materials for making munitions, equipment, and supplies. The New York Times of December 20, 1922, quotes Doctor Caro as saying that nitrogen is bread and that Germany would be ruined by the French demand for 60,000 tons of pure nitrogen, which he declares would result in a harvest decrease amounting to 1,500,000 tons of grain worth 200,000,000 gold marks.

I ask that the article be included without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. CURTIS in the chair]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of December 20, 1922.]

SAYS NITROGEN EXPORT WOULD RUIN GERMANY—EXPERT OPPOSES FRENCH DEMAND FOR 60,000 TONS—COMPARES IT TO 1,500,000 TONS OF GRAIN.

BERLIN, December 20.—"Nitrogen is bread," asserts Dr. Nikodem Caro, well-known German agricultural expert, declaring that fulfillment of the French demand for the delivery of 60,000 tons of pure nitrogen would intensify Germany's food problem to the point of catastrophe.

The amount of nitrogen demanded by France, he adds, is equivalent to 300,000 tons of ammonium sulphide (sulphate) and its loss to German agriculture would result in a harvest decrease amounting to 1,500,000 tons of grain, or about 6,000,000 tons of vegetables. It would cost 200,000,000 gold marks to replace this grain, which sum he declares it impossible to obtain under present conditions.

Doctor Caro claims that through the partition of upper Silesia Germany lost one of her largest nitrogen plants to Poland, and was thus cut off from an annual supply of 30,000 tons. This meant a reduction of 750,000 tons in the grain yield yearly, which reverse could not be offset for at least two years.

Germany needs 340,000 tons of nitrogen for her own requirements annually, he says, disputing the charge recently made in the French press that Germany had a surplus and could meet the French demand if she desired.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, this appreciation in Germany of the direct relation between a plentiful supply of nitrogen and a plentiful supply of food for a nation is in striking contrast with the misunderstanding, inertia, and indifference with which this subject is treated in the United States. While it is true that Germany lost the war, she made a great accomplishment when at one blow she freed her food supply from dependence upon Chilean nitrogen and at the same time provided for her national defense for the future by making possible the production of powder and explosives in such formidable proportions that she was able to hold the whole world at bay for four years.

On the other hand, we have paid a nitrogen food bill to Chile, from 1831 to September 30, 1922, amounting to the amazing total of $982,561,953.72, of which $188,625,591.80 went to support the Chilean Government in the form of an export duty. More than 99 per cent of this amount has been paid for foreign food-producing nitrogen since the close of the Civil War. Our national nitrogen bill represents nearly one-third of the world's total purchases of Chilean nitrate.

Mr. President, I know of no example in the history of civilization which is a parallel to the dependence of civilized nations upon Chilean nitrates—a dependence which has grown up during the past 50 years. Since January 1, 1865, careful estimates, based upon the cost of Chilean nitrate in North Atlantic ports, show that the world has paid about $3,281,000,000 for this single element which is so necessary in food production.

And yet nature has provided an inexhaustible supply of this same nitrogen in our atmosphere. Over every acre of ground there are 33,800 tons of pure nitrogen awaiting only a commercially successful fixation process to make it available. Nature challenges us to take our nitrogen from this great reservoir, and Henry Ford offers to start an American nitrogen industry with a guaranteed production of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually.

The question may well be asked, if it is not to be the cyanamide process, and if the Haber process will not do, then how does Mr. Ford propose to produce this large tonnage of fixed nitrogen?

Mr. President, science has scarcely scratched the surface in its investigations of the possibilities in this field. We have a nitrogen-fixation laboratory here in Washington; it has cost us nearly a million dollars in the past three years, and while I have no doubt that its work has been handled by competent scientific men, there is a whole field of nitrogen fixation which they pass over with less than half a page in a report of 353 printed pages. This is the field of metallic nitride processes. While it is true, as they report, that none of these metallic nitride processes has achieved any degree of commercial success, I can not agree "that it does not appear that they have any immediate prospect of such development." To make such a statement as that is to wholly ignore the power situation at Muscle Shoals; and if I understand it correctly, the purpose of the Fixed Nitrogent Research Laboratory is to work out a satisfactory solution for the fixation of nitrogen at that location.

The enormous secondary or irregular power at very low cost makes it possible to make metallic sodium from ordinary salt by a simple process. This can be done by the use of calcium carbid under the well-known Freeman patent, in which commercial calcium carbid and dry sodium chloride are ground together and the mixture charged into an electric furnace and heated to a bright-red heat, about 1,400° centigrade. The result is the production of sodium carbid, which is broken down by heat and decomposed into metallic sodium and carbon. Since the carbid portion of nitrate plant No. 2 is probably the largest calcium carbid plant in the world and stands ready for immediate operation, it appears that the production of sodium from salt could be readily accomplished with cheap secondary power.

However, there are other processes for producing metallic sodium from salt which do not use carbide, and very promising results have been reported from experiments in smelting phosphate rock with salt by means of which are produced phosphoric acid, a very important part of complete fertilizer, hydrochloric acid, a valuable by-product which would reduce the cost of fertilizer, and sodium oxide which could be reduced to metallic sodium by the use of carbon and cheap secondary power. Once having a large supply of cheap metallic sodium available, Mr. President, this whole field of promising nitride methods for nitrogen fixation immediately becomes available. For example, boron trioxide, which is readily obtainable from a cheap material called "borax," is an excellent agent for nitrogen fixation, because a small amount of boron will unite with a large amount of nitrogen; and in a boron-nitride process nearly all of the boron trioxide would be recovered, so that no great tonnage of borax would be required as a raw material. When boron trioxide is heated in a closed furnace in the presence of metallic sodium and in an atmosphere of nitrogen, a heavy dark greenish gas[1] called "boron nitride" is formed, together with a by-product production of sodium oxide, which in turn becomes a source of new supplies of metallic sodium. The greenish gas is sprayed with steam or hot water and gives up its nitrogen in the form of ammonia, which is the same form in which nitrogen is obtained by either the cyanamide process or the Haber process. But in this nitride process there are no dangerous high pressures, and it is not even necessary to secure a supply of pure hydrogen, for that is obtained directly from the hot water.

There is, however, another process only recently developed and which is available to Mr. Ford which promises greater results than anything heretofore accomplished. I am not permitted to give the details of this process, Mr. President, because of the fact that to do so at this time might deprive Mr. Ford of its use, but I am free to say that it works at atmospheric pressure and at moderate temperature. It is true that this new process requires a supply of pure hydrogen, but as I have stated, Mr. President, where cheap secondary power can be used to produce electrolytic hydrogen the problem of a pure supply of this element is solved.

However, the availability of cheap sodium again comes into play, for, suppose that it is desired to produce hydrogen at a time when no secondary power is available. It is possible with plenty of cheap sodium to store hydrogen in a solid form just as it is possible to store acetylene gas in solid form for illuminating purposes.

It is well known, Mr. President, that to produce acetylene gas on short notice it is only necessary to place calcium carbide in a closed gas generator in which a small amount of water is allowed to drip upon it, and the gas is immediately generated. In the same way, during that portion of the year when a large amount of power is available, electrolytic hydrogen could be produced cheaply. If this hydrogen is passed over metallic sodium at the very moderate temperature of about 200° C., the hydrogen is chemically absorbed, in accordance with the following equation: $4Na+H_2=Na_4H_2$.

In other words, 4 atoms of sodium unite with 2 atoms of hydrogen to make 1 molecule of sodium hydride. Sodium hydride, when allowed to cool and placed in water has a curious effect; not only does it give up the pure hydrogen which it has received from the electrolytic hydrogen generator, but it decomposes the water in which it is placed and releases a weight of hydrogen twice as great as the hydrogen which it carries, so that the total yield is three times the amount of hydrogen originally used to make the sodium hydride. This interesting reaction may be set down as follows: $Na_4H_2+4H_2O=4NaOH+3H_2$. (Teed, Chemistry and Manufacture of Hydrogen, p. 33.)

The commercial meaning of this, then, is that with cheap secondary power, both sodium and hydrogen can be produced at certain seasons of the year and carried in storage for several months, to be released when the water is low and the secondary power is no longer available.

EXPERIMENTING WILL BE COSTLY.

Mr. President, there are a score of other processes which I might describe, any one of which may be commercially useful at Muscle Shoals, but to determine which of them is the process which will yield 5-cent ammonia calls for costly experimenting on a large scale. Our own little experimental station out here at the American University, begun scarcely three years ago, has cost us nearly a million dollars and has done nothing, so far as I am aware, in this great and promising field. Mr. President, I am not able to estimate the cost of the large-scale experiments which will have to be made before this problem is solved, but it is a matter that will certainly run into many millions of dollars.

The latest news from France is an article in a fertilizer trade magazine called "Le Phosphate et Les Engrais Chimiques," and in the issue for November 1, 1922, we find an account of the production of pure hydrogen from water by means of metallic silicon or its alloys. This process has been developed by the German company, Elektricitats Gesellschaft Vorm. Schuckurt & Co. By this process hydrogen 99 per cent pure is obtained by using metallic silicon in a finely divided state, suspended in an aqueous solution of caustic soda. The Campaigné Générale de Electrochimie de Bozel (General Electrochemical Co., of Bozel) produces hydrogen regularly by the following reaction: $Si+2NaOH+H_2O=SiO_2Na_2+2H_2$.

For economy in the use of soda, a paste composed of silicon, lime, carbonate of soda, and water is used.

What happens is that the lime acts on the carbonate of soda to liberate the sodium which, with the silicon, reacts on the water, liberating the hydrogen. Ferrosilicon is frequently used as a cheap source of silicon, and a ferrosilicon paste is obtained which can be introduced without any danger into the hydrogen generator. The advantage of this manner of operation is to abolish the danger of explosion.

Is this one of the processes which should be used to secure hydrogen for the purpose of fixing nitrogen in the form of ammonia at Muscle Shoals? Frankly, gentlemen, I do not know. But I know that it is possible, with the large secondary power, to produce ferrosilicon economically there. But whether this recent German development is the most economical method for the production of pure hydrogen is a question which, like many others at Muscle Shoals, is still to be worked out.

Being familiar, as a chemist, with the difficulties, dangers, and the enormously heavy expense which must be faced in reaching a solution of the nitrogen fixation problems at Muscle Shoals, I want to say, Mr. President, that since we have a bona fide offer in which production is guaranteed and all of these difficulties, dangers, and heavy expense are avoided, I can not understand why this Government should embark on such an enterprise, for I believe that the solution of the difficulty lies in the immediate and unqualified acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford.

Finally, Mr. President, without criticism I wish to say in all frankness that failure to accept the Ford proposal will be ground for just criticism of our republican form of government and, to my mind, an indication of one of its dangers.

Speaking for myself, it is not hard to understand the fixation of the nitrogen of the physical atmosphere, but I am frank to say that it is beyond me to comprehend the fixation of our policies in the political atmosphere.

Mr. KING. Is there any provision in this bill which commits us to the Henry Ford proposition with respect to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. LADD. Not so far as I am aware; not at all. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to amend the bill by adding $2,000,000 for further nitrogen studies in fixation at Muscle Shoals plant No. 1.

Mr. KING. Is that an amendment to be offered to this bill?

Mr. LADD. That is an amendment which has been proposed to be offered by the Senator from Nebraska and which has been printed.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator now occupying the floor, in his judgment that is not necessary?

Mr. LADD. I feel personally that it would be an unnecessary use of money. I do not believe the Haber process will be the one employed. I do not believe that nitrogen fixed in the form for fertilizer by this process can be produced at a low enough cost to be commercially feasible, and that some other method will have to be substituted in place of it. There are other methods suggested more promising with the cheap power available at Muscle Shoals, which I believe can be adopted without any danger of explosion.

Mr. KING. Does Henry Ford propose to use one of these other methods which meet the approval of the Senator?

Mr. LADD. He has not stated in his offer. He has not pledged himself to use either of the methods which are now in use, but has left it open to himself to use such method as he may choose.

Mr. KING. Is it the Senator's understanding, from the hearings and from what he can learn with respect to Mr. Ford's proposition, that whatever method he adopts it will be one which will be scientifically feasible and will result in the accomplishment of what the Senator has in view?

Mr. LADD. That is my judgment; yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that there is any other proposition superior to that which has been submitted by Mr. Ford?

Mr. LADD. There is no other proposition except for the Government to finish the project and then dispose of it or use it. In fact, Henry Ford's is the only offer at the present time.

Mr. KING. What is the policy of the War Department, if the Senator is able to advise us?

Mr. LADD. I can not say what their policy is at the present time, but reports I have read indicate that they have decided not to go any further with plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. KING. Are they offering any obstacles to entering into contractual relations with Henry Ford or offering obstacles to that and presenting no other policy?

Mr. LADD. I have no definite knowledge, but I feel that it probably is up to Congress to determine whether Henry Ford's offer shall be accepted or whether a new national policy shall be developed. But whatever it is to be, to my mind this "watchful waiting" is very unfortunate and very unnecessary, and either a national policy should be adopted or the offer before us accepted.

Mr. KING. If nothing is done toward repairing or improving the river and the dams, will there be waste and injury to existing dams, which in the future would have to be replaced in the event any projects were completed?

Mr. LADD. There would be, yes; and I am informed, though I have not had an opportunity to make a personal investigation, that it is necessary to modify the plans at Muscle Shoals somewhat before it is too late in order to insure their workability for nitrogen fixation.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that Mr. Ford's proposition is sufficiently concrete and definite as to justify the Government in entering into contractual relations with him?

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I am going to answer that in this way: I came here as an advocate and friend of Government operation of public utilities. After making the investigation at Muscle Shoals, after considering the propositions that were before us, I determined in my own mind that the Henry Ford offer was the only practicable one before us, and I therefore did not support the proposition for Government operation.

Mr. KING. If that proposition should be accepted by the Government, what future appropriations would be required from the Government?

Mr. LADD. I am not prepared to answer as to the cost of the project, and I would not attempt to answer that at this time.

Mr. KING. Of course, it would be very much less than if the Government should attempt construction of the necessary dams and the nitrogen plant itself?

Mr. LADD. There is no question about that.

Mr. KING. The Ford plan, then, does contemplate considerable expense on his part?

Mr. LADD. It does contemplate a large expenditure on his part, and in fact, in my judgment, he could not make a success of Muscle Shoals if he did not build additional dams in the upper branches of the Tennessee River and impound their water, so as to stabilize the secondary power and increase the primary power.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is wise for the Government to make any further appropriations upon that river for any purpose whatever, or would it be wiser, in his opinion, to seek to obtain lessees under the Federal power act and make as good terms as possible with some lessees who would construct dams and furnish electrical energy for the section of the country in which the dams are situated?

Mr. LADD. I came to the conclusion, after studying the proposition, after going to Alabama and visiting the plant and seeing what had been done, and after listening to all the testimony, that it would be far better to accept the proposition for the completion of the dams under Government control rather than for the Government to do the work itself.

Mr. KING. I recall that some reference has been made in the discussion to the Alabama Power Co.—although I may not have the corporate name correct—which has operated for a number of years in Alabama and surrounding States. As I recall, some statement was made as to the willingness of that corporation to acquire the Muscle Shoals project for power purposes. Does the Senator think there is any possibility of our entering into arrangements under the Federal power control act with that corporation, or some other large private corporation, to produce electric energy and dispose of it, of course at rates which would be fixed by a commission to be appointed by the Government?

Mr. LADD. I referred to a statement from Doctor Glasgow, who made every effort to get financiers and fertilizer concerns and institutions interested in operating these plants, but he was unable to induce any of them to make an offer to take over the plant at Muscle Shoals, and therefore I conclude that they are fearful. I think they have reason to be fearful, because in my judgment many millions of dollars are going to be required to perfect those plants and make them successful for the production of nitrogen, either for powder purposes in time of war or for fertilizer purposes in time of peace. Conditions are changing so rapidly in experimental chemistry that any plant put up to-day, costing millions of dollars, may have to be scrapped inside of three years and replaced by a more modern plant.

Mr. KING. Is not the Senator afraid that the dangers and obstacles and impediments to which he has referred may deter Mr. Ford and frighten him from completing the project according to the plan which he has submitted?

Mr. LADD. I feel that he or his associates have in mind some method which they believe to be practicable, and he is willing to risk his millions. If he fails, under the contract the Government will have the right to take the property back at any time because of the failure of the lessee or purchaser to live up to the contract. The provisions of the contract are very rigid in that respect.

Mr. KING. The Senator favors the appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. LADD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I favor the appropriation for the rivers and harbors of the United States, and I am opposed to any reduction of the amount recommended in the report, either as proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or that offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The sum proposed to be appropriated, in my opinion, is subject to but one objection, and that is that it is not large enough to take care of the great interests involved. The improvement of our rivers is of the greatest importance to this country, and any reduction of it will jeopardize the prosperity of our country and be hurtful to the development of our natural resources.

The subject has been discussed at length, and I do not intend to make any detailed argument or any argument in favor of any particular project, but to speak generally on the merits of the measure, on the great benefits to be derived by the people of this country from the improvement and proper maintenance of transportation upon our great rivers.

This morning I read an article in one of the greatest journals in this country, one that has done as much to advance the development of our natural resources and the manufactures of the entire United States as any other journal ever published. It has sound views upon most subjects, although with some of its positions I have not agreed. I am a subscriber to it, and I read it because I always find it interesting and instructive. I thoroughly agree with the editorial appearing in the magazine this morning, and it states the views I have of this bill, along the lines I intended to present it to the Senate, so much abler than I was able to do that I am going to read that article as a part of my remarks. I refer to the Manufacturers Record, of Baltimore, the issue of February 8, 1923. It is entitled "Wasting a priceless opportunity for national upbuilding," and reads as follows:

Adequate river transportation would create for this country billions of business now impossible of development through lack of transportation.

It would duplicate on our rivers the traffic through the "Soo" canal, which many times exceeds the aggregate traffic through the Suez and the Panama Canals. The value of these canals to world traffic is immeasurable, but it is not greater than would be the value of the full utilization of the traffic potentialities of the Tennessee, the Warrior, the Ohio, the Mississippi, and other rivers available for improvement and the construction of the Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway.

These improvements would be cheap if we expended a billion dollars upon them as rapidly as the work could be pushed. Indeed, it is safe to say that they would add at least a billion dollars a year to our national wealth. These improvements would unshackle trade held in check by lack of transportation; they would save hundreds of millions to our farmers; they would quicken the lifeblood of the whole country.

A few months ago Mr. Moreton Frewen, one of Europe's ablest students of world affairs, long an intimate friend and often adviser of E. H. Harriman, James J. Hill, and other giants in the American railroad field, wrote the Manufacturers Record that the construction of the Lakes-St. Lawrence deeper waterway would almost overnight double the value of every foot of land in Chicago and create similar conditions elsewhere by the enormous development of trade. That measurably indicates what every one of these big river improvements would mean; and yet Congress halts, and the Nation and many of its people squabble over a petty expenditure of about $50,000,000 to secure such gigantic results.

Liverpool is to spend $70,000,000 to improve its harbor facilities; Baltimore voted a few years ago a bond issue of $50,000,000 for enlarged harbor terminals, but the United States, the great dominating industrial and agricultural country of the world, balks at the beggarly sum proposed in Congress for river and harbor work over an area of more than 3,000,000 square miles. What petty, parsimonious, narrow vision of how to create wealth by investing capital is displayed in this case by Congress and by the newspapers that parrotlike cry "pork barrel"!

Mr. President, there is no doubt that some bad projects are under construction upon our rivers and our harbors, but as to the merits of the great body of projects for the improvement of our waterways there can be, in my opinion, no reasonable controversy. We have the greatest system of inland waterways in the world. There is no country that can compare with ours in that respect. Many of our waterways are navigable without any improvement. Others, by a comparatively insignificant improvement, can be made navigable for many miles.

I think there is no question at this day that the Congress has the right to make appropriations for this purpose. I have no doubt that Congress, under the commerce clause, has jurisdiction to improve, has the right to remove obstructions, both natural and artificial, in our navigable streams for the aid and advancement of commerce. It would be, as has been said, a very limited power if we could only regulate commerce—that is, trade—without controlling the instrumentalities that are necessary to carry it on, and navigation is one of those. The only possible question that could ever be raised in this regard is whether the jurisdiction extended beyond the navigable waters, which in America means streams that are navigable in fact. We can not make a stream navigable by law. Under the common law of England, the system which we inherited and adopted, navigable streams were defined to be those in which the tide ebbed and flowed. That rule, of course, was inapplicable to the great waterways of the United States, and a different one was adopted, which is that those waters navigable for vessels engaged in commerce, ascending and descending in the natural condition of the waterways, or when reasonably improved, are in law navigable.

When we go beyond such waters, in my opinion, the Congress has no jurisdiction, but the pending bill proposes nothing of the kind. It is simply to improve the navigable waterways of the United States.

What we need in this country above all other things is cheap transportation. We can talk here for days and pass all sorts of measures to give the agricultural interests credit. We can do everything possible to get them in debt. But that is not really what the agricultural interests, the great body of them, in this country want. They do not want to get in debt. They want to get out of debt. They want reasonable and just prices, a fair price for their produce and a fair return for their labor. Furnish them a market, furnish them cheap transportation, and the agricultural interests do not ask any odds of any other interests. The agricultural interests always have been and always will be able to take care of themselves; indeed, they take care of the whole country. What is choking them now is the cost of the transportation of products to the market.

It is to my mind a crime that we do not develop our waterways and afford that transportation. It ought to have been done many years ago. If our rivers had been improved, if all their facilities and possibilities for transportation had been developed, there never would have been any trouble about transportation during the great war. We never would have been under any necessity of the Government taking charge of our railroads, with the net result of a resulting indebtedness to the Government of the enormous sum of $1,800,000,000. We would have had ample transportation.

We would have it to-day. We have to look to the waterways for such transportation in the future. The railroad companies have got in such a condition in this country that further construction is at a standstill. There has been less railroad building in the last two or three years than heretofore for 50 years. With the troubles resulting from regulation and wages, the railroads have had hard going. I do understand the railroad question, and I am not going to attempt to argue it, but no one who reads the papers and has even a superficial knowledge of it can fail to recognize that there are two conflicting interests that seriously affect this great system of transportation in our country, and so affect capital and the investing interests that they have ceased to put their money into railroads as they formerly did.

Until there is a better condition, until there is more profit in that business, I do not see any chance for further extension of railroad transportation. But if there was, we want the waterways developed. We want competing transportation to the railroads. Competition is the best way to reduce freight rates. It would control them better than any law. Let them compete for the business. Let us develop the waterways, furnish cheaper transportation than the railroad companies can possibly furnish, and then we will have facilities for getting the products of the farmer and the manufacturer to the markets where they are needed and desired and where they can be sold at profitable prices. In that way we will do more to relieve agriculture and to relieve general conditions in the country, in my opinion, than in any other way possible.

In other words, Mr. President, I believe transportation is now giving the country more trouble than any other question. We should devote our attention to that problem and develop our waterways, and if possible do something to get cheaper rates upon the railroads for the farmers. I think in some sections they can carry the produce of the country cheaper than they are doing it now, and I think they ought to do it. I think it would be to their interest to do it, for in many instances the producers have absolutely stopped shipping their product because the freight rates are greater than the prices that can be realized, and produce is rotting in the warehouses and on the farms.

For these reasons I am in favor of the improvement of all our waterways. I would be glad to vote for a larger sum for that purpose. I think it is the poorest business imaginable, after the country has spent approximately a billion dollars in improvement of the waterways, to abandon them. We should, by failing to make appropriations, not only stop the improvements but allow the billion dollars in improvements we have already made to go to wreck and ruin and waste. We know it requires constant attention and constant expense to keep them up. We would simply be guilty of the poorest economy and poorest business management imaginable.

Mr. President, I hope the amendments will be voted down and the full amount proposed appropriated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the provision of the bill on the subject of rivers and harbors is as follows:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation, $56,589,910.

As I understand it, there are two amendments offered to this section, one by the Senator from Wisconson [Mr. LENROOT] to reduce the amount to $42,000,000, and another one by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to reduce it to $27,000,000. I am opposed to both amendments.

The amount reported by the committee is, in my judgment, a reasonable and proper amount. If there is any trouble with it, it is too low. It is certainly not too high. This work on the rivers and harbors of the country is a great work and means a great deal to the people of the country. The need of the larger appropriation can not be better illustrated than by referring to the situation on the Mississippi River.

In the past we have spent large sums for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and we are now obtaining the fruits of the expenditures heretofore made. Transportation upon the Mississippi River has increased several fold in the last few years.

On the barge line alone the increases are shown in the following figures. The line was put in operation November 1, 1919:

Nov. 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920, tons of freight carried	115,907
July 1, 1920, to July 1, 1921, tons of freight carried	237,258
July 1, 1921, to July 1, 1922, tons of freight carried	655,789

It will be recalled that the Government barge line was established nearly three years ago on that river and on the Warrior River. The barge line on the Mississippi runs principally between St. Louis and New Orleans. Since the barge line on this great river has been in existence it has been a paying proposition. It was a paying proposition from the first month, as I recall, paying even upon the large cost of the barges on the line, which, as we all know, were built at war costs. The result has been that an enormous business has been built up, increasing several fold each year. The first year it was prosperous, the second year it was very much more prosperous, and the third year even more prosperous, though it had an accident to which I now wish to call attention, an accident that will probably not occur again if the provision of the bill which I am now discussing is agreed to unamended.

The Mississippi River between St. Louis and New Orleans is navigable, practically speaking, at all times of the year. However, between Cairo and St. Louis there are a number of shallow places and occasionally the water gets so low that boats of the draft drawn by the Government barges get stuck.

Unfortunately, last September, on this particular stretch of the river, the barge line was put out of commission for nearly three months, beginning in September and ending in November, as I recall, simply because that part of the river had not been dredged and opened as it should have been. I wish to take this occasion to say that the Chief of Engineers, General Beach, immediately upon that trouble arising came to the rescue of the barge line. He is one of the most capable and efficient officers of the Government, and always stands ready to safeguard the Government's interests. He sent his engineers there, he sent his dredge boats there, and did everything in the world that could be done in order to clear that part of the river so that the barge line might proceed with its business, and it was cleared as soon as possible. If General Beach had had the money, if he had had the equipment, that accident never would have happened. Notwithstanding the barge line being virtually out of commission in that part of the river for a period of nearly three months, it made a large amount of money during the past year, and the losses that were then sustained will soon be wiped out and the line will show a large profit for the present fiscal year.

This is too great a work for us to take any chances on it. We ought to see to it that the river between St. Louis and New Orleans is kept absolutely free from obstructions at all times during the year. It can be done by an appropriation of a reasonable amount such as has been reported in the bill. I understand the appropriation carried this year will amply provide for that stretch of the river. I hope such appropriation will not be reduced; it ought not to be reduced. We know the difficulties which we have had in reference to transportation, and there is no reason in the world why the Government should not improve its rivers and its harbors so as better to take care of the Nation's business. With railroad rates as high as they are, with rates on the barge line 20 per cent less than railroad rates, with lack of building of new railroads, with our unexcelled waterways, we should improve them and make them do the work they are so capable of performing.

Mr. President, a committee of this body has recently been appointed to investigate and report on a 9-foot water channel from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. The State of Illinois has already appropriated $20,000,000 to be used on this work in Illinois. When completed it will constitute one of the greatest waterways in the world. It will not only give water transportation between Chicago and New Orleans but will give it between many other cities on the Mississippi and its tributaries. Nashville will have this transportation; Louisville, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Little Rock, Muscle Shoals, and many other places. Memphis will be on the direct line. If our plans are carried out we will soon build up between the Great Lakes and the Gulf on these rivers and canals the greatest system of inland water transportation in the world. We should leave no stone unturned to make this great waterway a success.

I believe that the money which is proposed to be expended in this appropriation will be as well spent as any money which we shall appropriate this year, and a great deal better than much of the money which we have already appropriated or which we shall hereafter appropriate.

Mr. President, for these reasons I very much hope that the amendments which have been offered to the bill will be voted down and that the report of the committee carrying $56,589,910 will be left in the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with what the Senator from Tennessee has said. I very much hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; in fact, that it will vote down both amendments. A Republican Congress by its silence permitted four Federal reserve banks to appropriate about $50,000,000 to construct bank palaces in four large cities. A large amount of that money would have gone into the Federal Treasury as a franchise tax had it not been for the approval by the Federal Reserve Board of the use of that money for those four banks.

Mr. President, I might cite a number of instances where special interests have been favored. I could call to the attention of the Senate, as I have done frequently and as I shall frequently in the future, the fact that $90,000,000 a year was taken off the big income taxpayers of the country; the men of all men in the country who are most able to pay taxes. They were entirely excused from the payment of those taxes. So they are saving to themselves every year now $90,000,000. I might again remind the Senate, and it is well that the country also should be reminded—for this Government belongs to the people of the country and they must make up their minds next year so as to decide who shall have control of the Government for the following four years—I might remind the Senate and also the people of the country through the RECORD that this Republican Congress voted to exempt certain taxpayers from the payment of $450,000,000 a year. The profiteers of the United States received at your hands an annual gift of $450,000,000.

Mr. President, if this Congress can sit without batting its eye and permit four Federal reserve banks to build four bank palaces costing about $50,000,000, if it can permit the big income taxpayers to be excused from the payment of $90,000,000 a year taxes and profiteers to be exempt from the payment of $450,000,000 annually, it does seem to me that it can grant to the whole people of the United States for river and harbor purposes the sum of $56,000,000.

Why can we not do that? Such an appropriation would benefit millions of people; and we ought here to do that which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number. That may be an unpopular doctrine in the Senate now; it may be that we have fallen upon a time when he who lifts his voice against special or favored interests transgresses the rules of the Republican Senate, is out of order, and is talking in another age. Thank God, however, we are approaching a time when the people will again be heard, and, as I said a few days ago, when a new declaration of independence will be submitted to them. It is high time it were being submitted. We are fighting to hold in this bill a sufficient appropriation to provide for opening up rivers so that ships may bear the products of the farm to the factories and to the marts of trade, and thus contribute to the development of commerce in the United States. It looks as if a combination is being formed to strike down this appropriation.

Mr. President, I merely want to say a word on this subject. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] called attention yesterday to the fact that he knew of vast quantities of agricultural products, wheat, corn, and other commodities, which rotted at the docks because there were not sufficient transportation facilities to carry them to the market place. Senators, there is no excuse for a situation such as that under a great Government like ours. If this is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, why can not we, who are in charge of the Government, unloose these instrumentalities so that they will serve the needs of the people? We are not sent here to use these instrumentalities to serve the needs or the greed of a favored few to the hurt and the injury of the many. Probably I violate the rule when I say that, but I say it and I repeat it—we are not here to vote to use these instrumentalities to serve the whim and the greed of a favored few; we are here to use them to serve the needs of the common masses of the common people. Probably the majority of the Senate will adopt a rule to reach just such a speech as that and cut it out of the RECORD, and perhaps the time may come when a Senator who wants really to speak what he thinks will prepare his remarks and hand them to a Republican committee to examine and blue pencil. He will say, "Is there anything in that, my lord, to which you object?" Well, it will be a good while before they can make me conform to any such rule.

Now, Mr. President, I want to answer an argument made yesterday by one of the Senators on the other side about water and rail transportation. One Senator suggested that he did not know that water transportation influenced the railroads in giving cheaper rates. There is not any doubt about that in the world. If a railroad line parallels a river, and the Government goes to work and opens up the river so that boats may ply on it, the railroad line will make more reasonable rates. So when we open up one of these rivers and make it navigable we serve the needs of commerce; we are doing that which will benefit the farmer; we are helping also in doing that which will cause the railroads to charge fair and reasonable rates.

So when we stand here this afternoon—and I am just going to say a word more—and plead for the appropriation provided in the bill of $56,000,000 for river and harbor improvements for 110,000,000 people we are pleading for a righteous project, we are pleading for a cause that is just, and I hope that no combination of interests will be permitted to strike out the provision which sets aside $56,000,000 for river and harbor purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have before me a memorandum prepared by the War Department in reference to these minor projects proposed to be covered by the appropriation in the pending bill, on which projects most of the criticism has fallen. The memorandum goes to show the reasons for the particular expenditures along that line, and I ask that it may be read by the Secretary in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Memorandum.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 8, 1923.

The total number of localities given in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers upon which it is stated that any funds can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, is 308. Of this total 24 only reported a tonnage during the calendar year 1921 of 5,000 tons or less. These localities are as follows:

Plymouth Harbor, Mass.: There was practically no tonnage for this harbor during 1921, due to the fact that most of the wharf property in Plymouth Harbor was destroyed during that year by the Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission in connection with the celebration of the landing of the Pilgrims. Prior to 1921 the commerce ranged from 13,500 tons to 28,600 tons, and the number of passengers is normally about 70,000 to 75,000 per annum. The improvement it is planned to undertake is the dredging of the harbor at a locality where the wharf facilities can be restored, it being impracticable to restore them in their old locality on account of the monuments erected during the celebration. This is a cooperative project, one half ($51,000) being paid by the United States and the other half by the State of Massachusetts. The maintenance is nominal.

Mattituck Harbor: The commerce for 1921, 1,324 tons. Proposed expenditure, $5,000. This is a small harbor on the north shore of Long Island, which is made use of by light-draft boats carrying oysters, clams, fruit, and vegetables. The average cost of maintenance of this harbor for the years 1918–1922, inclusive, was $1,662.93. The present relatively large amount required is due to the fact that the harbor has not been properly maintained in the past few years.

St. Jones River, Del.: This is a small stream flowing southeasterly and emptying into Delaware Bay about 26 miles above Cape Henlopen. It is used by small boats carrying coal, grain, and vegetables. The use of the river has been limited by sharp bends and insufficient depth of channel. The amounts stated in the report as $45,000 for improvement and $5,000 for maintenance, which can be profitably used now, are those necessary to place the river in a suitable navigable condition. After the stream is once dredged the cost of maintenance should be small.

Channel, Thoroughfare Bay, Cedar Bay, N. C.: This is a small channel connecting two larger bodies of water, Core Sound and Pamlico Sound, and is used largely by small boats carrying fish and oysters. The existing project was completed in 1921. There have been no expenditures for maintenance during the past five years. The estimated annual cost of maintenance is $300 after the channel has once reached a stable condition, and it is expected that the work which will be done with the allotment now contemplated will bring about this condition.

Channel, Apalachicola River, St. Andrews Bay, Fla.: This is a waterway approximately 36¾ miles in length, extending from a point 6 miles above the mouth of the Apalachicola River in a northwesterly direction to St. Andrews Bay, Fla. The commerce passing through this channel for the calendar year 1921 was 3,422 tons, consisting of logs, general merchandise, and vegetables. The contemplated expenditures for 1924 are wholly for repairs to plant, which has been used in the maintenance of this improvement.

Clear Creek, Tex.: This is a small stream emptying into the west side of Upper Galveston Bay. It is used as a navigable waterway connection between the towns of Seabrook, Webster, League City, and Friendswood, and the cities of Houston and Galveston, and at times it is used as a means of distributing shell at the former places for the county highways and for railway ballast, but during the year 1921 the commerce consisted entirely of oysters, crabs, and fish, which were moved in small boats over the waterway. The average expenditure for maintenance during the five years 1918–1922 was $2,000.

Umpqua River and Bay, Oreg.: The Umpqua River is the largest stream entering the Pacific Ocean between Sacramento and Columbia Rivers. It empties into the ocean about 180 miles south of the Columbia River and 465 miles north of San Francisco Bay. The country tributary to the Umpqua River produces a large amount of lumber; but the shipments by water have been impracticable, due to the fact that the depth over the bar was insufficient for deep-sea ships. The project for the improvement of this harbor was adopted by the river and harbor act of September 22, 1922, which provided that one-half of the cost of the project should be borne by local interests. Local interests have already undertaken their share of the work and have expended over $200,000 toward the construction of the jetty authorized by the project. The commerce for the calendar year 1921 was only 3,456 tons, but this was due to the fact, as stated, that the depth on the bar was insufficient for the character of boats desiring to use the harbor. The expenditure proposed for 1923 is $276,500, which is the total cost of the Government's share of the work.

Plattsburg Harbor, N. Y.: A harbor on the east side of Lake Champlain. Commerce for 1921, 3,951 tons. Proposed expenditure, $1,000 for maintenance of old breakwater.

Port Wing Harbor, Wis.: Located on the south shore of Lake Superior, 34 miles east of Duluth. Commerce for 1921, 893 tons. Proposed expenditure, $1,000 for maintenance.

Ontonagon Harbor, Mich.: Located on the south shore of Lake Superior, 136 miles east of Duluth and 274 miles west of Sault Ste. Marie. Commerce of 1921, 80 tons. Proposed expenditure, $9,000 for maintenance, for dredging and repairs to the piers, which have been neglected and which are now in a bad state of decay, requiring extensive repairs to superstructure. This was formerly an important lumber port, and unless it is to be entirely abandoned, which has not been authorized by Congress, the piers must be repaired from time to time in order to prevent their entire destruction and the closure of the harbor.

Grand Marais Harbor, Mich.: Located on the south shore of Lake Superior, 314 miles east of Duluth. Commerce for 1921, 40 tons. Proposed expenditure, $15,000 for dredging and repairs to piers. This harbor is used as a harbor of refuge, and, during the year 1921, 17 vessels, with a net registered tonnage of 4,959 tons, entered the harbor for shelter. The depth entrance is insufficient to provide for larger vessels, otherwise it would probably be used to a much greater extent as a harbor of refuge by vessels. However, its availability, even in its present condition, results in a saving of life and property.

Zippel Bay, Lake of the Woods, Minn.: Zippel Bay is located on the southern shore of the Lake of the Woods, Minn. Tonnage for 1921, 1,258 tons. Proposed expenditure, $2,000 for dredging. The harbor is used by small boats carrying miscellaneous merchandise, fish, vegetables, lumber, and transportation of passengers.

Cape Vincent Harbor, N. Y.: This harbor is located on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, 2½ miles from Lake Ontario. Tonnage for 1921, 3,058 tons. Proposed expenditure, $500. This expenditure is for general supervision and such minor surveys and examinations as may be necessary to keep track of the condition of the harbor.

Blackwater River, Va.: A small stream emptying into Albemarle Sound. Tonnage for 1921, 2,544 tons. Proposed expenditure, $2,000 for the removal of obstructions to navigation in the shape of logs, snags, and other similar obstructions. The average expenditure for maintenance for the five years 1918 to 1922 was $419.80. The commerce carried consists principally of peanuts, cotton, fertilizer, and general merchandise. The stream affords navigation facilities for a section of the country without other means of transportation.

Pamlico and Tar Rivers, N. C.: This stream affords a navigable channel at least 6 feet deep from Pamlico Sound to Greenville, N. C., a distance of 60 miles, and a natural channel, cleared of snags, for 27 miles farther. The commerce for this stream, stated in tabular statement prepared in the office of the Chief of Engineers, showing the amounts stated in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers as those that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year June 30, 1924, for maintenance and improvement of river and harbor works, and commerce for 1921 is in error in the amount of commerce stated, namely, 644 tons. This commerce for 1921 amounted to 145,772 tons, which was the least that had been in five years, with the exception of 1920, when it was 139,951 tons. The stream is an important commercial highway.

Contentnea Creek, N. C.: This is a small stream emptying into Neuse River about 32 miles above New Bern, N. C. It has been improved for a length of 63 miles, and it has been an important commercial stream and has had a material effect in the development of the country. It is still occasionally used. The proposed expenditure of $1,500 is entirely for snagging, in order to prevent the stream from being entirely closed to commerce.

Savannah River above Augusta, Ga.: The portion of the Savannah River included in this improvement extends from Augusta upstream a distance of 45 miles. The project provides for light-draft navigation to permit of the carrying of cotton, food products, and lumber in small boats. The work consists in the removal of snags and loose rocks. The proposed expenditure is $1,000. The average expenditure for the past five years has been (from 1918 to 1912, inclusive) $768.10.

Kissimmee River, Fla.: A small stream emptying into Lake Okeechobee. The commerce for 1921 was 2,215 tons. Proposed expenditure, $5,000, for maintenance by a small amount of dredging. The stream affords a navigable waterway which facilitates the transportation of fruits and vegetables which are largely raised in the section of the country tributary to this stream. The small commerce has been due to the lack of a suitable channel, which has made the navigation difficult.

Holmes River, Fla.: A small stream in Alabama and Florida which empties in the Choctawhatchee River, Fla., about 27 miles above its mouth. Commerce for 1921 was 563 tons. Proposed expenditure, $1,680, for snagging operations in the lower part of the river in order to permit of the utilization of the stream for such commerce as may desire to use it. The commerce carried during 1921 consisted of fertilizer carried upstream and resin and turpentine downstream. While the commerce is small, it is important to the community, and could not be carried on at all were it not for the small amount of snagging work proposed.

Boeuf River, La.: This river rises in Arkansas and flows in a general southwesterly direction, entering the Ouachita River 81 miles above the mouth of the Black River. The commerce for 1921 was 1,495 tons. Proposed expenditure, $5,000, for snagging. The commerce consists of timber, farm products, and general merchandise carried in small boats. The snagging is necessary in order that the river may be navigated.

Bayou Bartholomew, La. and Ark.: This stream rises in Jefferson County, Ark., and enters the Ouachita River near Ouachita, La., 210 miles above the mouth of the Black River. The commerce for 1921 was 1,805 tons. Proposed expenditure, $2,500, for snagging. The commerce consists of lumber, farm products, and general merchandise. The proposed work is necessary in order that the stream may not be entirely closed by snags.

Bayous D'Arbonne and Corney, La.: These streams combine and enter the Ouachita River, La., about 189 miles above the mouth of the Black River. Commerce for 1921 was 1,660 tons. Proposed expenditure, $2,000, for snagging. The commerce consists of timber, farm products, and general merchandise. The commerce for 1921 was much less than in preceding years, due to the fact that sawmills located on the river were not in operation. The work proposed is snagging, which is necessary to prevent the stream becoming entirely closed to traffic.

Steele and Washington Bayous and Lake Washington, Miss.: These streams combine and enter the Yazoo River about 8 miles above its mouth. Tonnage for 1921 was 4,662 tons. Proposed expenditure, $2,500, for snagging. The usual tonnage on these streams has ranged from 10,000 to 27,000 tons. The tonnage for 1921 was due to the falling off in operation of the sawmills. The proposed work is necessary in order to prevent the stream becoming entirely closed to commerce.

The total amount involved in all of the projects referred to above, which are all of the projects upon which it is proposed to expend any funds during 1924 which have tonnages of less than 5,000 tons each, amounts to $137,180, except for the two projects, Plymouth Harbor, Mass., and Umpqua Bay and River, Oreg., on which the amounts are, respectively, $51,000 and $276,500, which are cooperative projects where local interests are to pay one-half of the total costs and where, in the case of the Umpqua project, local interests have already proceeded with and practically completed their share of the work. The amount which it is proposed to expend by the United States is merely to meet the expenditures already made by local interests. Both of these projects, it should be noted also, were adopted by the September 22, 1922, act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I had this memorandum read because it gives the statement of the War Department in reference to the minor projects which have been assailed in connection with the discussion of the bill. It gives a full and complete explanation with regard to all the projects where less than 5,000 tons of freight were carried last year. The expenditures are very small, and the authorization has been made by the Congress.

Although I think the development of commerce lies along the great rivers, in large part, these smaller expenditures are on short rivers, in order to make it possible to reach the ports, so that commerce may get out to sea. They are improvements on small streams, in localities where there are no other facilities for transporting commerce, in the main.

As the Constitution of the United States gives the power to the Federal Government to look after the commerce of the people of the United States, I do not see any reason why a small fishing village may not have its commerce considered and an opportunity given to carry the product of its fishing industry out to sea by an expenditure of $5,000, as much as a great port like New York should have its facilities improved by the expenditure of $50,000,000, as sometimes happens.

So I do not think a project is to be condemned just because it is small. Of course the amount of the expenditure ought to be considered in connection with the amount of business actually done; but in reference to the small projects which have been castigated in this debate, the expenditures are very small, and those improvements will be of as great service proportionately to the people who get the advantage of them as those on the greater projects will be to the larger commerce of a larger port.

Without cutting off any debate, when the time comes I wish to make a motion to lay the pending amendment and the amendment thereto on the table. My purpose in doing that will be to bring directly before us the issue as to whether the Senate stands for the appropriation of the $56,000,000 for river and harbor improvements, which was recommended by the engineers, or whether it does not.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Alabama intend to make but one motion to table, and that that motion shall carry both the amendment of the Senator from Idaho and the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not making the motion in order to cut off debate, but debate will close in eight minutes, anyhow. I am not going to make the motion until the eight minutes are up, if anyone wants to take the floor. My only purpose is to bring forward the direct issue as to whether the United States Senate stands for the recommendation of the engineers or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So far as the Senate's vote on the motion which the Senator says he will make is concerned, there will be no direct issue left. Some Senators are in favor of an appropriation of $27,000,000 and others are in favor of an appropriation of $42,000,000. The Senator's motion will prevent them from voting for the amount of their choice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Some of them are in favor of $56,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the majority of the Senate is in favor of an appropriation of $56,000,000, why should we delay the Senate by voting for other amounts?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has not told quite all the story. There are some Senators who might prefer $56,000,000 to $27,000,000, but would prefer $42,000,000 to either. The Senator's motion will make it impossible for those Senators to vote that way. But I think a way will be found.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that; but I want to test the Senate to find out who is standing for $56,000,000, the recommendation of the engineers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there anything in the normal procedure which would fail to bring such a test?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know why we should vote on the different figures if we are going to find that a majority of the Senate is for the larger amount. If it is not, then we will have to determine between the other propositions. I bring the issue at the top of the ladder instead of the bottom, that is all. The Senator from New York wants me to start at the bottom of the ladder, but I want to start at the top.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; if I had my choice I would start with $42,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand; but my purpose is to bring the direct issue before the Senate as to whether the Senate stands for $56,000,000, the amount recommended by the engineers and carried in the bill by the House and reported by the committee to the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Then a vote in favor of the Senator's motion will mean that the Senator casting the vote stands for the appropriation of $56,000,000?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. I think that is a fair presentation of the case. I ask that that motion may be pending, or that I may have an opportunity to make it when 4 o'clock arrives. I do not want to cut off the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wanted to say just a word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the Senator until one minute before 4, if he will allow me to take the floor then to make the motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have just noticed an observation made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], on yesterday at page 3200 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In the course of his remarks he said:

> There is a river in Florida, the name of which I can not pronounce, upon which it is proposed to expend $90,000, as I read it, for maintenance, upon which 5,000 tons of commerce were carried last year.

The Senator is entirely mistaken as to the location of the river. What he had in mind, as shown by the hearings and the list of projects to be taken care of by the engineers, was undoubtedly the Chattahoochee River, where it is proposed to expend that amount for maintenance. In volume 1, part 1, of the report of the Chief of Engineers, page 866, the Chattahoochee River is described as follows:

> The Chattahoochee River rises in the north central part of the State of Georgia and flows in a southwesterly direction to West Point and thence in a southerly direction to join with the Flint at the southwest corner of the State of Georgia, forming the Apalachicola River.

After it gets into Florida, there the combination of the Chattahoochee and the Flint make the Apalachicola, but the Chattahoochee River is the river to which the Senator referred, and the Report of the Chief of Engineers shows precisely what the proposed operation will be, and shows the reason for this recommendation. The amount of commerce was comparatively small last year because one of the boats was destroyed by fire and they have not been able to replace it, and the tonnage is comparatively small, but it is a very valuable tonnage. It is composed of cotton, fertilizer, grain, and naval stores. The river is a navigable stream. The depth of water is, of course, not very great, 3 or 4 feet, and the commerce is carried largely by packet boats. It is proposed to apply this money for the following purposes:

> For dredging operations between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., $30,000, using the U. S. dredge Muscogee; for repairs to, extension, and construction of jetties, $30,000; for snagging operations from Columbus, Ga., to the mouth, $15,000; for the construction of two new steel barges, one steel hull quarterboat, and one inspection launch, $28,000; for minor repairs to plant, $5,000; for care of idle plant, $5,000; and for overhead expenses and superintendence, $12,000. The above covers $35,000 for new work and $90,000 for maintenance.

That is the project on the Chattahoochee River, to which the Senator referred. It does not touch Florida at all. Besides that, the report says:

> While the amount required for maintenance is $60,259.02 greater than the average amount expended for maintenance during the preceding five years, this may be explained by the fact that appropriations for the past several years have been so small that maintenance operations could not be kept up to date. The plant has deteriorated to such an extent that extensive replacements are necessary.

That accounts for the large amount of maintenance in that item.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I now move that the pending amendment and the amendment thereto be laid on the table. Pending that motion, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Harris	McCormick
Bayard	Dial	Heflin	McCumber
Borah	Dillingham	Hitchcock	McKellar
Brookhart	Ernst	Johnson	McKinley
Broussard	Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary
Bursum	Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Moses
Calder	France	Kendrick	Myers
Cameron	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Nelson
Capper	George	King	New
Caraway	Gerry	Ladd	Nicholson
Colt	Glass	La Follette	Norbeck
Couzens	Gooding	Lenroot	Norris
Culberson	Harreld	Lodge	Oddie

Overman	Robinson	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.
Page	Sheppard	Sutherland	Warren
Pepper	Shields	Swanson	Watson
Pittman	Shortridge	Townsend	Weller
Poindexter	Smoot	Trammell	Williams
Pomerene	Spencer	Underwood	Willis
Ransdell	Stanfield	Wadsworth
Reed, Pa.	Stanley	Walsh, Mass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the amendment thereto offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. LADD (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIELDS (when the name of Mr. REED of Missouri was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent on account of the death of his law partner, J. G. L. Harvey. If the Senator from Missouri were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Bayard	France	McNary	Shortridge
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	George	Oddie	Stanfield
Calder	Gerry	Overman	Stanley
Cameron	Glass	Pepper	Sutherland
Caraway	Gooding	Pittman	Swanson
Colt	Harris	Pomerene	Trammell
Culberson	Heflin	Ransdell	Underwood
Dial	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Jones, Wash.	Robinson	Williams
Fernald	Kendrick	Sheppard
Fletcher	McKellar	Shields

NAYS—35.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Sterling
Borah	Keyes	Myers	Townsend
Brookhart	King	New	Wadsworth
Capper	La Follette	Nicholson	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Lenroot	Norbeck	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Norris	Watson
Dillingham	McCormick	Page	Weller
Harreld	McCumber	Poindexter	Willis
Hitchcock	McKinley	Smoot

NOT VOTING—15.

Ball	Elkins	Ladd	Reed, Mo.
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Cummins	Harrison	Owen	Smith
Edge	Kellogg	Phipps

So Mr. BORAH's amendment and Mr. LENROOT's amendment to the amendment were laid on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move, in line 12, page 106, to strike out the numerals "$56,589,910" and to insert "$50,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. FLETCHER asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the former ballot, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LADD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the transfer of whose pair has just been announced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], is necessarily absent. If present the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Townsend
Borah	Kendrick	Myers	Wadsworth
Brookhart	Keyes	New	Walsh, Mass.
Calder	King	Nicholson	Walsh, Mont.
Capper	Ladd	Norbeck	Warren
Curtis	La Follette	Norris	Watson
Dillingham	Lenroot	Page	Weller
Fernald	Lodge	Poindexter	Willis
Harreld	McCormick	Smoot
Hitchcock	McCumber	Sterling

NAYS—44.

Bayard	France	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shields
Bursum	George	Nelson	Shortridge
Cameron	Gerry	Oddie	Spencer
Caraway	Glass	Overman	Stanfield
Colt	Gooding	Pepper	Stanley
Couzens	Harris	Pittman	Sutherland
Culberson	Heflin	Pomerene	Swanson
Dial	Johnson	Ransdell	Trammell
Ernst	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.	Underwood
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson	Williams

NOT VOTING—14.

Ball	Elkins	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Hale	Owen	Smith
Cummins	Harrison	Phipps
Edge	Kellogg	Reed, Mo.

So Mr. WADSWORTH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not desire to offer an amendment to this particular section, but I have an amendment to offer to another title of the bill, although it relates to river and harbor work. I am not certain whether the unanimous-consent agreement made on yesterday would prohibit my explaining the amendment or not, if, indeed, an explanation is desired. However, I will offer the amendment at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt the Senator from New York can obtain unanimous consent to explain his amendment for a reasonable time.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator's amendment propose to increase or decrease the appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It makes no change in that respect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 22, line 9, after the numerals "$1,000,000," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter when in the opinion of the Secretary of War the change of station of an officer of the Corps of Engineers is primarily in the interest of river and harbor improvements, the mileage and other allowances to which he may be entitled incident to such change of station may be paid from appropriations for such improvements.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the amendment almost explains itself. The amendment is offered to the title "Mileage of the Army," on page 22. Under the amendment if the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, desired to transfer a district engineer, for example, from the South Atlantic district to the Pacific coast and put him to work on a project out there for which he was especially fitted, and the work related solely to a river and harbor improvement, that officer's mileage and transportation allowances could be charged against the appropriation for rivers and harbors rather than being taken out of the appropriation for mileage of the Army. The whole thing would amount to only about $4,000 or $5,000 a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from New York a question I desire to say that I think the amendment is not worded quite properly. The amendment, I think, refers to the transfer being principally in the interest of river and harbor improvements. I desire to amend the amendment so that it shall read "solely in the interest of river and harbor improvements."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The word used in the amendment is "primarily."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the word should be "solely," and I suggest that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The difficulty in connection with that suggestion, as I understand it—although I am not certain that I would oppose the suggestion of the Senator from Florida—is that an Engineer officer while assigned to river and harbor work perhaps for one hour in a month might be required to fill out some blanks or make some kind of return to the War Department which did not relate to river and harbor work but that had to do with his status as an officer in the Regular Army; and if we put in the word "solely" it would, I fear, make the amendment quite useless. I think the word "primarily" covers it, and we can trust the Secretary of War to see that it is properly administered. In any event the officer has to be paid, and the question is, Shall he be paid mileage and transportation allowances out of the appropriation "Mileage of the Army" or out of the river and harbor appropriation? I believe in making river and harbor appropriations stand on their own feet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. An officer's mileage and transportation allowances are generally carried, if I am not mistaken, in the military appropriation bill. Is that true?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I see no reason why an officer's mileage and transportation when he is engaged in river and harbor work should not continue to be carried in the military appropriation bill, just as when he is doing any other character of work to which he might possibly be detailed. This can not mean anything except a thrust at the river and harbor bill; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not desiring to present an amendment or anything of that kind, but there is an item in the bill concerning which I should like to have some information. I have a letter here which, perhaps, has been called to the attention of the Senator from New York with reference to the work which the War Department is doing in the way of ferreting out crimes and criminals, and so forth. This letter is under date of October 16, 1922. It is written by W. D. Long, first lieutenant, Seventh United States Infantry, intelligence officer. It says:

DEAR SIR: The intelligence service of the Army has for its primary purpose the surveillance of all organizations or elements hostile or potentially hostile to the Government of this country, or who seek to overthrow the Government by violence.

Then there is another paragraph, explanatory also:

Not only are we interested in these organizations because they have as their object the overthrow of the Government but also because they attempt to undermine and subvert the loyalty of our soldiers.

With the few scattered military posts in this part of the country, it is obviously impossible to cover all points as thoroughly as they should be, hence it is necessary in many cases to trust to the cooperation of law-enforcement officers whose duties and whose knowledge of a particular locality give them a thorough insight into such matters.

What I desire to ask the Senator from New York is: Under what authority of law is this work carried on?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that work is not carried on. The officer who wrote that letter completely misstated the case.

Mr. BORAH. I am glad to know that. I did not know what the facts were.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The thing is very important, and I think we might as well get a clear understanding of it now. The young officer out at Vancouver Barracks was apparently carried away by his enthusiasm, for he certainly has described a state of affairs which does not exist and has not existed since the close of the World War.

In that connection I desire to have put in the RECORD a letter addressed by the Secretary of War to Mr. Samuel Gompers, under date of January 30, together with another letter addressed by the Secretary of War to Mr. W. G. Lee. Mr. Gompers, of course, is the president of the American Federation of Labor, and Mr. Lee is the president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. I think it would be well if the letter to Mr. Gompers were read to the Senate now. The letter to Mr. Lee, being practically the same, need not be read; and following that I am going to ask to have put into the RECORD a statement as to just what the Military Intelligence Division does. The first letter I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 30, 1923.

Mr. SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor,
901 Massachusetts Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GOMPERS: It was recently brought to my attention that a young intelligence officer at Vancouver Barracks, Wash., had sent out a circular letter to law-enforcement officials in the vicinity of that post. In this letter it is intimated that the intelligence service of the Army is interested in the American Federation of Labor as an element potentially hostile to the Government of this country. I have since learned that this letter has been printed on page 122 of The Nation of January 31, 1923.

The Military Intelligence Division does not conduct in time of peace any investigations of the nature indicated by the above-mentioned officer. I am sure you will agree with me that the utterly ridiculous assertion that the American Federation of Labor should be considered as an organization having as its object the overthrow of the Government should not even be accorded the dignity of a denial. I have directed a thorough investigation of this matter and propose to apply such corrective and disciplinary measures as may prove to be merited.

I sincerely regret this incident and hope that you will attach to it only the importance which should be given to the thoughtless and immature action of a young man whose enthusiasm has completely dwarfed his judgment and discretion.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask to have the other letter and statement printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 30, 1923.

Mr. W. G. LEE,
President Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MR. LEE: It has recently come to my attention that the intelligence officer at Vancouver Barracks, Wash., has sent out a circular letter to law-enforcement officials of local communities, intimating that the Military Intelligence Division of the Army is interested in the railroad brotherhoods as elements potentially hostile to the purposes of this Government. This letter was printed on page 122 of the Nation, January 31, 1923.

The Military Intelligence Division conducts no investigations in time of peace of the nature indicated in this young officer's letter. I feel assured that you will agree with me that his assertions are so absurd that the War Department should not accord the dignity of a denial to the suggestion that organized labor is looked upon as a hostile organization. I have directed a thorough investigation of the matter and shall apply such corrective and disciplinary measures as may prove warranted.

I sincerely regret this incident and trust that you will look upon it only as the immature action of a young man whose enthusiasm has completely dwarfed his judgment.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

—

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF WAR GIVEN TO PRESS ON INCIDENT AT VANCOUVER BARRACKS, WASH.

It having recently come to the attention of the Secretary of War that the unauthorized activities of subordinate officers have in a few isolated instances occasioned the possibility of a public misunderstanding of the proper function of military intelligence in time of peace, he has directed the publication of the following statement:

The surveillance of domestic organizations or groups is not at all the purpose of the Military Intelligence Division, the authorized activities of which are clearly set forth in Army Regulations, 10–15, as follows:

"The Military Intelligence Division is charged, in general, with those duties of the War Department General Staff which relate to the collection, evaluation, and dissemination of military information.

"The Military Intelligence Division is specifically charged with the preparation of plans and policies and the supervision of all activities concerning—

"(1) Military topographical surveys and maps.
"(2) The custody of the General Staff map and photograph collection.
"(3) Military attachés, observers, and foreign-language students.
"(4) Intelligence personnel of all units.
"(5) Liaison with other intelligence agencies of the Government and with duly accredited foreign military attachés and missions.
"(6) Codes and ciphers.
"(7) Translations.
"(8) Relations with the press.
"(9) Censorship in time of war."

During the World War our widespread military interests necessitated special measures which resulted in authority being given for the Military Intelligence Division to conduct investigations of far-reaching character. During the period of demobilization and contraction of the Military Establishment to a normal peace-time basis activities of this nature were transferred as rapidly as seemed practicable to the proper civil agencies.

Not only have the instructions which were in effect for the operation of the military intelligence service during the war and shortly thereafter been rescinded, but repeatedly since that time instructions have been issued emphasizing the fact that the military authorities are expressly prohibited from making investigations in time of peace other than within the Military Establishment.

The following paragraphs quoted from the above-mentioned instructions indicate the intention of the War Department:

"At certain posts and stations along the coasts and frontiers where information in connection with actual or theoretical plans of defense is required, the necessity for intelligence officers is clear. It is also necessary to appoint the intelligence officers prescribed by the tables of organization and to employ them in training their personnel in combat intelligence. But it is no longer necessary to have intelligence officers at all posts and stations in the United States, as the conditions requiring their employment have long ceased to exist.

"With the foregoing in mind, a corps area commander will appreciate the necessity for giving his personal attention to seeing that his staff are correctly oriented as to intelligence work in general and as to its extremely limited application to domestic affairs. It is a case of not only revoking obsolete orders and instructions but of guiding such intelligence officers as are retained to a correct mental conception of the duties of military intelligence within the United States."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand the matter now, no such work is being done?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

Mr. BORAH. With reference to the American Federation of Labor or any other organization?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Or any other.

I think, Mr. President, in order that that matter may be made perfectly clear, that I ought to read a few very short paragraphs from a statement issued by the Secretary of War on this incident:

It having recently come to the attention of the Secretary of War that the unauthorized activities of subordinate officers have in a few isolated instances occasioned the possibility of a public misunderstanding of the proper function of military intelligence in time of peace, he has directed the publication of the following statement:

The surveillance of domestic organizations or groups is not at all the purpose of the Military Intelligence Division, the authorized activities of which are clearly set forth in Army Regulations, 10–15, as follows:

"The Military Intelligence Division is charged, in general, with those duties of the War Department General Staff which relate to the collection, evaluation, and dissemination of military information.

"The Military Intelligence Division is specifically charged with the preparation of plans and policies and the supervision of all activities concerning:

"'(1) Military topographical surveys and maps.

"'(2) The custody of the General Staff map and photograph collection.

"'(3) Military attachés, observers, and foreign-language students.

"'(4) Intelligence personnel of all units.

"'(5) Liaison with other intelligence agencies of the Government and with duly accredited foreign military attachés and missions.

"'(6) Codes and ciphers.

"'(7) Translations.

"'(8) Relations with the press.

"'(9) Censorship in time of war.'"

That covers all the duties of military intelligence in time of peace.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I happen to know of some other amendments which Senators desire to offer. I hope they can arrange to offer them now. To-morrow we are to have a discussion on at least two amendments the proposers of which, I understand, are not ready to discuss them this afternoon.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On line 15, page 38, after the word "hospital," it is proposed to add the words:

and $20,000 to build a heating plant for that part of the fort used by the School of Fire.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to reinstate in the bill an appropriation which was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Within the last year the several schools of fire, so-called, that were located at various forts in the United States have been consolidated at Fort Sill, Okla., and they are occupying a part of the barracks there. It is a very important function of the War Department. I visited the fort myself some time ago and visited this department. The buildings in which the School of Fire is conducted are not equipped with steam heat. They are heated by stoves, and the danger of fire is enormous. If a fire were to occur in those buildings to-day, the loss to the United States would be a million dollars or more, and yet they are there in this exposed condition. The Budget Bureau, realizing this, recommended that $20,000 be appropriated to put in a heating plant by which these buildings could be heated by steam, but, for some reason, the House saw fit to leave it out and the Senate likewise. My amendment proposes to reinsert that item in the bill.

By way of explanation, I may say that the School of Fire trains mechanics so that they may keep the airplanes in condition in time of war, keep the automobiles in condition in time of war, keep the cannon and mountings of the cannon in condition, and so forth. It trains men in those particular lines of a technical character. In order to train those men they have a lot of high-priced equipment, a lot of high-priced tools, a lot of high-priced machinery, which they tear down and rebuild in teaching these boys how to manipulate machinery and handle machinery and repair machinery. This is a very necessary adjunct of the War Department; and it is to avoid any possibility of loss by reason of fire that I am urging that this amendment be adopted.

I offer the amendment and ask for its adoption.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from Oklahoma says, that this item was contained in the Budget estimate and that it was left out by the House and left out by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. There is no doubt that this item and about seven others looking toward providing for new construction or new equipment at various Army stations and forts are desirable. The committee, in calculating the total of the bill and in examining a considerable number of new construction projects suggested by the Budget estimate, made up its mind that it could not possibly adopt them all and ask the Senate to pass the bill with such largely increased totals; so this item for the heating system at Fort Sill, as well as an item for continuing construction at Fort Sam Houston, an item for new construction at Fort Myer, Va., across the river here, half a dozen items for new construction at Hawaii, and two or three items for new construction in Panama have been necessarily left out. As I said upon a former occasion, the bill has been turned lopsided by the vast increase in the river and harbor appropriation; and that increase, in the judgment of the committee, makes impossible for the time being the granting of these new construction projects in the Army itself.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRELD. Are any of the other things that the Senator mentions in imminent danger of fire, as the buildings of this School of Fire are?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; in several ways the Government is in grave danger of losing property, either by absolute destruction or by deterioration. For example, in the Hawaiian Islands we have $7,000,000 worth of stores lying mostly in the open, covered by tarpaulins or temporary shack-like sheds, exposed in a tropical climate. Last year we appropriated for six storehouses. They have been built. This bill carries an appropriation for six more. The department wanted 18 more. We simply have not the money. At Panama there is grave need for storage to shelter Army property in connection with the Panama defenses. At one side of the Isthmus there is no storage, and the Government property is wasted in constantly being transported across the Isthmus for use at both ends of the line. At Camp Eustis, Va., we have a regiment of Infantry living in the war-time cantonments, run up with matches and glue. The Senator knows what they are like—probably the same type of buildings in which this School of Fire is housed at Fort Sill.

Mr. HARRELD. No; the buildings are all right there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The buildings at Camp Eustis are of the typical cantonment type. If they catch fire, and there is any wind blowing, the whole thing will go, and the whole regiment will be out of shelter, and probably most of its equipment will be lost.

The Fort Myer project was to take care of that situation for building permanent quarters at Fort Myer, but the committee thought we could not allow all these requests. Every one of them is desirable. The request made by the Senator is absolutely reasonable, but when we got the bill up to the point where it was $21,000,000 above the Budget estimate the committee was forced to make up its mind to refuse some of them.

Mr. HARRELD. I would like to ask the Senator if he does not think that is poor business?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is poor business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 106, line 12, after the numerals "$56,589,910" and before the period, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of that sum shall be expended for improvements on the Missouri River between St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is debate in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order on the river and harbor item. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate finishes its business this afternoon it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the notice of an amendment of the rules which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the notice.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate I hereby give notice in writing that I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of offering to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 13793) the following amendment:

At the proper place insert the following: "That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations to appoint representatives to a conference to be held in the city of Washington, which shall be charged with the consideration of the causes and purposes of present military and naval expenditures, and the formulation of measures for the reduction of land and naval armaments, for the improvement of industry and commerce, the assurance of public order, and the promotion of peace throughout the world."

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 5, after the word "each," strike out all down to and including the word "regulations," in line 9 on said page.

Mr. STERLING. The language proposed to be stricken out by this amendment is as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter civilians employed in the hostess and library services and paid from the appropriation for military post exchanges may be appointed by the Secretary of War without reference to civil-service rules and regulations.

I see no reason why these civilian employees, though connected with the Army service, should not be required to come under the civil-service rules. It would seem quite appropriate, indeed, that librarians, those who have the handling of the libraries at these posts, should be qualified, and their qualifications and fitness tested by open competitive examinations, the same as other civilian employees of the Government.

I want to say further that if in the case of any hostess at any post it is desirable that the civil-service rules relative to competitive examinations be waived, the President has the authority under the civil service law to waive the rules and make the appointment notwithstanding. There is no need that I can see of exempting either of these positions from the civil-service rules. I want to say that a like paragraph in the last Army appropriation bill contained no provision exempting these particular classes of employees from civil-service examinations, and I see no reason why this bill should contain an exemption clause. I think the proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from South Dakota will not prevail. The employees in the hostess houses of the Army, so called, who are very few in number, and the librarians, are women, I think all of them women who accompanied troops during the war with Germany and engaged in the so-called welfare activities. They are experienced along these lines. The character of work which they have to do in Army posts and camps in running the hostess houses, which are the equivalent of clubs, at which the relatives and visitors of the soldiers may be received and made comfortable, and in the libraries where the soldiers come and go, taking out books, and where they are guided somewhat in their reading, is unlike the work done by anybody else among the civilian employees of the Government. I doubt if any civil-service examination could possibly determine whether an applicant for such a place was fit.

These women are very carefully selected from among those who have had this experience. I think there are only 30 of them left. If there are any more than that, it is very few. I do not believe civil service should apply to them. It has not applied in the past. The examinations which they have had to take have been made up by the supervisor of the service under the approval, of course, of the commanding officers and the Secretary of War. The thing has been running beautifully, and there has not been a complaint against it. These women have performed a splendid service. They are highly respected by the officers and enlisted men with whom they come in contact every day, and I can see no reason for subjecting this little service to the rules and regulations of the National Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in reply. I think the Civil Service Commission itself would be very well qualified to ascertain the duties and responsibilities of even hostesses at these various posts, and could frame examination questions accordingly and apply civil-service rules accordingly. With reference to that, if it is thought desirable that any one of these hostesses, or all of them, should be exempt from civil-service examination, the President of the United States can waive the civil-service rules which would require such an examination. He is expressly authorized to do that. But it seems to me that there are good reasons for requiring the librarians to take the examinations. A man who is to take the place of a librarian ought to know something about books, about handling books, about the needs and tastes of those who call for books. He ought to be something of a guide and a director to those who seek to avail themselves of the libraries. I think this amendment ought to prevail. Where there is no good reason for the exemption, I do not like to see the civil-service requirements set aside. Wherever there are civilian employees, unless good reasons are shown to the contrary, those employees ought to be subject to civil-service rules. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on page 3, line 1, I move to strike out "$840" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,140," in order to equalize the salaries of these employees with the salaries paid similar employees in the Navy Department. I believe I understood the Senator from New York to say he has no objection to the amendment. I will ask the Secretary to report the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the words "13 telephone switchboard operators, at," strike out "$840" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,140."

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that should be adopted as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assured the Senator from Tennessee that I would not raise the point of order, for this reason, that we have an intolerable situation in the joint telephone exchange of the War and Navy Departments. The telephone operators working for the Navy Department and sitting at the same switchboards alongside the War Department operators are paid, as I recollect, about $400 or $500 a year more than the War Department operators.

Mr. McKELLAR. Three hundred dollars more. The War Department operators are paid $840, while the Navy Department operators are paid $1,140.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I overstated it. It is $300 more.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that in the reclassification this matter will be taken care of, and I suggest that we make the salaries the same this year, and let the committee handling the reclassification determine what is a fair salary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a great many switchboard operators drawing $840 a year. That matter will be regulated as soon as the reclassification bill is enacted into law, which I expect will be the case before the close of the present session of Congress. In fact, I am quite sure it will pass. Therefore I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to give notice of a motion to suspend the rules and reoffer the amendment to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Pursuant to rule 40 of the standing rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice that I shall move to suspend paragraph 3 of rule 16, for the purpose of proposing to H. R. 13793 the following amendment:

On page 3, line 1, to strike out "$840" and insert "$1,140."

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on page 73, line 20, I move to strike out the numerals "$100" and to insert in lieu thereof "$40,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 73, line 30, under the heading of "Ordnance equipment for rifle ranges for civilian instruction," the Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out "$100" and in lieu thereof to insert "$40,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator that the committee took care of the rifle-practice proposition and went, I thought, considerably above the Budget estimate. On the trophy matter we also raised the amount, because of the information which the Senator gave before the committee. But the proposition now presented by the Senator has not been estimated for and was not reported by the committee. I think the committee feel that the amount should not be increased. I am constrained, therefore, to make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it was not estimated for and not reported by a standing committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FRED G. LEITH.

Mr. GERRY. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of Fred G. Leith, United States Navy, and I submit a report (No. 1116) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the service rendered by Fred G. Leith, United States Navy, in the Army of the United States during the World War shall be considered as if rendered in the Navy of the United States for all purposes connected with continuous service in the Navy of the United States, and that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records of the said Fred G. Leith in the Navy Department to be corrected to conform with this authorization, to the end that the said Fred G. Leith shall be entitled to all pay, benefits, and emoluments conferred by law or regulation for continuous service in the Navy of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN SISKIYOU COUNTY, CALIF.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3892) authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "in any suit" and insert "consent is hereby given that a suit or suits may be"; and on page 2, at the end of line 11, after the numerals "1905," to insert "and in any such suit," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent is hereby given that a suit or suits may be instituted by or in behalf of the State of California in the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the right, title, and interest of such State to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif., alleged to have been ceded by such State to the United States by act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An act authorizing the United States Government to lower the water levels of any or all of the following lakes: Lower or Little Klamath Lake, Tule or Rhett Lake, Goose Lake, and Clear Lake, situated in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, and to use any part or all of the beds of said lakes for the storage of water in connection with the irrigation and reclamation operations conducted by the Reclamation Service of the United States; also ceding to the United States all the right, title, interest, or claim of the State of California to any lands uncovered by the lowering of the water levels of any or all of said lakes not already disposed of by the State," approved February 3, 1905, and in any such suit the right, title, and interest of such State and of the United States may be fully tested and determined if the Secretary of the Interior is made a party to such suit.

Upon the request of such Secretary the Attorney General of the United States is authorized and directed to defend the right, title, and interest of the United States to such land or any part thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate take a recess in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 9, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 8 (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Martin Brown, of Michigan, to be United States marshal, western district of Michigan, vice Herman O'Connor, resigned, effective March 1, 1923.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Mrs. Eva A. Brittain, of Colorado, to be register of the land office at Leadville, Colo.;

Frank P. Light, of Oregon, to be register of the land office at Lakeview, Oreg.; and Elzie K. Fritts, of Washington, to be register of the land office at Waterville, Wash.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 8 (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Daniel G. Thomas, Colton.

IOWA.

Glen C. Briggs, Brandon.
Mayme A. Kneeland, Clermont.
Cornelius A. Rubly, Elma.
Albert E. Fentress, Greeley.
Smiley B. Hedges, Kellerton.
Otho O. Yoder, West Branch.
Charles F. Chambers, West Union.

KANSAS.

Lewis Pickrell, Minneapolis.

MASSACHUSETTS.

John C. Angus, Andover.
Erastus T. Bearse, Chatham.
Merritt C. Skilton, East Northfield.
Herbert W. Damon, Framingham.
Sadie G. Donahue, Huntington.
Thomas Fisken, Ludlow.
Elmer E. Landers, Oak Bluffs.
Robert M. Lowe, Rockport.
George Hall, Smiths.
Amasa W. Baxter, West Falmouth.

MICHIGAN.

Josephine O'Leary, Carrollton.
William C. Thompson, Midland.

OHIO.

Charles C. McMaken, Covington.
Herbert E. Whitney, Danville.
William M. Carlisle, Gambier.

TENNESSEE.

Frances S. Pickering, Carthage.
Clarence E. Locke, Ethridge.
Merle Morgan, Graysville.
Willis F. Arnold, Jackson.
Harold T. Hester, Portland.

TEXAS.

Charles J. Hostrasser, Hearne.
Daniel B. Gilmore, McGregor.

UTAH.

Ralph Guthrie, Salt Lake City.
Alfred L. Hanks, Tooele.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, that the tabernacle of God is with men and within its folds we have a refuge in every time of need. O in a world of so many stricken hopes we thank Thee for the shadow and the shelter of the Most High! Lead us to believe that there is instruction, discipline, and blessing in faithfulness to duty. O let us care for our characters. May not failure nor weakness mar the beauty and the force of the fine qualities of manhood. As we abide in Thy mercy, may we trust Thee, obey Thee, and honor Thee, through Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and base it on an article which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman wait until some unanimous requests of Members can be considered?

Mr. HERRICK. I withhold it for that long and no longer.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. HOCH, for three days on account of illness.

Mr. KINDRED, indefinitely on account of illness.

Mr. RAMSEYER, for eight days on account of sickness in family.

Mr. SIEGEL, for five days on account of sickness in family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma rises to a question of personal privilege. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LITTLE. If the Chair will permit, I want to ask leave to extend my remarks by printing a couple of little editorials, one from the Outlook of January 31, 1923, one from the American Economist of February 2, 1923, and a letter from John H. Wigmore of January 15, 1923.

The SPEAKER. Is there objectoin?

Mr. STAFFORD. On what subject?

Mr. LITTLE. On my code.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The editorials and letter are as follows:

[The Outlook, January 31, 1923.]

LITTLE'S BIG BOOK.

Citizens who are not lawyers will be surprised to learn that there has been no digest and codification of Federal laws since 1878. Never before has such a time elapsed in the publishing of a compendium of Federal laws, nor have any of the States (with one single exception) allowed their statutes to go uncodified for 25 years. Every lawyer knows what a tedious and intricate piece of work it is to find out what the law of the United States is on any given topic. There has been a general and definite demand for some recognized and authoritative work of the kind needed.

Now, Mr. EDWARD C. LITTLE, of Kansas, who is chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws for the House of Representatives, has completed such a work and the House has twice approved of the book as valuable and needed. The Senate, however, for some reason or other, seems to hang fire on this matter, although a high authority in legal literature, Dean Wigmore, of Northwestern University, has declared: "The state of things has now become intolerable. Since the completion of your draft revision the failure to act has become a disgrace on the part of Congress. The shame of leaving the Federal laws in this condition is no longer excusable on any ground."

To-day, if anyone wants to know precisely what the Federal statute law is on any individual point, he can not be sure that he is right until he has examined minutely 36 volumes of statutes. He is lucky if he finds what he wants even then, for many enactments on individual points are hidden away in appropriation bills or under other misleading titles, and even the most accurate and painstaking of indexers of the 36 volumes may easily overlook some reference which might be pounced upon greedily by a contesting attorney.

There are many things which ought to be done in the few weeks remaining of the present session of Congress. It is to be hoped that this greatly needed piece of legislation will not be neglected.

[The American Economist, February 2, 1923.]

CODIFICATION OF UNITED STATES STATUTES.

One of the most important bills pending in Congress, if not the most important of all, is H. R. 12, a bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919. This bill should be so amended as to include all laws in force on March 4, 1923, so as to bring the codification of United States statutes up to date.

We can not see why this bill for the codification of laws of a permanent character has not been passed before, unless, indeed, there is some truth in the suggestion which has been advanced that the delay has been due to the opposition of law-book publishing houses.

The United States Statutes at Large cover a lot of "dead wood"—that is, laws which have been repealed and are no longer in force and laws which are of a temporary nature, and hence not now applicable. The multiplicity of such out-of-date laws is confusing, even to practicing lawyers. It is necessary to scan a number of volumes to ascertain if any given law is now in force or has been repealed. A single "slip" in such scanning is likely to give rise to needless confusion, loss, and delay. It is in every way desirable that the laws now in force shall be gathered together in one volume and that all laws not in force shall be omitted from such volume.

The said bill includes the codification of all the said laws in force up to March 4, 1919, and has been most carefully prepared under the direction of the House Committee on Revision of the Laws, of which Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE, of Kansas, is chairman. Although the said codification has been most carefully scanned since it was first introduced, no errors therein have been discovered.

We sincerely hope and earnestly urge that this valuable contribution to our laws be enacted into law. There is everything to be said in favor of such action and no good reason to be urged against it.

JANUARY 15, 1923.

Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ERNST: I have been very hopeful that the Senate would proceed to the prompt enactment of the new United States code passed by the House a year ago last May. During the past year I have used the copy of it in preparing a new edition of my Treatise on Evidence, and have been through every page of the work and find it entirely satisfactory. For 20 months it has lain in the hands of your committee.

Is there any reason you care to give explaining the delay?

Very truly yours,

JOHN H. WIGMORE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HERRICK. I base it on the slanderous and libelous article from the Washington Herald of February 6, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read, and then I want to address the House in denial thereof and at the conclusion of my remarks ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Does the article libel the gentleman in his personal or representative capacity?

Mr. HERRICK. Well, principally representative, for the reason that I went at 11 o'clock on the 5th and warned them not to publish the article, and they scoffed at me and the whole Congress and told me that they did not care about me or any Congressman or the whole Congress put together, or what I did or Congress to the contrary. In other words, they thought they were bigger than Congress.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the statement does not—the Chair will look at the article if the gentleman will send it to the Chair. [After examining the article.] The Chair very clearly thinks that this simply criticizes the gentleman personally.

Mr. HERRICK. I consider it is an insult to the House of Representatives of the United States, and I think, owing to the contempt that this paper has expressed toward the House, it is up to the House to take action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see anything in it attacking the House or attacking the gentleman in his representative capacity.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HERRICK. They simply intimate they have no respect for the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. This paper does not——

Mr. HERRICK. I understand they say that in defiance of warning to the contrary.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Can not we have the article read to the House? [Cries of "No!" and "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman does not bring himself within the rule, and the Chair does not see that any question of personal privilege is raised.

CONFERENCE REPORT, POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 12, and 13.

C. B. SLEMP,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
CHAS. F. OGDEN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
THOMAS STERLING,
LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 7: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, relative to the carrying of foreign mail on American steamships.

On No. 12: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, providing for the continuance of the Joint Postal Commission until June 30, 1924.

On No. 13: Corrects section number.

C. B. SLEMP,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
CHAS. F. OGDEN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

AMENDING SECTION 100, JUDICIAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10817 and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks to take from the Speaker's table the bill with Senate amendments, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The Senate amendments were read.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SNELL. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. For the consideration of a bill?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is before the House the unfinished business of Tuesday, which comes up under a rule, and the Chair thinks he ought to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. SNELL. May I make a statement for a minute?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma withhold for a moment?

Mr. HERRICK. I will.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some definite understanding as to when I shall call up this matter. It is in reference to the migratory bird act. I have had it for several months, there have been several agreements as to the time for calling it up, and I would like to know when the Speaker will recognize me for that purpose?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma made a point of no quorum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] can not proceed under the rules in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdrew it temporarily. The Chair will state, in answer to the gentleman from Texas, that the Chair intends to recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma presently.

Mr. HERRICK. I merely withheld it. I make the point of no quorum. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Dominick	Jacoway	Maloney
Ansorge	Drane	Jeffers, Ala.	Mansfield
Appleby	Dunbar	Johnson, Miss.	Michaelson
Atkeson	Dunn	Johnson, S. Dak.	Mills
Blakeney	Dyer	Jones, Pa.	Moore, Ill.
Boies	Fairfield	Kahn	Morin
Bond	Faust	Keller	Mott
Bowers	Fish	Kelley, Mich.	Mudd
Brennan	Focht	Kendall	Murphy
Britten	Foster	Kennedy	Newton, Mo.
Brooks, Pa.	Frear	Kindred	O'Brien
Bulwinkle	Free	King	O'Connor
Burdick	Freeman	Kirkpatrick	Olpp
Burke	French	Kitchin	Osborne
Burton	Frothingham	Kleczka	Overstreet
Butler	Gahn	Kline, N. Y.	Paige
Carew	Garner	Knight	Park, Ga.
Carter	Gensman	Kraus	Parker, N. Y.
Chandler, N. Y.	Gilbert	Kreider	Paul
Chandler, Okla.	Goodykoontz	Kunz	Perlman
Classon	Gorman	Larson, Minn.	Petersen
Clouse	Gould	Lee, N. Y.	Radcliffe
Codd	Graham, Pa.	Lehlbach	Rainey, Ala.
Connally, Tex.	Greene, Vt.	Lineberger	Ransley
Connolly, Pa.	Henry	Logan	Reber
Crago	Hicks	McArthur	Reed, W. Va.
Crowther	Hoch	McDuffie	Riddick
Cullen	Hogan	McFadden	Riordan
Davis, Minn.	Hooker	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Robertson
Davis, Tenn.	Hueck	McLaughlin, Pa.	Rodenberg
Dempsey	Hutchinson	McPherson	Rose
Rossdale	Stoll	Thomas	Webster
Ryan	Strong, Pa.	Thompson	Wheeler
Scott, Mich.	Sullivan	Treadway	Winslow
Scott, Tenn.	Tague	Vinson	Wise
Shreve	Taylor, Ark.	Volk	Wood, Ind.
Siegel	Taylor, Colo.	Walters	Woodyard
Smith, Mich.	Taylor, N. J.	Wason	Yates
Stiness	Ten Eyck	Watson	Zihlman

The SPEAKER. On this vote 271 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that any untrue statement about a Member published in the public press——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not rise to a question of the privileges of the House without offering a resolution or something.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to offer something that represents the privileges of the House, a question of privilege which requires no resolution.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege of the whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that before, and the Chair has overruled it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Speaker hold that it has ceased to be a privilege for a Member of this House to raise a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. BLANTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, Mr. Speaker, and make the point of order that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK] had raised a question of privilege.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13880.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK] has raised a question of personal privilege by submitting to the Speaker a document which shows that he has been brought into ridicule by the press.

The SPEAKER. That is a different question. The gentleman is shifting his ground.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK], who is a Member of Congress, and has some rights here, has submitted to the Speaker a document which I hold in my hand, which he claims to be untrue, and which has brought not only him into ridicule but the membership of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the gentleman to state wherein it has brought the membership of the House into ridicule.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma states that these statements are absolutely unfounded and without basis. Here are the press headlines:

Herrick sued by Follies beauty, etc. Rival wrecks Herrick's new love romance. Now he styles himself the spark-plug lover and employs sleuths to get even. Bigger fish in the sea. Dare-devil Congressman, jilted by Miss Nettie Morrison, clerk at Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I am stating facts which constitute a privilege of a Member of this House, and you can not sidetrack it. He has got rights here, and you can not down him. I am not responsible for his being here; but, being here, he has rights. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Any Member of Congress has the right to raise the question of privilege of the House. Any gentleman has the right to raise the question of his own privilege, but the Chair is not aware of any precedent where one gentleman can rise to a question of personal privilege respecting another gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. But a Member can rise to a point of order, where the privileges of the House have been denied another Member in the House.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late in that transaction. That is past. He can not now interpose a point of order with reference to a transaction that happened five minutes before.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of no quorum was made by Mr. HERRICK immediately after the ruling, so there has been no other business transacted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair has held that the article does not affect the gentleman from Oklahoma in his representative capacity, and therefore there is no question of privilege presented.

Mr. BLANTON. The article brings ridicule upon the Congress of the United States and upon the whole House of Representatives in particular.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. With reference to that the gentleman must offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] and overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I want to see if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK] has any rights.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to lay that appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Wyoming moves to lay the appeal on the table.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. MONDELL was agreed to.

Accordingly the appeal was laid on the table.

FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

On motion of Mr. PORTER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13880) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill from the point where he stopped on Tuesday.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. That on the date on which this act becomes effective the Secretary of State shall certify to the President, with his recommendation in each case, the record of efficiency of the several secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls of career, consular assistants, interpreters, and student interpreters then in office, and shall, except in cases of persons found to merit reduction in rank or dismissal from the service, recommend to the President the recommissioning, without further examination, of those then in office as follows:

Secretaries of class 1 designated as counselors of embassy and consuls general of classes 1 and 2 as foreign service officers of class 1.

Secretaries of class 1 designated as counselors of legation and consuls general of class 3 as foreign service officers of class 2.

Secretaries of class 1 not designated as counselors, consuls general of class 4, and consuls general at large as foreign service officers of class 3.

Secretaries of class 2, consuls general of class 5, and consuls of classes 1, 2, and 3 as foreign service officers of class 4.

Consuls of class 4 as foreign service officers of class 5.

Secretaries of class 3 and consuls of class 5 as foreign service officers of class 6.

Consuls of class 6 as foreign service officers of class 7.

Secretaries of class 4 and consuls of class 7 as foreign service officers of class 8.

Consuls of classes 8 and 9 as foreign service officers of class 9.

Vice consuls of career, consular assistants, interpreters, and student interpreters as foreign service officers, unclassified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman having the bill in charge would give to the House a statement of the increases in the salaries in these respective grades of secretaries and consuls that will be provided by this section.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will turn to the hearings at pages 27 to 29, inclusive, he will find a rather elaborate chart showing both the present salaries, the present grades, and the number of individuals in each grade, on the one hand, and showing, second, the proposed grades and the number of individuals in each of the new grades.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have a copy of the hearings before me. They are rather elaborate. Can not the gentleman give the information to the House in a general way how much permanent increase is provided under this new arrangement?

Mr. ROGERS. Speaking very generally, the increases on the consular side of the service as compared with the present scale of salaries will be about 14 per cent. The gentleman from Wisconsin is well aware that the number of consular officers very largely exceeds the number of diplomatic officers, the proportion being approximately 520 consular officers and 120 diplomatic officers.

When I say that the increase in salary for consular officers is 14 per cent I am comparing the present salary schedule with the proposed salary schedule.

I have before me a memorandum showing the average salaries of consular officers as of the year 1907 when the new merit classification was first introduced into the Consular Service. The average salary in 1907 was about $3,400. The average salary to-day is about $3,600. Thus in the last 16 years the average salary in the Consular Service has been increased about $200, although the responsibilities of the service and the cost of living have increased pretty generally since that time. The proposed increase, being about 14 per cent, would add $300 or $400 to the average salary of to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman's standard of estimates a correct one in view of the fact that the number of consular officers has been increased so generally since 1907, especially those of the lower classes, by consular assistants and deputy consuls? Have not the salaries of the principal consular officers been decidedly increased over what the gentleman's statement would seem to indicate? Take the case of the principal consuls at leading ports——

Mr. ROGERS. There has been no increase whatever in the salaries of the principal officers in the last 16 years. Such salary increases as have come about have been increases in the salaries of the $2,000 and $3,000 classes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In these respective grades, what increases will be provided, for instance, in the case of consuls general of classes 1 and 2, and how much in the case of consuls general in classes 3 and 4, and so on?

Mr. ROGERS. The consul general of class 1 is reduced from $12,000 to $9,000, saving the salaries of the present occupants.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are only two of those I believe.

Mr. ROGERS. Only two, and one of them immediately retires because he is now over 65 years of age. The only one whose salary will be spared to him through his occupancy is Consul General Skinner, at London. He gets $12,000, and, by a saving clause in this bill, his salary is protected as long as he is in the service. His successor will receive not more than $9,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give us information as to the increases provided for in the other grades of consular officers?

Mr. ROGERS. The increase in the salary of the consul general of class 3, for example, is $2,000. I will not read them all, but I will give illustrative ones.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just give the leading ones, the increases in the salaries of the leading consular officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes in order that the gentleman from Massachusetts may complete his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. The increase in the salary of consul of class 5 will be $500, and that is true also of consuls of classes 6 and 7. There are only a very few consuls as to whom the increase will be over $1,000, and the vast majority of cases will remain either fixed or will have increases at most of $500. The gentleman can see that that must be so from the fact that 14 per cent is the average increase over the whole service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had some difficulty in bringing myself to the conclusion that this interchangeability feature of having consuls transferred to the Diplomatic Service is really a valuable provision. The duties of the consular officers are different from those of the secretarial force connected with the Diplomatic Service. One is business, and the other is diplomacy. Originally it was contemplated to retain intact the consular branch of the service and not merge them under one general head as foreign-service officers. There may be occasional instances where a man has occupied the post of a consular office and may have a turn for diplomatic service, but I do not think there have been many instances in the history of our Government where consular officers have been transferred to the Diplomatic Service or where they desired to be transferred to the secretarial force of the Diplomatic Service. If I am in error, I would like to be corrected.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to say that almost every question which comes before our foreign service to-day does involve diplomacy or international relationships politically on the one hand and international trade on the other hand? I think that has become especially true in the years during and succeeding the war. Secretary Hughes in his testimony before the committee laid great stress on the importance of having men in each service who were trained in the functions belonging to both services.

The gentleman suggests that relatively few consuls would want to be transferred to the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. To the secretarial force of the diplomatic side, which the bill provides for.

Mr. ROGERS. As a matter of mathematics alone there is much force in the gentleman's suggestion, because, as I said, there are four or five times as many consular officers as diplomatic, and there will not be enough places to take care of all the consuls. But my view of the principal utility of this interchangeable provision is that under it we shall send our young men to school in the consulates. There we shall give them a thorough grounding in the practical side of business representation abroad so that later, as their fitness makes it proper, they can be transferred to diplomatic work. They will have acquired a fundamental grasp of international trade and commerce that is going to make them immeasurably more useful to themselves and to the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. To me it seems that it is going to be difficult to apply a new name to a service like the Consular Service that has been applied almost since the development of the Government. I recognize the value that will be attained along the lines of suggestion of the gentleman and as described by our eminent Secretary of State, but I have doubts still whether it would not have been better to retain separately by designation and classification the two respective services.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am very glad to believe that the bill reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee will add materially to the efficiency of our foreign activities. I think one of the most valuable contributions to the service will be the advantage that we can take of the experience of the men in the Consular Service and of the experience of the men in the Diplomatic Service and the interchangeability of these services. Where we find a man in either of the services who by years of work has acquired knowledge and experience that is valuable to the Government, we should be able to take advantage of that experience. It will be done in other lines of business, at least in other lines of successful business, and the weakness of our Government in the past has been that we have really had no permanent foreign staff that could work to a well-defined policy. This is the entering wedge of a permanent policy to be fixed by the Government, under which we will have in the service men who are educated for the service, whether they receive the education in the consular activities or in the diplomatic. And as years go by the United States will find itself able to cope with the representatives of foreign nations, because we are henceforth to be able to take advantage of the knowledge of men whether they have been theretofore in the Diplomatic or in the Consular Service.

After this bill becomes a law we are to be able to take a man out of either service and put him into the other service, not because we want to favor the man but because we want to improve the service. What is there simpler than that? What is more worth while than to lay the foundation for efficiency, permanency, and knowledge in the great Government service that has to do with the activities of the world? We have never been looked upon as qualified to speak, because we have not been able to bring men into the Diplomatic and Consular Service except men who were rich enough to pay their own way. This will help in a large measure, not only to take advantage of the experience acquired by these men, but it will democratize the service and encourage those who have to make a livelihood out of the position they occupy to know that the position not only is permanent but that they are to be permitted to retire with some pension after a life of faithful service. There is no opportunity for these men to acquire a competency as a result of the service, and if they give their lives to the country and the country is able to profit by that life of service and experience, what is there more just than to say to the men who do that, after a long period of devotion and service, the Government will see to it to the extent that it will be the instrumentality in having a fund paid into the Treasury out of their own purses so that when they grow old they may not fear the poorhouse. [Applause.]

The Government is not going to pay this annuity. The men pay this annuity themselves, and the annuities that are paid to the men in other branches of the service require men and women to whom they are paid to pay 2½ per cent of their earnings into the fund, while this bill provides that the men in this service shall be required to pay 5 per cent of their earnings into the fund. That is much more than is required in any other branch of the service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the gentleman's opinion that this annuity fund should be self-sustaining?

Mr. MADDEN. It will be substantially self-sustaining. I have figures prepared by the Bureau of Efficiency of the Government which indicate that the total maximum cost of the annuity between 1940 and 1945—and that will be the peak—will be $400,000, but included within that $400,000 is $50,000 which is proposed to be appropriated in this bill, which I understand is to be eliminated, so that it will be only $350,000. Of the total amount of the cost, the highest amount to be paid by officials into the fund will be paid between 1940 and 1945 and will amount to $150,000, and the highest amount paid by the Government will be paid within the same period and will amount to $250,000, from which should be deducted the $50,000 that is proposed to be appropriated in this bill, so it will amount to only $200,000. That will be the most the Government will ever be called upon to pay, and as we proceed beyond 1945 up to 1965 there will be no expense to the Government as far as I can see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. So that we are not doing any injustice to the Treasury of the United States when we make this provision. On the other hand, we are acting as trustees—and when I say "we," I mean the country—of the men who are devoting their lives to the service of the country, and we are investing their contributions from a fund which will afterwards be used to meet the annuities that may be required as the result of this law.

This chart which I have, and which has been prepared after great study, indicates that the total number of officials in the service July 1, 1922, was 635; that the pay roll July 1, 1922, was $2,288,000; and that the pay roll under the reorganization provided in this bill will amount to $2,842,500. That brings the cost to $500,000 above the present law, when it reaches its maximum, but it will not cost anything to speak of for some time to come. It is true that the compensation of the men will be more, and it should be more. The bill, while seeming to cost $500,000 and odd more for compensation, really costs no such sum, because to-day we have $200,000 expended for post exchange, appropriated under the present act, which under this act will be incorporated in the expense that I have just alluded to, so that if we deduct the $200,000 from the $525,000 we will have less than $350,000 as a maximum additional cost for a service that will be so much better that dollars do not measure it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The statement made by the gentleman from Illinois that the retirement fund in 1955 or 1958 will not cost the Government anything is directly counter to the statement made in the hearings, on page 31, and to the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], the author and the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I made a mistake on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It states this—

> As already stated, this total in 1958 will reach approximately $646,800. In that year and for all following years the appropriation by the Government will have to be $646,800, less $142,500, or $504,300.

In view of that statement, I am desirous of ascertaining the gentleman's opinion whether these men who are going to receive a living salary with retirement besides——

Mr. MADDEN. They pay for the retirement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whether they should not bear the expense of their retirement, in so far as the annuities under this bill are concerned, rather than having an annual charge on the Government after 1958 of $500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. When I said there was to be no expense attached to the Government at a given period I was making my own statement. I believed that when I said it from the calculations that I had made, but the expert says that in 1965 it will cost the Government $260,000, and it will cost the officers $177,000, and in 1995 it will cost the Government $212,000 and the officers $153,000. So that at no time, even assuming the gentleman's position, will it be possible for the Government to be called upon to pay more than $260,000 a year, and that will be at the peak. The Government is paying something toward the annuities paid to other employees of the Government, but those employees pay in only 2½ per cent of their earnings, while these people are required to pay under this act 5 per cent. Why should there be any difference? Why should the Government discriminate against these people? Is it because they are not loyal, is it because they are not unselfish, is it because they have less knowledge and are of less value to the Government than employees engaged in other lines of Government activity? Why should not the Government treat all its employees on a basis of equality?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman said the additional amount of $350,000 would probably be required. Is it not true that the amount is $328,000?

Mr. MADDEN. It is hardly worth while to quarrel about the difference. I do not pretend to have the exact figures in everything I say. I am speaking approximately, speaking generally. I am speaking about the fundamental principle involved, and if my figures are not exactly correct I hope the gentlemen on the floor will not think it is because I have any desire to state them incorrectly, but rather that I simply want to state what I have to say in round figures, and that I am speaking as to the advisability of the policy and the effect that it will have on the foreign relations of the Government of the United States in its transactions with the governments of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out the words "record of efficiency."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, I want to say to my Republican friends on the other side of the aisle, to save you and your party from embarrassment. There should be no bill passed by this Congress with any reference made to any record of efficiency. In one particular, however, I might say that you grade up 100 per cent in efficiency, in one particular only, and that is through machine action in creating new positions and raising salaries. You grade up 100 per cent on that subject.

It was your record on efficiency that figured in the last election that reduced your majority here from 170 down to 20 in the coming House. I want to give you my view; it may not be worth anything, yet I want to give you my judgment of the comparison of efficiency of our two great parties here in the House. On my side of the aisle when the Democratic Party sends a man to Congress he comes here as an individual, with some individuality about him. He can speak his sentiments, he can vote his own conclusions. When you Republicans send a man here he comes here merely as part of a machine. When he announces for office he is part of a machine. He is elected by a machine. He comes here and votes with a machine; he is controlled by a machine.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. He has no rights except what the machine gives to him. Why, the humblest man of the Democratic Party, when the Democrats send him to the great House of Representatives, has the right to be heard; he is on a parity with every other Member; he has got a place here; he is something else besides a salary drawer; but when you send a man here you may have picked him out as the best you had in his district, you may have picked him out as the most available man for that office in the district and had your machine bring him here, and when he comes here and votes he must approve salary-raise bills like this that increases the salaries of the consular office $328,000 a year and then an additional $500,000 for retirement, and you machine vote him to pass these sort of bills. You machine vote him to pass your sugar bill, you machine vote him to pass your subsidy bill, but when the newspapers malign and exploit him, when the newspapers bring him into ridicule, when the newspapers make a monkey both out of him and your party, then your great Republican Party that sent him here will not even let the poor devil rise up to defend himself, his good name and yours upon the floor. You put a gag in his mouth. That is what is the matter with Republican efficiency. Ah, ah, that is not right. I never have been in favor of gag rule. I have always been taught during the 50 years of my life that when a man was specially deserving of sympathy you ought to give him an extra amount of sympathy; that if he was deficient in any particular line give him just that much more justice and square dealing. You will not give it on your side; we do on the Democratic side.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DENISON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13660. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

H. R. 13593. An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That consuls general of class 1 and consuls of class 1 holding office at the time this act takes effect shall not as a result of their recommissioning or reclassification suffer a reduction in salary below that which they are then receiving: Provided, however, That this provision shall apply only to the incumbents of the offices mentioned at the time this act becomes effective.

That the grade of consular assistant is hereby abolished, and that all consular assistants now in the service shall be recommissioned as foreign-service officers, unclassified.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman in charge of the bill a question. I directed an inquiry day before yesterday about the percentage salary which these employees would retire on at the date of their retirement. I would like to know if the gentleman of the committee can give that information to me now?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; there are two factors in determining the amount of the retirement allowance. The first factor is the length of time the man has served at the moment he reaches the age of 65. The second factor is the size of his salary averaged over a period of 10 years just prior to his retirement.

Mr. ABERNETHY. What section is that in?

Mr. ROGERS. All of the retirement provisions of this bill are grouped in section 16, and the gentleman will notice section 16 begins by reenacting for this purpose the Lehlbach law of 1920, except as modified in four or five respects. Thus, in order to have a complete picture of the retirement provision, Members would naturally refer back to the Lehlbach law and see wherein that law is modified by this proposal.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I thought the gentleman could probably give information about the percentage. Now, assuming an employee gets a $5,000 salary at his retirement, what retirement pay would he get?

Mr. ROGERS. You have to know also how long he has served. Assuming he has served 15 years at the time of retirement he would get 30 per cent of $5,000, or $1,500. If he has served as long as 30 years, which is the maximum period, he would receive a percentage of 60, which would give him $3,000 under the retirement allowance.

Mr. ABERNETHY. What other department of the Government permits a man to retire with less than 30 years' service?

Mr. ROGERS. Every officer coming under the Lehlbach law has a retirement status after 15 years, and the Lehlbach law, of course, includes all the civil service employees of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. After 15 years if he has reached the retirement age.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I thank the gentleman. That must be added.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CABLE. I just want to take the time of the House long enough to call attention to——

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold for a moment?

Mr. CABLE. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close on this section at the end of five minutes.

Mr. FESS. I have been waiting for time. I will take it on the next paragraph if I can get it.

Mr. ROGERS. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section close at the end of five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, the American consuls abroad play an important part in our immigration service. I refer to the duty of viséing passports of immigrants seeking to come to the United States.

As many of you know the requirement of passport and visé is a war-time regulation. By the act of May 22, 1918, Congress provided that when the United States was at war the President had the power, through Executive order, to make it unlawful for any alien to enter the United States except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders and subject to such limitations as the President might prescribe. By authority of this law the President issued the Executive order of August 8, 1917, establishing rules requiring viséed passports as a condition of entry of aliens into the United States.

The Secretary of State was also given authority to issue regulations as might be necessary for the enforcement of this Executive order.

Congress, by the act of March 2, 1921, extended the provision of its original act in so far as it related to requiring passports and visés of aliens seeking to come to the United States and providing that such law should continue in force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

An alien is charged with a fee of $1 for executing application for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport.

Under the Executive order and regulations, certain discretion is given the American consul, but that discretion is limited as to the viséing of immigrants' passports. For example, an alien presents his application and his $1 to American consul with the request that his passport be viséed. If the consul believes him to be an enemy of our country and its form of government, then under regulations of State Department he has the right to refuse to visé the passport. So also, if immigrant presents his passport and the quota for his particular nationality is filled and no more can be admitted, then he may again exercise his discretion and refuse to visé that passport. Again, if the quota is exhausted, he has the discretion of determining whether the party presenting the passport is of exempted class and not within the quota, and if he so finds, he may visé the passport. Or, again, if the quota is almost exhausted and several immigrants apply, part of whom come within preferred class as designated by the immigration laws and part do not, he may exercise his discretion and visé the passports of those within the preferred class. But, beyond that point the consul has no further discretion.

Under section 3 of our immigration law there are 30 or 40 classes of aliens enumerated who can not be admitted even if quota is not filled, such as idiots, insane, criminals, prostitutes, those afflicted with loathsome contagious or dangerous contagious diseases, contract laborers; and yet the consul, even though he may know that such applying immigrant comes clearly within the class not admitted, has no right to exercise his discretion and refuse a visé. But, on the other hand, it seems to be mandatory that the passport must be viséed. The alien may be warned by the consul and at the same time the officials at port of entry are warned of coming of inadmissible alien. How much better it would be to refuse the visé of passport rather than permit this immigrant to sell his home, if he has one, his personal property, buying a high-priced steamship ticket, coming to America in the steerage, enduring suffering and hardship, only when he reaches our port of entry to have his hopes blasted and to be refused admittance for the very cause and the very reason that the American consul knew to exist at time he viséed the passport.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. Yes.

Mr. BOX. If the consul undertakes to choose between them on the basis of their physical, mental, or moral fitness, will he not then infringe upon the rule that forbids us to adopt such an examination on foreign territory? And does any nation permit us to do that?

Mr. CABLE. I am not unwilling to go so far as to make examination abroad final. My proposition is to require the alien to produce a certificate of a reliable physician and also a statement as to his record, and then if from the facts and such other information as the consul may have it is clearly and beyond doubt apparent to the consul that such alien is not admissible, in fairness to the alien, as well as for the protection of the people of this country, the American consul should be given the right to tell the man that he can not be admitted and at the same time refuse to visé the passport.

If the alien has reached a port of entry in our country, it is difficult and sometimes impossible to deport him.

There is pending before the Immigration Committee at the present time bills to permit feeble-minded to remain permanently in this country, who now are temporarily admitted here under bond.

The cry of hardship to the alien and his family is raised in support of these measures, as well as cold facts that in some cases there may be no country or place to which the alien can be deported. How much better it would have been to have given the consul permission to refuse the visé of these feeble-minded.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not a fact that the permission given by this Government to aliens to come to this country constitutes a privilege and a very high privilege?

Mr. CABLE. It is.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And is it not a fact, if that is true, that this country can lay down under legislation rules whereby this privilege will be granted? I believe the right of Congress to enact such legislation is very clear.

Mr. CABLE. You do not need congressional legislation. If the Secretary of State would give to the American consul discretion, he could eliminate many hardships occasioned to immigrants seeking to come here. At the same time he could relieve the officials at ports of entry of the unwelcome task of debarring and sending back to their native land those who are inadmissible and who should not have been permitted to start on the long journey to America.

The consul should have the right to refuse to visé passports of immigrants clearly and beyond doubt in the excludable class. I suggest this in addition to the inspection and examination on this side.

The revenue from viséing of passports runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the $10 of the excluded alien is not returned to him. Fair treatment requires its return. But the greatest good can be accomplished by preventing the departure of the inadmissible alien from his native land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That sections 1697 and 1698 of the Revised Statutes are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Every secretary, consul general, consul, vice consul of career, or foreign service officer, before he receives his commission or enters upon the duties of his office, shall give to the United States a bond, in such form as the President shall prescribe, with such sureties, who shall be permanent residents of the United States, as the Secretary of State shall approve, in a penal sum not less than the annual compensation allowed to such officer, conditioned for the true and faithful accounting for, paying over, and delivering up of all fees, moneys, goods, effects, books, records, papers, and other property which shall come to his hands or to the hands of any other person to his use as such officer under any law now or hereafter enacted, and for the true and faithful performance of all other duties now or hereafter lawfully imposed upon him as such officer: Provided, That the operation of the existing bond shall in anywise be impaired by the provisions of this act: Provided further, That such bond shall cover by its stipulations all official acts of such officer, whether as foreign service officer or as secretary in the Diplomatic Service, consul general, consul, or vice consul of career. The bonds herein mentioned shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. The other day the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] raised the question of the facilities for study in matters of foreign service, and stated that he thought there ought to be attached to the Department of State a school of diplomacy. Some inquiry was then made on what the colleges and universities were doing to supply this training. There has recently been a survey made of colleges and universities of the country as to what has been undertaken in this sort of study and equipment for foreign service. That survey has been made by the Institute of Public Service of the city of New York. I have examined the facts collected. The report, I think, is informing and rather suggestive.

The report says that there were 510 catalogues examined, and of that number 325 did not even mention the matter of foreign affairs. One hundred and eighty-five referred little or much to foreign affairs. The subjects or courses published indicates the character and extent of the training. Three announced courses in present-day world policies; 40 in contemporaneous history, which usually starts about 1870; 33 in foreign relations, treated historically; 53 in the history of diplomacy, usually starting back 100 or more years; 69 in the theory of international law; 25 in comparative governments, largely remote and historical; and 10 in the World War and its results.

It will be noted by this report that the educational institutions of our country do not regard foreign service a field offering a career to young men. No agency of our national life is more responsive nor quicker to react to the demands of fields of intellectual training for service than the leaders of education.

The field of foreign service had not sufficiently attracted American citizens to fill all the places. When the World War came we found in this service several foreign citizens who were available both from the point of ability and training and remuneration.

This field of service demands a particular character of training, which colleges have not as yet fully comprehended, as an examination of the survey before mentioned discloses.

This report states that of 50 State-supported universities, normal colleges, and technical schools none mentions foreign affairs in its index, 5 say they are using current events in teaching foreign affairs, 15 announce courses on the World War or problems resulting from it.

Of the 14 well-known colleges for women in the United States, with 11,000 students, none gives a course on the World War. One gives a course on current events. Four state that current topics are used in courses which begin with more or less remote history.

Of those colleges that take up this work the character of the courses is significant. For example, to run over some of the courses that are offered in the universities, I notice that there is one which gives current events and their historical background. You can imagine about how far that would go.

Another offers courses on the disarmament conference and its problems; another the insistent major problems of the last two decades; another, present-day geography.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What sort of problems?

Mr. FESS. Present-day problems, which I take to mean political and economic. Another gives current and intricate problems as a subject of research work, given as a seminar in a university; another, the World War, with its background and results. That is a very good subject. Another, a general introduction to the religious, cultural, and social life of today; another, the great World War and the new era. I am mentioning a few of the courses offered in different universities under the title of foreign service or Diplomatic and Consular Service, that Congress may know how broad is the character of the training offered by our educational institutions.

In addition, I might say, however, that there is one effort that is quite outstanding, that every member of the committee will recall. That is the effort stimulated largely by Mr. Bernard Baruch in inducing Williams College to give a summer course on matters international, to which were invited leading lights of the world. These courses are given as summer-school courses. You all recall that the famous Viscount James Bryce appeared there and gave a series of lectures. Other less distinguished men of world-wide recognition on matters of international significance were on the program.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Is the gentleman able to state just about how many leading lights are invited or are to be invited?

Mr. FESS. Two years ago the catalogue of announcements included, I should judge, not less than a dozen of the very best international talent available in the world.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I think probably this country could furnish 20,000,000.

Mr. FESS. I think my friend has a very good opinion of "leading lights" of our country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Was the Republican Representative who was denied his rights on the floor this morning included in that bunch?

Mr. FESS. The character of those invited is suggested by men like Viscount James Bryce, author of The American Commonwealth, which is recognized as the best book on the American Government yet published or written by a foreigner.

More and more the colleges are taking up the work of current events, but that does not touch the subject that we have in mind. I rose simply to give this information, in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED]. I am more or less in sympathy with what he said. However, if you enact this bill into law, we will provide for a real career for young men and our colleges will very quickly respond to the needs of such training. With the advancing rank of this Nation among the nations of the world we must have an increasing interest in foreign matters, and our representatives must continue to be more and more able to properly reflect the character and ideals of the Nation. International good will is a wonderful asset and merits the concern of the American Congress in insuring not only the creation of such good will but also in maintaining it.

Now, may I say, gentlemen of the committee, that I regard this legislation which we are now considering to be as far-reaching in its important significance upon foreign relations as anything that we will have done during this session, except the funding of the debt soon to be completed. It deals with a problem that involves problems that are delicate. Everybody knows that with the newer discoveries and inventions in communication and transportation the world is becoming more and more a neighborhood, that no portion of it is entirely detached from communication with every other portion, and our relations, diplomatic as well as commercial, are bound to be more and more important, and with that as a statement of fact we can assert that business is going to grow as rapidly in the future as it has in the last 10 years. The business of the State Department in the last five years has more than doubled, and everybody will also notice that the business of the Commerce Department, especially as expressed in our foreign commerce, is growing by leaps and bounds.

This Congress responded to that situation in an increase of the facilities of the Secretary of Commerce, to which Congress responded favorably since the close of the Great War. If you will look over the figures of the last 10 years I believe you will all agree that we are justified in our belief that the commerce between our country and other countries is now very small in comparison with what it is going to be in the very near future. This alone argues strongly for this proposed legislation. That means our trade relations are not only growing, but they are bound to be more complicated, which last consideration is an additional reason why the bill should become law.

And then there is still another feature. This is not only the greatest Government, measured by industry, in the world, and growing apace, but here is a line of service needing the best available talent of America to represent our country properly in foreign parts, a line of service that ought to be made a profession as well as a business, so that ultimately you will call from the ranks the best available talent of our country, which, unless this legislation is enacted, the opportunity will not open to serve the Nation abroad in a manner commensurate with the Nation's dignity and commercial standing before the world. I urge this particular consideration, that it would be a very serious position for America to take to close the door to those who are not what the world calls fortunately born or persons who must concern themselves about the "bread-and-butter" consideration. This field of service must not be open only to those who can easily go into it because they have the money. To close the door to all except that class would be a very unfortunate position for America to take. That consideration appeals to me wonderfully, because we know how frequently in the rough we find the diamond, and this bill opens up the way to this service to call for that talent. [Applause.]

The qualifications of the service entails talent, special training, time, and considerable expense. Uncertain tenure, lack of remuneration, and rigid requirements have not in the past made this service appeal to the best talent of our country. This bill proposes to correct these errors and remove these obstacles to opening this service as a career for young men. Among the important measures of the Sixty-seventh Congress this proposed legislation, if it becomes law, will stand as a leading constructive measure of the present administration.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in response to a question, the gentleman in charge of the bill called my attention to what I think they feel is a weakness in the bill. In the gradual development of the Department of Commerce we have now in addition to the old diplomatic service a force whose business it is to visit the various capitals and to get in touch with the business interests of this country, in my opinion to be more important than the diplomats. Those people serve under the Secretary of State in a way, and yet in a way not. I am sorry these gentlemen, who I think themselves agree with me that it should be done, have not arranged that feature while they were covering so broadly and so well the other features of this work. They say that they could not. I believe they could if they would put it in the bill, and I think that as soon as possible that should be done.

This bill in getting together, unifying, and disciplining the foreign service is probably a great improvement, but I have no doubt it will have some difficulty which may be very important. In the first place you note that the ambassadors and ministers, the officers of eminence and real political responsibility, are not selected under this law. That is well, for the reason that all governments find that as a rule all their great diplomats are men not trained in the Diplomatic Service. It is infrequent that you find any man rising in the Diplomatic Service who amounts to anything seriously who is trained in that service. Anybody who has kept in touch with them will notice that most of England's great ministers were raised in some other service. In other words, you have got to skip the civil service and avoid stereotyped types and take men of brains and force and character, trained in the world's battles. This will also have a similar effect on the lower branches of the service. If you stop to think a minute, you have got to select consuls away from the men who work in a groove when you need men with initiative, like the country doctor, the country lawyer, the country merchant, active farmer, and stockman, who have initiative and shrewdness, and when they go abroad they can cut some real figure and get results. You are going to be met with lack of initiative, lack of assertion, lack of push among your people if you stick in the grooves always. I think the general arrangement and discipline will change or offset that to some extent; but you are going to find, sometimes, difficulty in getting efficient servants that have any energy to them, under this legislation.

Some years ago Great Britain issued a proclamation to her consuls telling them that their long-stereotyped methods gives a great superiority to American consuls, who are selected for ability, push, and energy and not for mechanical methods. In my judgment that part of the bill is going to be severely tested. We must organize and put this service on a scientific basis, with trained men, but I view with some trepidation the lack of push, the diminutive energy, initiative, and imagination that will ensue at times. That is what you are up against. Benjamin Franklin never had any consular or diplomatic training, but is still considered the foremost American diplomat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to pursue the thought of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] a little further. So far as the bill is concerned, it is a meritorious bill. Nothing can be of more value than the placing of the Consular Service upon a more scientific basis. I want to address myself to the subject of the study of history with particular reference to the World War.

There is appalling ignorance of international affairs in the United States even among intelligent people. In a way it was almost inevitable that it should be so. America has lived her own life. Her problems were the problems of a young giant having before him an unlimited field of activity on the American Continent. America treated Europe and Europe's difficulties with the commiseration which a vigorous young man feels for senility.

This indifference to European affairs reflected itself in our schools and colleges, where very little attention was paid to modern history. The educated American knew more about ancient Rome and Greece than about France, Austria, Germany, or any of the continental European countries.

During the war we had a committee on public information. It was an important committee and it was in charge of an able man. I understand that he publicly made the statement that he did not know whether Ukraine was the name of a country or the name of a musical instrument.

When one reads the proceedings of the Versailles conference one is dumfounded at the lack of knowledge of elementary facts relating to other countries displayed by the statesmen who rewrote the map of Europe. The mischief of the Versailles treaty is not all due to evil intent. A great deal of it is the direct result of the absence of definite information on the subjects the peacemakers were dealing with. And yet, of all subjects that the world must be informed about, there is nothing more important than a knowledge of the difficulties and problems that confront the nations of the world.

There are many obstacles in the way of knowing the truth. History has not yet reached the state of a reliable science. The individual historian manages to marshal out of the multiplicity of human events enough facts to support his particular theory. And if history is unreliable because of the prejudgments and vagaries of historians, it becomes a veritable trap when one takes seriously the enormous volume of deliberate falsehoods spread about each other by the representatives of the belligerent nations in the latest world contest.

The greatest philosophers have failed to escape this tendency. The poison war of the trenches had its counterpart in the poison distributed by the intellectuals by lip and pen. The World War was in preparation for a long time. It is impossible to understand it unless one studies its background.

Fortunately there are now available for the men who are anxious to know the truth many documents bearing upon the causes of the great world tragedy which were heretofore unavailable, and about the existence of which there was a great deal of guesswork. The revolutionary governments of Germany and Russia, and the researches made by a number of fearless British scholars and statesmen have revealed to the world the contents of the previously secret archives. The schemes and the intrigues, the plots and counterplots, the sinister designs of emperors and czars, of kings and rulers, of financial princes and industrial magnates, the treachery and falsehood among the great of this world have been laid bare for the benefit of those who want to know the facts.

There is by this time probably more than a million books and pamphlets about the war. The greater part of this literature is the old style, self-glorification, and dishonest abuse of adversaries. One must chart his course carefully in this ocean of words. It is in the original State documents now made public that one can hope to find the basis for a true history of the World War.

American colleges are enlarging their courses on modern history. Will it be history that they will study hereafter or will it be again the horrible thing that Byron called "history, the great liar"? Will our students learn to know the true causes which have wrecked Europe and which have brought the dark clouds of reaction upon the horizon of our beloved country?

Some time ago I suggested that a scientific commission be appointed to make a dispassionate scientific study of history. I wish America would undertake that task. I wish a suitable appropriation would be made for that purpose. After all we do not share the intensity of the hatreds which torture the rest of the nations.

Long before the World War the socialists of the world urged the necessity of international understanding. Facing persecution, they stressed the necessity of that patriotism which in advocating love for one's own country refuses to preach the gospel of hatred of other nations. It is the socialist who warned mankind of the menace of militarism, of the danger of employing armies and navies as instruments for commercial aggrandizement. The internationalism of the socialist means nothing more than cooperation and mutual regard among nations for the general advancement of the cause of humanity.

Of what value is our progress if the progress of social science, the greatest of all sciences, the science of the relation between man and man and nation and nation, shall continue to be impeded by prejudice, ignorance, and selfishness?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the provisions of section 4 of the act of April 5, 1906, relative to the powers, duties, and prerogatives of consuls general at large are hereby made applicable to foreign-service officers detailed for the purpose of inspection, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of State, inspect the work of offices in the foreign service, both in the diplomatic and the consular branches.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What are the provisions of section 4 of the act of April 5, 1906, which are made applicable under the provisions of section 10 of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. The act of April 5, 1906, as since amended, authorizes the appointment of seven consular officers as consuls general at large for the purpose of inspecting consular missions throughout the world. Singularly enough, as I view it, we have never had any provision for inspecting diplomatic offices. The intent of this section is simply to enable the Secretary of State to continue inspection work of consulates, and also to inaugurate a system of inspecting diplomatic missions.

Mr. BRIGGS. It includes those which have not been heretofore included in that inspection?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; and I think the gentleman will agree that it is desirable to have some supervision over both branches of the foreign service.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is accomplished through these inspections? Are they simply visitations of a pleasant character, or do they result in some tangible good to the Government?

Mr. ROGERS. It is about the most rigid auditing system that there is in any branch of the Government. The men who are detailed to this inspection work, as I know from personal experience with many of them, are able and thorough and scrupulous examiners of every office into which they go. They check up the accounts; they report upon the kind of work that is being done by the individual consular officers at these offices. In general, they make a thorough inspection both of the general business practices prevailing in the particular office and of the routine administration of the office.

Mr. BRIGGS. In other words, they are to the Consular Service what the post-office inspection service is to the Post Office Department?

Mr. ROGERS. I should think very much akin to that.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. If this bill is enacted into law, will the gentleman state to the committee something where it will place our Consular and Diplomatic Service in comparison with similar services of other countries with which we are now on a par in other matters?

Mr. ROGERS. Speaking generally, I think the effect of this bill will be to assimilate our service more closely to that of our principal trade rivals abroad. The element of interchangeability, which I regard as one of the extremely important provisions of this bill, prevails almost universally among the other powers of the world. The retirement system, which is perhaps the second most important element in this bill, prevails in the case of every first-class power, and in almost every second-class power as well.

Mr. KETCHAM. May I follow that with another question? Will the provisions of this bill make the foreign service sufficiently attractive by reason of its increased salary and retirement provisions so that young men may look forward not only to adequate preparation but to continued service with the same satisfaction that they view their entrance into other professions of the country or other activities?

Mr. ROGERS. I think the answer is emphatically yes. Every man who has studied this question and has given the committee the benefit of his opinion agrees in the strongest possible terms. I believe—and this, of course, is only surmise—the field of selection will be broadened tenfold as the result of the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. KETCHAM. One other question. Will the gentleman state how the provisions of this bill, so far as the items of expense of increased appropriation are concerned, compare with the appropriations made for similar services on the part of other countries supposed to be on a par with us?

Mr. ROGERS. I can refer the gentleman specifically to the British service, which is, perhaps, more nearly analogous to ours in the nature of its problems. The net cost of the British service is $8,332,000 a year. The net cost of our foreign service for this year, including the expenditures of the Department of State, is $3,606,000 a year. Within the past year or two the receipts of the foreign service were more than sufficient to pay every cent of outlay, both for the Diplomatic and Consular Service and the Department of State itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the proforma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the provisions of sections 8 and 10 of the act of April 5, 1906, relative to official fees and the method of accounting therefor shall include both branches of the foreign service.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH. Page 7, line 11, after the word "service," add a new section as follows: "The act approved March 2, 1921, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922,' is hereby amended to include Lisbon, Portugal, among the places at which the acquisition of embassy, legation, or consular buildings and grounds are authorized within the amount appropriated."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against it that it is not germane to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order just for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it.

Mr. ROGERS. Before the gentleman begins will he permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ROACH. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments——

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not press that at this time.

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw it.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I confess that perhaps the point of order made against this amendment may have to be sustained, but I particularly wanted to direct the attention of the committee and the gentlemen handling the bill that is now under consideration to the act of March, 1921, which made a general appropriation for legation buildings and created authority under which those sites were to be selected and the buildings purchased. For some reason unknown to me and which I have been unable to ascertain Lisbon, Portugal, was omitted from the list of capitals at which the United States Government was authorized to erect or purchase a suitable legation building. In that connection it is pertinent to say that Lisbon, Portugal, is one of the important foreign stations, and I am unable to reason out why it was omitted from this list of capitals at which United States legations should be purchased or erected. In that same connection my attention has been called to this matter by the present United States minister at Lisbon, and from what he says I infer that the United States is being literally held up in the rental of a suitable building for the United States legation at that point; the rents, as I am informed, ranging from $600 to $2,000 per month for an adequate building, a sufficient amount in a few years' time to pay for a building for the United States Government. Therefore from economy standpoint alone it requires no argument upon my part to convince the committee that it would be both economy and greatly add to the dignity and prestige of the United States to own a proper legation building at a foreign post so important as Lisbon, Portugal. And I have offered the amendment at this time to direct the attention of the committee to what appears to have been a clear oversight, in that Lisbon, Portugal, was not included in the act of 1921, and in some way I have been unable through my investigation to ascertain from any source any good reason Lisbon, Portugal, was not included in the provision of the act of March 21, which, as you know, authorized a number of legation buildings.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I had something to do with the drafting of the provisions of the law to which the gentleman refers, and I can assure him that if the matter had been brought to my attention at that time Lisbon would have been included in it.

Mr. ROACH. I am very glad to hear the gentleman make that statement, and it only emphasizes the importance of this matter receiving consideration either on this legislation or on any legislation affecting our Diplomatic and Consular Service that may be proposed in the future; and should the point of order be sustained against the amendment I have offered, I want to call it to the attention of the committee in order that this matter may receive the consideration in future legislation to be considered by this House upon this subject.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know why there should be any reason to concede the point of order. The bill is one for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, and consists of a large number of sections relating to different matters connnected with our foreign service.

Mr. ROACH. I am not proceeding on the point of order except to say that perhaps inferentially it carries an appropriation, although the act referred to carried an appropriation in its own provisions. Others will discuss the point of order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I will say to the gentleman that it is not too late now for it to receive the consideration of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desire to make his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the purposes of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] desire to be heard on the point of order? Or does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] desire to be heard?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I was going to suggest that I had many grave doubts as to whether the point of order could be sustained. This is a general bill for the reorganization of the foreign service, the purpose being to improve the efficiency of the State Department in a general way. The two preceding sections, as the Chair will see by an examination, are exactly similar in character to the provision which is sought to be inserted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH]—sections 10 and 11. So as this is offered as a new section, and is in consonance with the provisions of the bill, which is a general bill, I think it is within the rule that it shall be considered germane to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the rule is that it must not only be germane to the purpose of the bill but it must also be germane to the section immediately preceding the point where it is offered in the bill. It is not germane to the preceding section. This is a bill for the reclassification of salaries. It is not a bill for the purchase of embassies. The design of this bill is not to purchase property for embassies.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa have any authority in view?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I have no authority particularly in view, but that certainly is the rule; and, contrary to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas, it is not the rule that it must be germane to the section preceding it. A new section offered is germane if it is germane to the general purposes of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I cite to the Chair a very elaborate opinion on the question by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], where he went into this question at great length and called attention to some ruling that had been made to the contrary. But he went back to the fundamental proposition that when you offer a new section as a new section, nevertheless for the purpose of parliamentary procedure it is in a sense a part of the preceding section and must be germane to the preceding section.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember the particular decision suggested, but it must have been in accord with the general decisions regarding those matters. Many authorities support the proposition that a new section need not be germane to the preceding section of the bill, but that it is only necessary that it shall be germane to the general purposes of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not only not germane to the present section but I respectfully affirm it is not germane to the general purposes of this bill. A casual examination of all the sections of this bill will show that it relates exclusively to the personnel of the Consular and Diplomatice Service. Nowhere does it relate to the housing of that service in any particular. As to the sections referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], sections 10 and 11, stating that those are of a general character, a mere reference to them in the statute shows that those relate to fees to be covered in and not regarded as salaries. It extends the fee system now in force as to consular officers to these new described officers, namely, foreign-service officers.

Let me present this parallel case to the Chair: Assuming for the moment that there is presented by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a bill providing for increase of the salaries of all persons engaged in the Postal Service, would anyone for one minute contend that it would be germane to provide in that bill by an amendment for a public building at Milwaukee or any other place?

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair inquire if there are any appropriations in this present measure under consideration?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not been able to find any appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I would go further, Mr. Chairman, and say it would be violative of the fundamental principles prevailing in the consideration of bills in this House, that in the consideration of a bill relating to the personnel of a department you could attach to that a provision so diverse as to provide for a public building. To me it is clearly similar to the case instanced by me just a moment ago, providing for the reorganization of the Postal Service, making it as general as possible, and limiting it to one phase, namely, the reorganization of that personnel and providing for their salary. It might include from the Postmaster General down to the various grades of supervisory officials, clerks, and carriers. And yet you could not attach a provision for a public building. It would then be possible to consider an omnibus public building bill in a bill limited to personnel if that were allowed.

Mr. ROACH. This amendment which I offer only does that which section 19 of this bill does. That makes it available from the money already appropriated for the Diplomatic and Consular Service of the United States, and includes reports in that appropriation already made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. That section makes it available, not for Portugal, but for this specific purpose; not for a public building in Portugal or at Rio de Janeiro or Buenos Aires. No. It makes it available for these specific purposes. You are proposing an extraneous provision. If we launch upon your proposition, we will never get through with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ROACH. We will be conforming to the announced and expressed purpose of the bill, if you will read the title of it, for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The title is not controlling on the question of germaneness. It is the various sections of the bill that are controlling.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very strongly in favor of the legislation proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], and I will go as far as any Member of this House in the direction of making appropriations toward acquiring proper embassies and legations in foreign countries. I think that we ought to do much more than we have done in this direction. In my judgment, we have been remiss in our duty in this respect, and we are suffering on account of it. But my views on this subject do not carry me to the point of being willing to see an amendment come in, after a point of order has been made against it, which, if admitted, would violate the best precedents of this House.

I think that we are liable to get away from the crux of the question. Therefore, in order that we may get back to it, I will read the clause of Rule XVI that applies here:

> No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The question submitted to the Chair reduces itself to this proposition: Is this a different subject from that which we are considering in this bill? I have read the bill pretty carefully and have found nothing in regard to the acquiring of legation or embassy buildings in foreign capitals. However, in order to be doubly sure, I have inquired of the chairman of the committee [Mr. PORTER] and of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], and they tell me that there is nothing in the bill that in any way relates to the acquiring of these properties in foreign countries.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. In just a moment. It seems to me that by admitting this amendment we shall say that we can in this bill embark upon a program of building or otherwise acquiring property in foreign capitals. I do not believe that this bill or any section of it will warrant such a construction as to lend itself to such a program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know whether the gentleman noticed the reading of the amendment, but it does not even purport to be an amendment to this bill that we are now considering. It purports to be an amendment to the act of March, 1921.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I noticed it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. An entirely separate and independent piece of legislation.

Mr. TILSON. What the gentleman suggests is an additional objection to the amendment, which alone is probably decisive. But stripping it of all technicalities and bringing it right down to the question whether this amendment introduces a new subject, on this ground alone I believe that the amendment will not stand the test of a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman's amendment is in order, then it would be in order to offer amendments to buy properties for legations and embassies in every country of the world.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CHALMERS. If one of these sections provided for the leasing of property for legation purposes in a foreign capital, would the gentleman then consider this amendment germane?

Mr. TILSON. That might open the question somewhat as to whether it is a different subject to propose to buy an embassy if the bill already provides for the leasing of embassies. It would make it a closer question, but the supposed case does not arise here.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill relates to the foreign service and deals with the question of reorganizing the diplomatic and consular service into one service. The entire bill is a question of the organization of personnel. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] is an amendment to an appropriation act. In the opinion of the Chair, if the specific point of order were made that it is an appropriating paragraph, such point of order would be sustained, because such an amendment is not permissible on a bill coming from this committee. However, on the question of germaneness, the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is subject to the point of order. The amendment deals with the question of appropriations for buildings, which question is not dealt with in the pending measure. For that reason the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having charge of the bill the reason why he did not include the provisions of section 9 of the act of April 5, 1906, as well as sections 8 and 10.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is section 9?

Mr. ROGERS. Section 9 reads as follows:

That fees for the consular certification of invoices shall be, and they are hereby, included with the fees for official services for which the President is authorized by section 1645 of the Revised Statutes to require rates of tariff—

And so on.

The reason for that was twofold. In the first place, diplomatic officers do not handle consular fees. In the second place, section 18 of the bill provides:

That all provisions of law heretofore enacted relating to secretaries in the Diplomatic Service and to consular officers, which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby made applicable to foreign service officers when they are designated for service as diplomatic or as consular officers, and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STAFFORD. That information is sufficient. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the President is hereby authorized to grant to diplomatic missions and consular offices at capitals of countries where there is no diplomatic mission of the United States representation allowances out of any money which may be appropriated for such purpose from time to time by Congress, the expenditure of such representation allowance to be accounted for in detail to the Department of State quarterly under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think this is one of the most important provisions in the bill. I believe it recognizes for the first time in substantive legislation the policy of granting allowances to our diplomatic and consular officers. True there has been carried for the last several years an appropriation, amounting this year, I believe, to $200,000 for this purpose. I can see the reason why we should grant allowances to our diplomatic establishments. But I question very much whether any allowances should be granted to consular representatives, even though they are at capitals where there is no diplomatic mission.

I was rather impressed by the statement of a former distinguished Member of this House, recently the honored ambassador to the Court of St. James, Mr. John W. Davis, in his testimony before the committee on this bill that he did not favor increasing the salaries of our ambassadors and ministers, but favored more a policy of allowances. I can readily understand, as any Member of the House can readily understand, that while a certain legation or embassy might have a standard that would entitle it to one range of salary, nevertheless the obligations as far as social affairs are concerned would not be as great as in some others. This system of allowances is one to be determined, I assume, according to the special consideration of social obligations at the respective capitals. I am not very much of a social man myself; I am not on the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I am not qualified to speak as authoritatively about the need of these appropriations as some others in this House. My entire information in regard to it comes from reading the hearings. But I do question much whether a consular officer up in Ottawa, for instance—and we have a consul there in the capital of Canada, where there is no diplomatic mission—I question very much whether he should be entitled to any allowance. His duties are not as onerous as those of the consular representative at Windsor. The duties of the consular representative at Windsor are tremendously heavier than those at Ottawa, largely because of the great amount of imports that go across the Detroit River into Canada. Why should we extend the policy of giving a man an allowance for dinner arrangements in consular offices. I can see the need if we are to elevate the salaries of diplomatic attachés from $4,000 to $8,000 of giving them rather more for entertaining in a social way, but why should we extend it to the consular representatives? I cited the case at Ottawa—I do not know of another case where we would have an important consul representing our Government, and there would not be a diplomatic mission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. There are not many cases where the particular language of this section to which the gentleman alludes would be applicable. There are four or five cases within the British Empire. The gentleman has cited one—Ottawa. Among the others are Cape Town, Calcutta, and Melbourne, the capital city of the Commonwealth of Australia. Of course, these several dependencies of the British Empire are practically and for all real purposes independent countries to-day. They are within the fabric of the British Empire, but in most respects they are countries standing on their own footing. Their capitals are comparable in importance to many of the capitals in Latin America or in South American countries. The obligations that go with a decent and dignified representation of the United States at these capitals necessarily cost money. The question is whether, if it is fair to give our minister at La Paz, Bolivia, an allowance, it is not fair to authorize an allowance in the case of the consul at one of these places.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the intention to grant an entertainment allowance to the diplomatic representatives of all of these positions like that of Bolivia?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think that the allowance will ever be made, in fact. I am dealing with what we are authorizing here. I think it is fair that we should authorize the possibility of helping to defray the expenses of a man who represents us at a capital of a great dominion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take the case I cited at Ottawa, why should the consul have any entertainment allowances?

Mr. ROGERS. Because the cost of suitably upholding his position at that capital is very much larger than the cost of maintaining his position in another city where he represents the United States simply as a consular officer and nothing more.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is but an illustration of making provision for every conceivable case which is likely in time to be the subject of great extravagance.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That any foreign service officer may be assigned for duty in the Department of State without loss of class or salary, such assignment to be for a period of not more than three years, unless the public interests demand further service, when such assignment may be extended for a period not to exceed one year. Any foreign service officer of whatever class detailed for special duty not at his post or in the Department of State shall be paid his actual and necessary expenses for travel and not exceeding an average of $8 per day for subsistence during such special detail: Provided, That such special duty shall not continue for more than 60 days, unless in the case of trade conferences or international gatherings, congresses, or conferences, when such subsistence expenses shall run only during the period thereof and the necessary period of transit to and from the place of gathering.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 8, line 4, strike out "$8" and insert in lieu thereof "$5."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion to examine a great many of these expense accounts in the various departments of the Government where, in addition to the salary and traveling allowance, a subsistence is allowed to various employees. I wish I could put a number of them that I have noted lately into the RECORD and let gentlemen see just exactly what is charged in some of them. I have found some where $1 tips have been given to Pullman-car porters on the trains. I can not afford to give a Pullman porter a tip of $1. I try to give him a fair tip every time I travel with him. I have found instances where the waiter in the dining car has been given a dollar tip. I can not afford it, and I am a Member of Congress, and I try to be fair with the waiters. I have found in instances where the red caps that carry the suitcases from the depot to the train and from the train to the depot have been paid $1 tips. I can not afford that, and I am a Member of Congress, and I try to be fair with the red caps. This is all paid with public money. When is it going to stop?

We have been increasing it all of the time. Four dollars as my colleague [Mr. BLACK] knows, because he has studied the question carefully—he is alive on the question—was the limit for subsistence allowed until recently. We pay them good salaries. We are increasing their salaries by this bill in a very substantial sum, and we not only do that, but we pay all of the traveling expenses for railroad fare, their Pullman fare, their tips to waiters in the dining cars and their tips in the Pullman cars, and the tips to the red caps, and for their hotel bills, and we are now allowing them $8 a day for subsistence.

Mr. BLACK. If we do this thing once, the very next demand that will be made of Congress will be a general raise in lieu of subsistence from what is the present amount allowed to $8 a day.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, my colleague is right. The only raise that we have permitted above $5 in any of the bills until this one has been for subsistence in Alaska, and I asked the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND] at the time why that should be and he said that it costs more up there in Alaska than it does in other parts of the country, and we let it go by for Alaska; but the other employees of the Government have been limited to $4 a day until recently for subsistence, and now in the Diplomatic Service we are allow- just double that amount. We ought to stop this. We are drifting along with the tide in a way that we will strike an iceberg of disaster if we do not stop. We ought to take time by the forelock and be careful in these matters. I read the hearings. They brought one man here who said that it cost him a little extra, and do you know why? They put him up at a fine hotel in Chicago. I do not stop at the most expensive hotels always. I know that if you put him in the Willard or the Raleigh and let these Washington taxicab drivers get hold of him, it is liable to cost a lot of money, but a man has to use some judgment when he is traveling for this Government at the people's expense. A man can afford to be extravagant when he is spending his own money. Our distinguished New York brother, when he goes to New York, can give those red caps a dollar if he wants to, because that is his own money; but if he is spending the people's money he ought to be a little careful about the tips that he gives. That is all I have to say.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, the allowance of $8 a day is a maximum which is reimbursed to the agent of the State Department, provided he spends it. If he spends less than $8 a day, of course he gets only his actual and necessary expenses, not only for traveling but for subsistence.

I wish also to correct the statement that was made that, first of all, we pay the railroad fare and the Pullman fare and the tips and the hotel bills and then allow $8 a day.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; the hotel bill was part of the subsistence.

Mr. TEMPLE. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The $8 a day included the hotel bill.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman stated a moment ago it did not include the hotel bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If so, that was an error.

Mr. TEMPLE. That is the reason I am correcting it.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think I said it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I am glad now there is no difference of opinion about it. I wish to call attention to a statement in the hearings.

Mr. Lay was sent down to Bordeaux under orders of the State Department, and under our present regulations Mr. Lay could only be paid $5 a day. This is found on page 69 of the hearings.

What did it cost you, Mr. Lay?

Mr. LAY. It cost about $35 above my expenses—above the expenses that were allowed me by the Government.

Mr. COCKRAN. Not $35 a day?

Mr. LAY. For the trip.

Mr. COCKRAN. For how many days?

Mr. LAY. I was obliged to spend much more than I was able to collect from the Government—in excess of the $5.

Mr. COCKRAN. For how many days' service?

Mr. LAY. I was there nearly two weeks.

Now, another instance:

Mr. LAY. I may say that I was ordered while at home on leave to the National Foreign Trade Conference in Chicago in 1919, at which I delivered an address, on the instructions of the department, in respect to trade, and that trip cost me about $40 out of my own pocket above the limits of the amount that could be collected from the Government. The department was kind enough to reserve a hotel room for me in Chicago. The cost of the room alone was $4 a day, so I had left a dollar for subsistence above my room, which, of course, was not sufficient.

That is the first-class hotel in Chicago that the gentleman from Texas speaks about, $4 a day. Anybody who travels now knows what kind of a room he can get in a first-class hotel for $4 a day. Under the present allowance the representative of the State Department would have $1 a day left for his three meals. This bill provides for the actual and necessary expenses for travel not in excess of $8 a day, which means that if the representative of the Government gets off with less than $8 a day actual and necessary expenses his allowance will be less than $8, but $8 is the upper limit, and it seems to me any man who travels in these days knows that that is not too much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, let us have a division so as to see if there are any economists here.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That part of the act of July 1, 1916 (Public, No. 131), which authorizes the President to designate and assign any secretary of class 1 as counselor of embassy or legation, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the President may, whenever he considers it advisable so to do, designate and assign any foreign-service officer as counselor of embassy or legation."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the President had authority to assign these respective foreign-service officers to their respective posts. What is the necessity for this legislative provision?

Mr. ROGERS. The title of counselor of embassy is a secondary one. A foreign-service officer when he is sent to a particular capital may act as counselor when so designated by the President, just as a secretary of embassy or legation now may be designated by the President to act as counselor at his post.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it necessary to have this special authorization? I thought the general provisions of the bill authorizing the transfer and retransfer by the President to the various posts were sufficient.

Mr. ROGERS. I can only repeat. This is not a primary designation. The present position of secretary may or may not involve the performance of duties as counselor, and the President is authorized to designate secretaries as counselor under such assignment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What are the special duties of a counselor of embassy or legation?

Mr. ROGERS. He is the representative of the ambassador or minister and in the absence of the ambassador or minister he is in charge. It is a title which has become very well known in every other country but ours, and if we do not have a counselor by name, our man who is performing the duties of counselor is very much handicapped.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where does the chargé d'affaires come in or the secretary of legation? I thought the secretary of legation was under the ambassador or minister under the present organization.

Mr. ROGERS. The secretary of the embassy or legation is designated under the present system to act as counselor. He is one of the secretaries. The chargé d'affaires is simply the officer who is designated during the absence of his chief and is the one who remains in charge.

Mr. STAFFORD. That may apply to the secretary under our present organization?

Mr. ROGERS. It is habitually.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I suppose it will apply to these distinguished counselors of embassies or legations?

Mr. ROGERS. In the absence of the minister the counselor would also be chargé d'affaires.

Mr. STAFFORD. And have this additional designation of chargé d'affaires?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. You have struck out the word "diplomatic" and now use the words "foreign service." In order to make it strictly American, why not, in the section just read, strike out the words "chargé d'affaires" and make it "charge of affairs" and make that American also?

Mr. ROGERS. That is in the next section. It is a little difficult to say why not. Perhaps the only answer I can think of would be that this designation, while it is a strange one to our ears, is known elsewhere all over the world and has been ever since the Congress of Vienna.

Mr. SEARS. Yes; it is known abroad. It is also known to the gentlemen whose salaries are increased?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It corresponds with one of those nine social rungs of the new ladder of the gentleman from Massachusetts that we are to have in our foreign service. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. It corresponds only in the mind of the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That within the discretion of the President, any foreign service officer may be appointed to act as commissioner, chargé d'affaires, minister resident, or diplomatic agent for such period as the public interests may require without loss of grade, class, or salary.

That section 1685 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service, approved February 5, 1915," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1685. That for such time as any foreign service officer shall be lawfully authorized to act as chargé d'affaires ad interim or to assume charge of a consulate general or consulate during the absence of the principal officer at the post to which he shall have been assigned, he shall, if his salary is less than one-half that of such principal officer, receive in addition to his salary as foreign service officer compensation equal to the difference between such salary and one-half of the salary provided by law for the ambassador, minister, or principal consular officer, as the case may be."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUSTED. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Massachusetts how the provision of section 1685 of the Revised Statutes as amended differs from the present law? It seems to me they are exactly the same.

Mr. ROGERS. This section does not change the present law except that it makes it perfectly clear that the section would apply to officers of the foreign service. But it does simplify and bring up to date, somewhat, some of the obsolete propositions of section 1685.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question for the purpose of getting some information. I call the gentleman's attention to section 2 of the bill. Without taking up too much time—I have no desire to do that—I would simply call attention to the fact that in classes 1, 2, and 3, up to and including 8, we find salary increases of $500 or $1,000. We know, of course, from the tables filed by the committee the number of men whose salaries will be increased. I understand the increase in some of these cases will be $1,000.

Mr. ROGERS. The average increase is 14 per cent.

Mr. SEARS. In class 6, as I recall, the person now holding the position is getting $3,500. This makes it $4,500, an increase of $1,000.

Mr. ROGERS. There are some increases at $1,000, but most of them are $500.

Mr. SEARS. In the increases in that class, from $1,500 to $3,000, how many employees are affected?

Mr. ROGERS. About 100.

Mr. SEARS. How many will get the $3,000, and what are they now drawing?

Mr. ROGERS. That unclassified provision is a sort of basket clause, which takes care of men who are now consular assistants, men who are vice consuls, and men who are student interpreters and assistant student interpreters. Each of those three groups has classes within themselves. The man who enters as a vice consul starts at $1,500 and gets ultimately $3,000 as vice consul. The same situation is true generally as to interpreters and assistant interpreters.

Mr. SEARS. What will those who are now receiving $1,500 get under this bill? They are not receiving under $1,000, are they?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think there will be any increase of salary in these unclassified places as compared with the present compensation. The purpose of the department is to have the ultimate objective relatively higher than the initial salary.

Mr. SEARS. These men who do not go to these social functions get only $1,500. It does not seem to matter about their salary?

Mr. ROGERS. It puts a maximum at the top, to which good men may aspire.

Mr. SEARS. Usually it is the man who is now getting $25,000 who will get $30,000 or more. But the man who is working for $1,500 must not expect to get any raise in this country, where we are all supposed to be equal. This is a great country, but I have come to the conclusion that there are only two things in which all men here are equal or where their privileges are the same. We are permitted to live, in most cases I should say exist, and we are permitted to die. It would be futile for me to undertake to increase the salary of any person who is only receiving a salary barely sufficient for him to exist on, for I learned long ago the efforts of anyone would be useless.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Florida ought to be the last man in this body to object to this, and I am surprised that he is objecting to large salaries, because if it were not for this action on the part of our Republican brethren across the aisle the gentlemen who are to be increased would not take their families down to Palm Beach in Florida. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEARS. If I thought the gentlemen who are representing us in China with this meager increase of compensation could pay their way to Palm Beach, I would hesitate to let them come, because they would not have enough money to live on when they got there. It would take all their salary to get to Palm Beach and they would have nothing left. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question or two with reference to the application of the civil service law to members of the Consular Service.

As I understand it now, the civil service law applies only in a limited degree. Does this bill in recasting the service make the civil service rules and regulations applicable to the new service or not?

Mr. ROGERS. No change from the present practice in that regard is contemplated in the present bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. But this bill enlarges very much, it seems to me, the personnel of the Consular Service by recasting it entirely. I am wondering whether under this new measure the civil service rules and regulations are going to be applicable to all these men in the Diplomatic Service except the ministers and ambassadors, so that they may be gauged by the period of service which they faithfully render to the Government, or whether it will be by their opportunity to hold the positions which they hold through varying administrations of the Government.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman is aware, I think, that the examination feature applies to-day to every diplomatic secretary and to every consular officer from top to bottom. But after a man once enters the service his promotion does not depend upon any civil-service consideration. The intent of the committee was to leave the situation in that respect entirely unchanged. Every man who enters the foreign service hereafter enters after examination, with one class excepted. I will read the applicable section:

SEC. 5. That hereafter appointments to the position of foreign service officer shall be made after examination or, after five years of continuous service therein, by transfer from the Department of State under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

Mr. BRIGGS. Appointments of secretaries to embassies now are not made under the civil service or through examination, are they?

Mr. ROGERS. I suggested a moment ago, but perhaps did not make myself entirely clear, that entry into the service heretofore has been and hereafter will be by examination.

Mr. BRIGGS. Even with respect to secretaries of legations and embassies at the present time?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1920, entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," as the same has been or may hereafter be amended, are hereby made applicable to foreign-service officers with the modifications hereinafter stated, to wit:

(a) The age of retirement shall be 65 years: Provided, That the President may in his discretion retain any foreign-service officer who has reached the age of 65 years for such period not exceeding five years as he may deem for the interests of the United States.

(b) The maximum and minimum annuities under the several classes, instead of those stipulated in section 2 of the said act, shall be as follows:

Class A, maximum annuity $5,400, minimum annuity $1,500; class B, maximum annuity $4,860, minimum annuity $1,350; class C, maximum annuity $4,320, minimum annuity $1,200; class D, maximum annuity $3,780, minimum annuity $1,050; class E, maximum annuity $3,240, minimum annuity $900; class F, maximum annuity $2,700, minimum annuity $750.

(c) In lieu of section 3 of the said act the following provision shall apply:

That for the purposes of this act the period of service shall be computed from the date of original oath of office as secretary in the Diplomatic Service, consul general, consul, vice consul of career, consular assistant, or student interpreter, and shall include periods of service at different times in either the Diplomatic or Consular Service, or while on assignment to the Department of State, or on special duty, but all periods of separation from the service and so much of any period of leave of absence as may exceed six months shall be excluded: Provided, That the President is authorized from time to time to establish, by Executive order, a list of places in tropical countries which by reason of climatic or other extreme conditions are to be classed as unhealthful posts, and each year of duty at such posts while so classed, inclusive of regular leaves of absence, shall be counted as one year and a half, and so on in like proportion in reckoning the length of service for the purposes of retirement: Provided further, That service in the Department of State prior to appointment as a foreign service officer may be included in the period of service, in which case the officer shall pay into the civil-service retirement and disability fund a special contribution equal to 5 per cent of his annual salary for each year of such employment, with interest thereon to date of payment compounded annually at 4 per cent, less a deduction of the amount of all contributions and accrued interest thereon previously paid by such employee into the civil-service retirement and disability fund under the act of May 22, 1920.

(d) That the rate of deduction in the case of all officers eligible to retirement under the provisions of this act shall be a sum equal to 5 per cent of that portion of the basis salary not in excess of $9,000.

(e) In lieu of section 15 of the said act the following provision shall apply:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the payment of annuities provided for in this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

The Secretary of the Interior shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary to continue this act in full force and effect.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 11, line 10, after the word "employment" strike out the words "after this act goes into effect."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment. In line 19 of page 11 strike out the word "basis" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "basic."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 11, line 19, strike out the word "basis" and insert in lieu thereof the word "basic."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move further to amend, in line 20, page 11, and down to and including line 5, on page 12, to strike out all of subsection (e).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 11, beginning with line 20, strike out the remainder of the page, and on page 12 strike out all of lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

Mr. ROGERS. That is all provided for in the Lehlbach Act, and apparently it is not necessary to repeat it here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Pages 10, 11, and 12, strike out paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 15.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, if the House should agree to my amendment, the following provision in the bill would be left unimpaired:

SEC. 16. That the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1920, entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," as the same has been or may hereafter be amended, are hereby made applicable to foreign service officers with the modifications hereinafter stated, to wit.

And then the modification in paragraph (a) would be retained, which would permit these foreign service officers to retire at the age of 65.

Gentlemen of the House who are familiar with the civil service retirement act—and, of course, that includes most Members—know that there are three ages of retirement—62 for railway mail clerks, 65 for rural carriers, and 70 for Government employees generally. I think it would be all right to agree to paragraph (a), which provides for the retirement of these foreign service officers at the age of 65; but the main point that I have in mind is this: Inasmuch as we are giving to these foreign service officers what amounts to a civil service status, I agree that it is all right to bring them under the terms of the civil service retirement act. I see no objection to that. But this act goes much further in its provisions than the general civil service retirement law and provides rates of annuities which are extravagant and excessive. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] yesterday urged as a reason for passing this bill that it was in the interest of agriculture and the farmer. I imagine that the farmer will enthuse a great deal over retiring a Government employee who has been receiving $9,000 a year for 30 years, or $270,000 aggregate, and retiring him at $5,400 per year, which is what this bill does. Of course, the case I have cited is of the highest rate provided in the bill, but nevertheless it is a real illustration and not an imaginary one.

Gentlemen, the reason that I have taken the floor to discuss this particular provision is that I happen to be a member of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and have had something to do with the general retirement act. Our committee now has before it several bills to increase the annuities under that act; but we have taken the view, and the Members of the House have urged upon us the view, and I think very properly, that now is no time to increase the burdens of the Treasury by increasing the annuities under the retirement act.

If we had brought into this House a bill that was anything like as extravagant in its payments as the provisions of this bill, gentleman would have said: "Well, now, that may be all well and good, but now is no time to do it. Economy is imperative."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. At a time when everybody is crying out against the burdens of taxation, when criticism is being made in every quarter that legislative bodies are too extravagant, it is properly urged that we should not bring in a bill enlarging annuity payments, and we have refrained from doing it, and have not given hearings on the bill. And yet if the House passes this provision you will be setting a precedent that will confront the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in the very near future.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Under this bill the employee pays 5 per cent, while under the general law he pays 2½ per cent. Would not the high-salaried officer have to pay a good deal more for what he gets than he would under the civil service law?

Mr. BLACK. No. The annuities which are provided in this bill are much more generous in amount than those which are provided under the general law.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Let me answer the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman can answer both questions at the same time.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

Mr. LONDON. You can not get an annuity until the man has been in the service 15 years. That means until he has contributed 75 per cent of the amount—I do not know whether that 75 per cent includes compound interest or not, but at least he would contribute 75 per cent of his annuity. The gentleman should take that into consideration.

Mr. BLACK. Now, I want to answer the questions of my friends from Wisconsin and New York. In the first place, the retirement act will become effective at once, as the foreign-service officers will be entitled to retirement when they reach the retirement age whether they have paid in 75 per cent or not. Then there is another argument which has been used in this debate similar to that made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New York, and it is a misleading argument. It is: That because there is a large fund accumulating in the Treasury to the credit of the retirement fund, therefore larger annuities can be paid without any greater charge upon the Treasury. Every one knows that the only sound principle to base an annuity fund on is to create a fund large enough which will not only pay the current obligations but will set up a reserve sufficient to take care of the obligations maturing in the future. Nearly every fraternal insurance order that has ever gone on the rocks has gone there because it did not charge an adequate rate which would pay the current obligations and set up a sufficient reserve to take care of those liabilities which were inevitably to come later. I will admit that we do not expect the civil-service retirement fund to be self-sustaining. It is estimated, I believe, that the Government will pay anywhere from 50 to 65 per cent and the employees will pay the balance. The estimates vary. If I understand the debate on this bill correctly, it is assumed that the foreign-service officers will pay about 42 per cent and the Government will pay the balance. Now, that brings me down specifically to the question which the gentleman from New York asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Now, what led the gentleman from New York into error for the moment is that he was thinking of the payment of annuity for one year only. The gentleman from New York says because an employee pays in 5 per cent of his annual pay for 15 years, therefore he would pay in 75 per cent of his retirement fund. But I would remind him that the employee who reaches the age of 65 years will have an expectancy of probably 10 years. If the retirement pay is, we will say, $2,500 per year, then the total amount which would be paid him during his expectancy of 10 years would amount to $25,000; therefore a 5 per cent payment annually for 15 years would not create a fund that would equal anything like $25,000. What the gentleman had in mind was that 15 payments would equal 75 per cent of one year's pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am interested, and I think the membership of the House is interested, in what effect the gentleman's amendment would have and what retirement pay they would receive if this amendment is adopted; also how much they would contribute proportionately. This matter has been under consideration in general debate, and we would like to know how much of a charge it would be on the Treasury.

Mr. BLACK. If my amendment is adopted, these employees will all be brought under the general civil service retirement act and instead of paying 5 per cent of their salaries into the annuity fund they will pay 2½ per cent to such fund, and upon retirement will receive the same retirement pay as other Government employees, as follows:

Class A, from $720, maximum, to $360, minimum; class B, from $648, maximum, to $324, minimum; class C, from $576, maximum, to $288, minimum; class D, from $504, maximum, to $252, minimum; class E, from $432, maximum, to $216, minimum; class F, from $360, maximum, to $180, minimum.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen may say the figures I have given is too small a retirement fund. But we must remember that this thing of retiring civilian employees is a new departure and we should not enter upon any extravagant rates. Therefore I want to place the class of Government employees covered by this bill under the very same civil service retirement law as applies to other Government employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, this retirement section of the bill, which is a very important one and which, of course, should be thoroughly understood, has been discussed at every phase in the debate. I should very much like, primarily for the convenience of the committee, to see if we can not agree on time when we shall close debate on this section. I suggest that we close debate on this section in 20 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how it is to be divided?

Mr. ROGERS. I have in mind five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, the gentleman from Florida said he would like five minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] five minutes, and I want to reserve five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Make it 25 minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I will make it 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word in reference to annuities. I notice in most of the discussion carried on that gentlemen seem to think that a very large portion of the annuities are to be paid out of salaries of those who draw the annuities, but, as a matter of fact, whatever the annuities may be they are in the last analysis paid out of the Treasury of the United States, because the salaries are increased, and out of those increases the Government collects a sum and thus creates a fund. That is the true principle of all annuities, so I do not think that the fact that some part of the annuities are paid out of salaries amounts to much one way or the other. I am not discussing the merits of the annuity, but am endeavoring to direct attention to the fact that, whatever annuities may be allowed, a measure is usually so drafted that the net balance after the deduction of anything that may be used for the annuity fund is about what those drafting the measure think the compensation for that particular work should be. In other words, enough is usually added to the salary to take care of the annuity contributions, so that after all the annuity is paid out of the Treasury. But here is the principal point I want to make, and it seems to me it is an important one. The annuity is paid simply for this reason, that it is desired that no man who has been in the employ of the Government for a long period of years should be permitted to be in want after he is disconnected from the service.

I never understood that the purpose of an annuity was to enable a man to have more than just enough to keep him from being in want or being in privation and misery and suffering.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In a moment. Surely it has never been the purpose to enable a man from the annuity alone to live in a better condition than the average American citizen is able to live.

Mr. BLACK. I just want to agree with the gentleman, that the public has the right to expect that a Government official drawing $8,000 or $9,000 a year will make some provision for himself; and then, of course, according to my view, if Congress allows an annuity, it should be a small annuity such as is paid by the Government to its subordinate employees.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think the gentleman's idea is entirely correct. In the nature of things everybody in this country can not be paid an annuity. The argument on which all annuities have been allowed is that when a man has worked for a long period of years for the Government the Government should see to it that after he has given that service he should not fall into poverty or want. In most instances men should be able to put aside something for a rainy day, but if they have not been able to do that, the Government should not do more than pay such a sum as will not permit them to come to want. I do not think that on that basis the Government should pay a class of men as much as $5,400 per year; not that a man can not use that much and more, but because it is not intended that the taxpayer shall be taxed to establish a fund to pay any man as much as may enable him of itself to live in any degree of luxury. I think that would be contrary to the whole basis and theory of an annuity.

Of course, it would be nice for every one of them to get $5,400 per year. It would also be fine if every taxpayer could receive that much after he has done his duty and reached the age of 65. But in the nature of things that is impossible. After you have passed the stage where it is necessary to keep a man from suffering actual bodily want, you pass beyond the pale of what I conceive you are privileged to do in taking money out of the Treasury of the United States and giving it to any man, regardless of how long he may have served and regardless of how valuable his service may have been.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, of course I realize the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will not carry, because all efforts for economy seem to be futile. But by making these few remarks perhaps we can call the attention of the country to some of the conditions as they exist.

I am not opposed to retirement in some cases. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] said he could imagine the enthusiasm of the farmers when they learned that men who have been drawing $9,000 a year had been retired at an annuity of $5,400 a year.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. If I get time to-morrow, I am going to make that speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, when interrupted I just stated that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] said he could imagine the enthusiasm of the farmers when they learned that gentlemen who had been drawing a salary of $9,000 a year would be retired at an annuity of $5,400 a year. I can also imagine the enthusiasm with which this will be received by the merchants and laboring men of this country who are receiving in many cases far less than $9,000 a year; in fact, many of them barely eke out an existence. Of course all the people pay taxes, either directly or indirectly. When they purchase merchandise of course the taxes must be added to what they buy, and therefore they indirectly pay their taxes, and already the burden has just about reached the breaking point.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] also stated, Mr. Chairman, that these men would be retired at the end of 30 years' service. In that he is not correct. I desire to call his attention to the fact that this bill provides that it is possible after only 15 years or less of service they may be retired with this annuity. I stated the other day that if I had my way I would incorporate in this bill that they would have to be in the Government service at least 30 years in order to receive this retirement and annuity.

Some years ago, when I first came to Congress, I called the attention of the House to several of the retirement features which the taxpayers were paying and which I believed they were not aware of. Let me again call attention to the fact that two departments of this Government alone were paying, about 6 years ago, approximately $12,000,000 as retirement pay to employees of those departments. The judges of the United States courts and other officials are retired with a certain annuity.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] called attention to the fact that other Government employees were now being retired, but at a much smaller rate than that provided in this bill, so that I think I can safely say that the taxpayers of this country are now being taxed at least $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 a year to pay annuities already provided for by law, and now you propose to further tax them, unless the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is adopted, to keep those who have been receiving $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, or $9,000 a year from suffering during the few remaining years of their lives.

When I think of Uncle JOE CANNON, that grand old man who for 46 years has devoted his life to his country, who has so well and faithfully served in this House, who is still active and energetic, although 87 years of age, and who, unfortunately for his country, will, on the 4th of next March, voluntarily retire from this House without an annuity, I sometimes wonder why it is that more of the people do not complain when we retire young men at the age of 65 and tax old men for the purpose of keeping them in luxury and permitting them to continue the mode of life which they have enjoyed in the past.

I might also call your attention to the services of the Clerk of the House, Mr. Tyler Page. For almost 42 years he has been continuously in the employ of the Government. He began as page in 1881, and by faithful, earnest, and conscientious efforts at all times has finally advanced to his present position. In passing I would be remiss if I did not mention Mr. Cameron, assistant reporter, with a record of 42 years; Mr. W. A. Smith, clerk in charge at Capitol of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with a record of 45 years; Mr. Sam Robinson, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD messenger, with a record of 41 years. Sam, as he is known, goes whether the weather is good or bad, and we all know how well and faithfully he performs his duties. There are others too numerous to mention, but just as faithful.

We know the uncertainty of a political life, and the position of each of these is in a way political. Therefore they may be dropped from the roll at any time; and if such should be the case, regardless of how well they have performed their duties, they would receive no annuity.

Let us hope while they have been faithful and energetic that they have provided for the future.

Mr. Chairman, where and when will this end? When, if there is to be a retirement policy, will all be placed on an equality?

Certainly, if we keep up our present unequal and uncertain policy the taxpayers will not be able to stand up under the burden.

I therefore sincerely trust the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will be adopted; but, as I stated before, I doubt it, for many talk economy but vote otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the question of retirement, as set forth in this foreign service bill, was given very considerable attention by the committee. We admit that these retirement allowances are larger than those provided in the Lehlbach Act for other governmental employees and in which the retirement is too small. It must be remembered that this is an entirely different service. This is a foreign service, where men are sent to various sections of the world. Some of the places to which they are sent are not healthful. In most of them living is very expensive, and a man is somewhat like a preacher who may be in one section for a year or two and is subject to orders, and is moved from place to place, in the case of foreign-service men sometimes a thousand or two thousand miles away. His conditions are such that he can not save anything for the time when he will need it, when old age or sickness comes on. In several branches of the Government we have recognized a much larger retirement allowance than is granted in the Lehlbach bill. For instance, in the Army and Navy, where a man is given three-quarters of his grade pay upon retirement, and he makes no contribution whatever to the fund. We give the judges about three-quarters of their pay on retirement and they make no contribution to the fund. Here we give them at most 60 per cent and compel them to pay 5 per cent, being twice what is required under the Lehlbach bill. Very few will ever get the 60 per cent—those entitled must have served 30 years, a mighty long time to be moved from pillar to post in all manner of countries.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is not fair in his argument. He argues that in 30 years a man ought to save enough to help himself out on $9,000 a year. Well, there are very few men in the service who get $9,000 a year, and it is most likely that a man would never get $9,000 except for a couple of years. He starts at a very low salary. At the present time he starts at a salary which does not even pay his expenses. As I said the other day, at the present time the salaries of most of them when they start are so low that the department will not even appoint a married man to the low-grade positions, because they say he can not support a wife on the salary. Therefore, we place this retirement upon a 60 per cent basis for 30 years' service. If a man has been in the service only 15 years and reaches the age of 65 he gets only 30 per cent.

The gentleman must remember another thing. The foreign service is practically self-supporting and costs the Government very little money indeed. There is another thing that we must remember, and if gentlemen would only take the trouble to read some parts of these hearings where these matters are set out very fully, I do not think we would need a great deal of discussion. On page 30 of the hearings it is shown that we will not have to pay a single dollar into this fund for 20 years. Beginning in 1944, we will be compelled to pay, perhaps, $48,000, but in the next 20 years the money paid in by the employees into this service will take care of the fund. And it is estimated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who brings the statistics here to prove it, that even under present conditions in 1965 we will be paying only $260,000 a year. I believe the foreign-service fees will increase more than enough in that time to take care of this additional burden.

I append the statement showing how this retirement feature will work to the year 1944, and, as I have said, after that time, unless the returns from the foreign service increases, which I believe they will, the Government will be compelled to contribute to the fund, just as it will be compelled to contribute under the Lehlbach bill for other civil employees.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT SYSTEM.

Statement showing estimated annuities payable to foreign-service officers under the proposed retirement system prior to the year 1944, which will be paid solely from the contributions, with interest thereon, of such officers.

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Annuities payable during year.	Available retirement fund from contributions with interest compounded at 4 per cent.	Balance after payment of annuities.	Necessary appropriation.
1924	$61,176.41	$143,719.85	$82,543.44	$50,000.00
1925	71,791.67	229,405.80	157,614.13	.....
1926	80,866.60	307,343.20	226,476.60	.....
1927	86,633.43	378,873.36	292,219.93	.....
1928	93,260.35	446,654.93	353,394.58	.....
1929	97,131.26	510,257.20	413,125.94	.....
1930	101,759.00	572,762.10	471,003.10	.....
1931	111,163.40	632,812.27	521,648.87	.....
1932	116,355.09	685,406.97	569,051.88	.....
1933	129,925.29	734,502.58	604,577.28	.....
1934	141,951.55	771,268.00	629,316.95	.....

Statement showing estimated annuities payable to foreign-service officers under the proposed retirement system, etc.—Continued.

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Annuities payable during year.	Available retirement fund from contributions with interest compounded at 4 per cent.	Balance after payment of annuities.	Necessary appropriation.
1935	$149,410.66	$796,989.63	$647,578.97
1936	164,715.13	815,902.13	651,267.00
1937	179,978.65	819,817.68	639,839.13
1938	199,987.14	807,932.70	607,945.56
1939	212,814.00	774,763.38	561,949.38
1940	232,009.55	726,927.36	494,827.81
1941	248,431.01	657,120.92	408,689.91
1942	265,266.43	567,537.51	302,271.08
1943	308,209.60	456,861.92	148,652.32
1944	346,050.10	297,098.00		48,951.69

I believe with the enactment of this measure we will have placed upon the statute books one of the most constructive pieces of legislation which this Congress has enacted. Certainly the most constructive piece of legislation passed during my service of 12 years for the foreign service. It will of course increase salaries about 14 per cent, but it will give a stability to the service, the value of which can not possibly be estimated. Men will enter with a desire to make it their career, and it will not be like it is now—as soon as men are equipped for the service they become more valuable to private individuals and corporations.

It is true that individuals and corporations may still offer larger salaries than the foreign service can afford, but they can never give them that position in life and that standing in their communities which the foreign service affords them, nor will they be able to assure them of a fair retirement after they have performed their life work. If we would extend our trade and our influence among the nations of the world, we must be prepared to meet other nations in competitive work.

With a well organized and an efficient foreign service composed of men equipped and with experience, we can compete.

I believe that this service will be of great benefit to all our people in that it will bring trade and business for our farmers and our factories. The foreign-service men will compose a satisfied and contented body of men, and that is certainly of great value to any nation or to any people.

While we have somewhat increased salaries, we are still far below our competitor Great Britain, as shown by the statement I append. Hereafter, our foreign service will represent both the diplomatic and consular; it will enable the President to shift men from one service to the other; it will democratize the service, because men can be removed from one to the other; it will bring about a better understanding and agreement between the Diplomatic and Consular Bureaus of the Foreign Service, and as I have said before, I believe the legislation will be of inestimable benefit to our people everywhere, and certainly enhance the value and importance of the service.

Comparative statement showing salaries of ambassadors and ministers at important posts.

	Great Britain.	United States.
Albania	$8,515	$10,000
Argentina	43,978	17,500
Austria	[1] 21,899	10,000
Belgium	[1] 26,765	17,500
Bolivia	14,599	10,000
Brazil	45,014	17,500
Bulgaria	17,032	10,000
Chile	23,359	[1] 17,500
China	[1] 24,332	[1] 12,000
Colombia	14,399	10,000
Cuba	19,012	[1] 12,000
Czechoslovakia	19,466	10,000
Denmark	21,899	10,000
Egypt	[1] 58,398	7,500
Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania	18,006	10,000
Finland	18,735	10,000
France	[1] 80,297	17,500
Germany	[1] 38,932	17,500
Great Britain		17,500
Greece	19,466	10,000
Italy	[1] 38,932	17,500
Japan	[1] 29,199	[1] 17,500
Mexico	14,599	[1] 17,500
Netherlands	[1] 24,332	12,000
Norway	21,899	10,000
Panama	15,572	[1] 10,000
Persia	24,332	10,000
Peru	18,102	17,500
Poland	[2] 7,252	12,000

[1] Residences owned by Government and supplied in addition to salary.

Comparative statement showing salaries of ambassadors and ministers at important posts—Continued.

	Great Britain.	United States.
Portugal	$19,466	$10,000
Rumania	19,466	10,000
Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes	18,979	10,000
Siam	14,599	[1] 10,000
Spain	[1] 29,199	17,500
Sweden	21,899	10,000
Switzerland	[1] 18,248	10,000
Turkey	[1] 42,581	17,500
United States	[1] 97,330
Uruguay	20,439	10,000
Venezuela	14,599	10,000

[1] Residences owned by Government and supplied in addition to salary.

Comparative statement showing salaries of principal consular officers at important posts.

	Great Britain.	United States
Argentina:
Buenos Aires	$11,922	$8,000
Rosario	7,907	3,500
Austria, Vienna	6,325	3,500
Belgium, Antwerp	9,246	4,500
Brazil:
Bahia	8,394	4,000
Para	9,124	5,000
Rio de Janeiro	12,166	8,000
Chile, Valparaiso	11,679	5,500
Denmark, Copenhagen	6,569	5,500
Ecuador, Guayaquil	6,812	5,500
France:
Bordeaux	6,447	4,500
Havre	6,569	5,500
Lille	6,325	4,000
Lyon	6,569	5,000
Marseille	9,246	5,000
Paris	9,246	12,000
Germany:
Berlin	9,002	6,000
Cologne	9,002	4,500
Hamburg	8,759	4,000
Munich	6,325	2,500
Great Britain, London		12,000
Greece, Athens	6,325	5,500
Italy:
Genoa	9,246	5,500
Milan	9,246	5,000
Naples	9,246	5,000
Palermo	6,447	4,000
Mexico, Mexico City	8,273	[1] 5,000
Netherlands:
Amsterdam	6,325	5,000
Rotterdam	9,246	8,000
Norway:
Christiania	6,569	5,500
Bergen	6,325	4,500
Paraguay, Asuncion	6,813	4,000
Peru, Callao	8,150	[1] 4,500
Poland, Warsaw	6,447	6,000
Portugal:
Lisbon	6,325	4,500
Lourenco Marques	8,515	3,500
Rumania, Bucharest	6,447	5,000
Russia:
Moscow	9,246	[2] 5,500
Petrograd	7,664	[2] 3,500
Spain:
Barcelona	9,246	5,500
Madrid	6,447	2,500
Sweden:
Goteborg	9,246	3,000
Stockholm	6,447	8,000
Switzerland:
Geneva	6,326	3,500
Zurich	9,246	8,000
Turkey:
Constantinople	8,759	8,000
Beirut	8,759	4,000
Smyrna	8,759	5,500
United States, New York	26,035

[1] Consul temporarily in charge. [2] Office now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been limited, so that the Chair does not feel at liberty to entertain that request.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in adopting the recommendation of the committee extending the principle of retirement to officers of the Government, we are indeed proceeding on very dangerous ground when the recommendation comes from a committee that has not given the exhaustive consideration to this subject that the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service would have given it. As the Members of this House know, the retirement feature of the law applies to employees connected with the civil service and not to officers. We are attempting here for the first time to extend it by a different rule of payment to officers of the Government. This is the beginning of a far venture, and no one can tell how extensive it will be.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have only five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I wish simply to ask the gentleman if these foreign-service employees are not like military officers?

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not like military officers. The hearings disclose that with the salaries that are to be paid these positions will be desired and sought after for a literary career.

Mr. HERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I decline to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma. We are not proposing to retire them under the general provisions of the retirement act. It is stated that the conditions are similar to those which apply to the judges.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a very brief question?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have not the time to yield. If I had the time, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York. As far as the judges are concerned, everyone knows that we pay our judges salaries not commensurate with the work they perform—district judges only $7,500 and circuit judges $8,500. They give their best years to the service. In the foreign service they do nothing that conflicts with their taking private employment afterwards.

But worse than all, in this provision recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs you are proposing to retire men at a maximum of $5,400 and a minimum of $1,500, where under the retirement act their retired pay would be only $360 minimum and $720 maximum. No man will be kept out of the service if we apply only the retirement features of the general law to these men. No men have been kept out of this service, as far as consular officers are concerned. Even under the present scale of employment there have been numerous applications for consular positions. It is proposed to raise their salaries a minimum of $500 a year and some of them $1,000. Yet you are going ahead without the legislative committee, the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, having investigated the subject, and are establishing a policy that is going to haunt us in the future.

The naval service or the military service is not akin to this service. As a general thing, when a man in the military or naval service gets to the age of retirement he is incapacitated. These gentlemen in the foreign service, in the Consular Service and secretarial service, are not incapacitated from doing other civilian work.

When the War Department appropriation bill was before the House it was called to our attention that enlisted men were retired on $1,200 and $1,400 pay, and a total of $7,000,000 was appropriated for retired pay of enlisted men alone. Members were amazed; they could not believe it. Now, you are proposing to give retirement pay to many men who have reached retirement age who will not contribute anything. I never desired to enter the Diplomatic Service, but if I wanted a good easy berth for life, I would seek the Consular and Diplomatic Service.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman realize that unless you make some provision for the future of these men when at the height of their usefulness, when they can render the best service to the Government, when they have acquired the ability to secure outside positions, they are going outside to get the positions, and that they are compelled to do it in order to make provision for themselves and their families? They are not going to stay in the Diplomatic Service when they can get a position that will provide for them outside.

Mr. STAFFORD. I differ with the gentleman having the State Department bill in charge. We are raising the salaries of secretaries from $4,000 up to $8,000. The exceptionally bright will generally not remain, the mediocre will cling to the service regardless of retirement pay or not. These high rates are extravagance run wild.

Mr. BLANTON. We have to make provision for the lame ducks.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will not have to make any provision for me, for I am going back to private life.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the retirement provision partly because it is fair to the individual, but I am in favor of it more because it is fair to the United States. It is interesting to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] declaim about the evils of this proposal. It may be that if the retirement question was coming up for the first time, that if we had never retired officers of the United States in the past, his argument would have some force and importance. But, Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a list of 20 or 25 different classes and types of Government officers and employees who are retired under provisions of as many existing laws. It is too late to say that retirement is not the policy of the United States, provided the elements of time, nature of service, and propriety warrant.

I have in my hand the indorsement of the bill from the very people about whom previous speakers have been so much concerned. I have the indorsement of organized labor of the United States to this bill from the first line to the last. I do not, of course, say that should be conclusive on the House, but I do suggest that when men say we are doing something unwise and unfair in this measure that the workingmen of America, speaking through organized labor, cordially approve our proposals.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not regarded as an extravagant man in his views and recommendations. I think most of us have in the past frequently felt that the gentleman from Illinois sometimes erred on the side of economy but never that he erred on the side of extravagance. I desire to call the attention of Members who were not present to the fact that earlier in the day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made a most convincing speech for this bill, and especially for this retirement system. He stated that the proposed retirement would not cost the Government a single penny until 1944. He stated that in 1965 the maximum appropriation from the Government that would be required would be between $200,000 and $250,000. He said that this legislation presents, in his judgment, a wise business program of economy for the United States. If he at all criticized the committee, it was because we recommended a contribution of 5 per cent from officers of the foreign service instead of 2½ per cent, as in the Lehlbach law.

I may repeat, in closing the debate upon this important provision, that the three-fourths retirement pay for our Army and Navy officers has not been contributed to in the least degree by the officers themselves. Further, the foreign service retirement, universally found in the case of foreign countries, is wholly noncontributory. We are doing too little rather than too much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 15, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. In the event of public emergency any retired foreign service officer may be recalled temporarily to active service by the President, and while so serving he shall be entitled in lieu of his retirement allowance to the full pay of the class in which he is temporarily serving.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I merely rose for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, the author of the bill, or any other person who will acknowledge being the father of the measure and responsible for its care and bringing up, a few questions. This is a bill providing for the retirement of persons now serving in the Consular and Diplomatic Service accredited to foreign governments.

If this bill should pass the House and Senate immediately, would any of these persons be retired soon enough to make open positions for the possible benefit of defeated Congressmen or Senators, so that they might be appointed to these positions?

Mr. ROGERS. I think so.

Mr. HERRICK. Then, in that event I want to say that I am among those who are not coming back, and I am also among those who are not hunting for any Federal appointment. I do not like the idea of defeated Congressmen and Senators running after Federal appointments after their term in the Senate or the House expires, and I for one am not going to run after any Federal appointment. In fact, there is where the odium and the ridicule is being heaped upon Congress, and there is where that rather uncomplimentary term "congressional lame duck" comes from. It is because Senators and Congressmen lay aside their dignity to go down to the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue and ask for an appointment. It is rather distasteful to me to see them lower their dignity in that manner, and I would like to be assured by the chairman of this committee that he will introduce an amendment barring ex-Members of the House and ex-Senators from being beneficiaries of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. What are we going to do with these hundred lame ducks?

Mr. HERRICK. Let them go home and feed in their own corn fields.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The question naturally arises, Where are we going to end with this matter of retirement pay? I doubt very seriously if Members of the House realize the extent to which Congress, by first one law and then another, has practically provided for rewarding men with pensions who have been privileged and had the honor of serving their Government. I have been reared with the notion—it may be foolish—that it is a privilege and an honor to be selected as an officer of the United States Government, however simple and humble the office may be. I have never yet been able to comprehend the argument of those who say that one who receives the benefit of that honor and that distinction places the taxpayers of this country under a pecuniary obligation to pension him in his old age. But, Mr. Chairman, if you are going down that road, it occurs to me we ought not to discriminate. I saw my good friend, the lady from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON], a moment ago voting upon the amendment that has just been defeated, and I recall how she and I have pleaded with a committee of this House to grant a small recognition of the splendid services and the risk of life that a certain group of men rendered and suffered in the early days of the Indian Territory. I refer to the old deputy United States marshals of that Territory. There were not many of those men left when we appeared before the committee—72—a few months ago, and some of them have died since then. They are wrinkled and withered and old and gray, most of them depending for their living upon the bounty of their friends. They went into that Territory as special United States deputy marshals under the peculiar jurisdiction of a special court, and they rendered military service in maintaining law and order and bringing to justice the outlaws who had disturbed four or five States surrounding the Indian Territory.

Oh, it sounds like a romance to read the story of the splendid service of those heroic men. Their service was really military service, and at times as few as five or six of them rendered greater military service than a whole troop of soldiers, and in more than one instance they have gone out and captured bands that a whole military company had not been able even to locate. Yet, when we go before that committee, the lady from Oklahoma and I, we have been met with the bland smile and the statement that to grant our request would be extending the pension laws to the civil service of the United States.

Mr. HUSTED. Over how long a period did that service extend?

Mr. WINGO. They served for several years. We established a special court with special jurisdiction at Fort Smith. Theirs was the most daring and the most hazardous service that any troop of military men ever rendered in America, and I feel deeply the fact that this Congress is adjourning and that the lady from Oklahoma and I have not been able to have a modicum of justice done to these old men. Only one or two of them live in my district; most of them live in Oklahoma, Texas, and in Kansas. These old men rendered real military service, though not officially designated as such. I have seen a few of them on parade, crippled, weak, but still there was the daring in their eyes; there was the courage apparent that made their service so valuable. They maintained law and order and saved civilization in those trying times, and yet Miss ALICE and I, when we asked that they be placed on the pension rolls of the Government, are met with the reply that we can not do that, and the men who turned us down vote to-day to practically pension these consular officers who hold honorable positions and run no risk to either their lives or their property. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That all moneys heretofore appropriated for the Diplomatic and Consular Service of the United States are hereby made available for the purposes of this act.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 18, strike out all of section 19 and insert the following: "SEC. 19. That the appropriations contained in Title I of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes,' approved January 3, 1923, for such compensation and expenses as are affected by the provisions of this act, are made available and may be applied toward the payment of the compensation and expenses herein provided for, except that no part of such appropriations shall be available for the payment of annuities to retired foreign-service officers."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, just a word upon the amendment. The suggestion came from Mr. MADDEN, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the language of the present section 19 might be broader than was wise from an accounting standpoint. The language which I have offered was drafted in the Committee on Appropriations and meets with the approval both of Mr. MADDEN and of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] who was in charge of the bill mentioned in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1923.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERRICK: Page 12, after line 21, insert as a new section as follows:

"That no one who is now a Member of the House or Senate of the United States shall be eligible to any appointment under this act."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that it is not germane to the section. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROGERS. The provision of section 20 is that this act shall take effect on July 1, 1923. The proposal of the gentleman from Oklahoma is not cast in the form of a limitation and has no relationship whatever to the mere assertion of the date upon which this act shall take effect.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that the Constitution itself is declaratory on this, and under the Constitution not a single Member of this House or the other House, if it should pass, would be eligible.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of this committee stated to me a little while ago that one of the purposes of this bill was to make provision for some of these so-called lame ducks.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dignify that remark by denying it. Of course, I said nothing of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is evidently not germane to the section to which it is offered.

Mr. HERRICK. I offer it as a separate section and make it read section 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and offer it as a separate section. Is there objection?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been sustained the amendment goes out and unanimous consent is not required. The gentleman offers his amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, after line 21, insert as a new section the following: "That no one who is now a Member of the House or Senate of the United States shall be eligible to any appointment under this act."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order on the ground that the amendment is not germane to the subject matter of the section immediately preceding, and I call attention of the Chair to the fact that early in the bill there were at least two sections to which this amendment might appropriately have followed as far as the question of germaneness was concerned.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am not in sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma and I expect to vote against it, but I certainly do not think it is subject to the point of order that has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The mere fact on his last proposition that there occurred an opportunity in a prior section of the bill to offer a limitation of this character—and that was waived by the failure to offer it—certainly does not inhibit any Member at any subsequent stage of the proceedings from offering an amendment which is germane to the general purposes of the bill; and it seems to me that the amendment is entirely germane to the purpose of the bill, because it prescribes, in effect, a limitation upon the personnel of these consular officers who are covered in the bill, and it seems to me, upon reflection, the Chair will come to the conclusion that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule in favor of the gentleman. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment which provides that no former Member of the House or Senate shall be eligible to any of these appointments. He offers it as a separate section. Of course, it has been sometimes held that an amendment offered to a preceding section must be germane to the one immediately preceding, but the rule in reference to germaneness when a separate section is offered is not so strict as in case of amendment to a section. The Chair is inclined to think on a bill covering many different employees and officers this sort of provision offered at the close thereof should be held in order. The point of order is overruled. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK].

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, this Congress will adjourn on March 4, 1923, and this act will take effect on July 1, 1923. Well, now, from March 4 to July 1 that would be just simply time for the Members of the House and Senate who are, according to the funny papers and the yellow papers, designated as "lame ducks"—as I say, it just gives them time enough to arrange their own private affairs and to heckle and harass the President, saying, "Please give me a Federal plum, so that I can go abroad at Federal expense," and I feel that they ought to go home and attend to their own knitting, and if there has been anything wrong about the election—that is, if they received any injustice at the hands of anybody—they can go back and have ample time to right it. I have intended to show for a long time where Newberryism has been rather rampant in the House and Senate and deserving Members have been beaten out by unfair means for reelection, and all that.

But I contend that it is up to them to go back and refight their battle, and, if they want to continue in the Government service, either come back here or let a decent, respectable interval elapse between the expiration of their service in the House here and their seeking to reenter the Federal service. In fact, it looks rather unwise to me, and it gives an opportunity to such papers as those that I have designated "yellow rags," such as the Washington Times and the Washington Herald, to poke fun at those men and refer to them as lame ducks quacking around the public corncrib, and all that. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to close debate on the bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13880) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill H. R. 13880, reports that that committee had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. HERRICK. Withdraw nothing. Give me time to make my speech to-morrow and I will stop filibustering. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is no quorum present.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Focht	Kraus	Riordan
Ansorge	Free	Kreider	Rodenberg
Atkeson	Freeman	Kunz	Rose
Barkley	French	Langley	Rosenbloom
Beck	Funk	Larson, Minn.	Rossdale
Blakeney	Gahn	Lee, Ga.	Rucker
Bland, Ind.	Garner	Lee, N. Y.	Ryan
Boies	Garrett, Tex.	Lehlbach	Scott, Mich.
Bowers	Gensman	Lineberger	Scott, Tenn.
Brennan	Gilbert	Logan	Shreve
Britten	Goldsborough	McFadden	Siegel
Brooks, Pa.	Goodykoontz	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Slemp
Buchanan	Gould	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Mich.
Bulwinkle	Graham, Pa.	MacGregor	Smithwick
Burdick	Greene, Vt.	Maloney	Steagall
Burke	Hayden	Mead	Stephens
Butler	Hays	Merritt	Stiness
Campbell, Kans.	Henry	Michaelson	Stoll
Cannon	Hersey	Mills	Strong, Pa.
Carew	Hicks	Montague	Sullivan
Chandler, N. Y.	Himes	Moore, Ill.	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Hoch	Morin	Tague
Clague	Hogan	Mudd	Taylor, Ark.
Classon	Huck	Nelson, J. M.	Taylor, Colo.
Clouse	Hukriede	Norton	Taylor, N. J.
Codd	Humphreys, Miss.	O'Brien	Ten Eyck
Connally, Tex.	Hutchinson	O'Connor	Thomas
Connolly, Pa.	Jefferis, Nebr.	Oliver	Treadway
Copley	Jeffers, Ala.	Olpp	Upshaw
Crowther	Johnson, Miss.	Osborne	Vinson
Cullen	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overstreet	Voigt
Dale	Johnson, Wash.	Paige	Volk
Darrow	Jones, Pa.	Park, Ga.	Wason
Davis, Minn.	Kahn	Parker, N. Y.	Wheeler
Davis, Tenn.	Keller	Patterson, Mo.	Winslow
Dempsey	Kelley, Mich.	Patterson, N. J.	Wise
Dominick	Kendall	Perlman	Wood, Ind.
Drane	Kennedy	Petersen	Woods, Va.
Drewry	Kindred	Pou	Woodyard
Dunn	King	Radcliffe	Wright
Dyer	Kirkpatrick	Rainey, Ala.	Yates
Fairfield	Kitchin	Ramseyer	Zihlman
Faust	Kleczka	Reber
Fenn	Kline, N. Y.	Reed, W. Va.
Fish	Knight	Riddick

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13880) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. By the resolution the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with instructions to report the bill forthwith to the House with the following amendment: Strike out paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 16, on pages 10 and 11 of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 138.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote just taken, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those favoring the motion to recommit will when their names are called answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 180, not voting 174, as follows:

YEAS—73.

Abernethy	Doughton	Lankford	Sisson
Almon	Driver	Larsen, Ga.	Smithwick
Andrews, Nebr.	Fields	Lea, Calif.	Stafford
Aswell	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Steagall
Bankhead	Fulmer	Lowrey	Stevenson
Bell	Garrett, Tenn.	Lyon	Sumners, Tex.
Black	Hammer	McDuffie	Swank
Bland, Va.	Haugen	McSwain	Tillman
Blanton	Herrick	Mansfield	Tucker
Bowling	Hooker	Nelson, J. M.	Turner
Box	Huddleston	Oldfield	Tyson
Briggs	Hudspeth	Quin	Weaver
Byrnes, S. C.	Humphreys, Miss.	Raker	Williams, Tex.
Byrnes, Tenn.	Jacoway	Rankin	Wilson
Carter	James	Rayburn	Wingo
Collier	Jeffers, Ala.	Rouse	Wright
Cramton	Jones, Tex.	Sanders, Tex.
Crisp	Kincheloe	Sandlin
Deal	Lanham	Sears

NAYS—180.

Ackerman	Evans	Longworth	Sanders, Ind.
Andrew, Mass.	Fairchild	Luce	Sanders, N. Y.
Anthony	Faust	McArthur	Schall
Appleby	Favrot	McCormick	Shaw
Arentz	Fitzgerald	McKenzie	Shelton
Bacharach	Fordney	McLaughlin, Mich.	Shreve
Barbour	Frear	MacGregor	Sinclair
Beck	Frothingham	MacLafferty	Sinnott
Beedy	Fuller	Magee	Slemp
Begg	Gallivan	Mapes	Smith, Idaho
Bird	Gernerd	Martin	Snell
Bixler	Gifford	Mead	Snyder
Bond	Glynn	Michener	Speaks
Britten	Graham, Ill.	Miller	Sproul
Brooks, Ill.	Green, Iowa	Mondell	Stedman
Brown, Tenn.	Greene, Mass.	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Kans.
Browne, Wis.	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Va.	Summers, Wash.
Burtness	Griest	Moores, Ind.	Swing
Cable	Griffin	Mott	Temple
Campbell, Pa.	Hadley	Murphy	Thompson
Cantrill	Hardy, Colo.	Nelson, Me.	Thorpe
Chalmers	Hawes	Nelson, A. P.	Tilson
Chindblom	Hawley	Newton, Minn.	Timberlake
Christopherson	Hickey	Newton, Mo.	Tincher
Clarke, N.Y.	Hill	Norton	Tinkham
Cockran	Hukriede	Ogden	Towner
Cole, Iowa	Hull	Parker, N. J.	Underhill
Cole, Ohio	Humphrey, Nebr.	Parker, N. Y.	Vaile
Colton	Husted	Patterson, Mo.	Vestal
Cooper, Ohio	Ireland	Paul	Voigt
Cooper, Wis.	Kearns	Perkins	Volstead
Coughlin	Kelly, Pa.	Porter	Walters
Crago	Ketcham	Pringey	Ward, N. Y.
Curry	Kiess	Purnell	Ward, N. C.
Dallinger	Kissel	Rainey, Ill.	Watson
Dempsey	Kline, Pa.	Ransley	Webster
Denison	Kopp	Reece	White, Kans.
Dickinson	Lampert	Reed, N. Y.	White, Me.
Dowell	Lawrence	Rhodes	Williams, Ill.
Dunn	Layton	Ricketts	Williamson
Dupré	Lazaro	Roach	Woodruff
Echols	Leatherwood	Robertson	Woods, Va.
Edmonds	Linthicum	Robsion	Wurzbach
Elliott	Little	Rogers	Wyant
Ellis	London	Sabath	Young

NOT VOTING—174.

Anderson	Burton	Crowther	Foster
Ansorge	Butler	Cullen	Free
Atkeson	Campbell, Kans.	Dale	Freeman
Barkley	Cannon	Darrow	French
Benham	Carew	Davis, Minn.	Funk
Blakeney	Chandler, N. Y.	Davis, Tenn.	Gahn
Bland, Ind.	Chandler, Okla.	Dominick	Garner
Boies	Clague	Drane	Garrett, Tex.
Bowers	Clark, Fla.	Drewry	Gensman
Brand	Classon	Dunbar	Gilbert
Brennan	Clouse	Dyer	Goldsborough
Brooks, Pa.	Codd	Fairfield	Goodykoontz
Buchanan	Collins	Fenn	Gorman
Bulwinkle	Connally, Tex.	Fess	Gould
Burdick	Connolly, Pa.	Fish	Graham, Pa.
Burke	Copley	Focht	Hardy, Tex.
Hayden	Knutson	Oliver	Steenerson
Hays	Kraus	Olpp	Stephens
Henry	Kreider	Osborne	Stiness
Hersey	Kunz	Overstreet	Stoll
Hicks	Langley	Paige	Strong, Pa.
Himes	Larson, Minn.	Park, Ga.	Sullivan
Hoch	Lee, N. Y.	Parks, Ark.	Sweet
Hogan	Lehlbach	Patterson, N. J.	Tague
Huck	Lineberger	Perlman	Taylor, Ark.
Hutchinson	Logan	Petersen	Taylor, Colo.
Jefferis, Nebr.	Luhring	Pou	Taylor, N. J.
Johnson, Ky.	McClintic	Radcliffe	Taylor, Tenn.
Johnson, Miss.	McFadden	Rainey, Ala.	Ten Eyck
Johnson, S. Dak.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Ramseyer	Thomas
Johnson, Wash.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Reber	Treadway
Jones, Pa.	McPherson	Reed, W. Va.	Upshaw
Kahn	Madden	Riddick	Vinson
Keller	Maloney	Riordan	Volk
Kelley, Mich.	Merritt	Rodenberg	Wason
Kendall	Michaelson	Rose	Wheeler
Kennedy	Mills	Rosenbloom	Winslow
Kindred	Montague	Rossdale	Wise
King	Moore, Ill.	Rucker	Wood, Ind.
Kirkpatrick	Morgan	Ryan	Woodyard
Kitchin	Morin	Scott, Mich.	Yates
Kleczka	Mudd	Scott, Tenn.	Zihlman
Kline, N. Y.	O'Brien	Siegel
Knight	O'Connor	Smith, Mich.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. McClintic (for) with Mr. Treadway (against).

Mr. Connally of Texas (for) with Mr. Lineberger (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Butler with Mr. Collins.

Mr. Anderson with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Drewry.

Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Kindred.

Mr. Crowther with Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. Keller with Mr. Barkley.

Mr. Fish with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Pou.

Mr. Burdick with Mr. Davis of Tennessee.

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Overstreet.

Mr. Hoch with Mr. Garrett of Texas.

Mr. Cannon with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Olpp with Mr. Brand.

Mr. Fess with Mr. Logan.

Mr. Gorman with Mr. Cullen.

Mr. Ramseyer with Mr. Hardy of Texas.

Mr. Brennan with Mr. Kitchin.

Mr. Kahn with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Langley with Mr. Clark of Florida.

Mr. Morgan with Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Foster with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. Kennedy with Mr. Parks of Arkansas.

Mr. Darrow with Mr. Drane.

Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Bulwinkle.

Mr. Kline of New York with Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Fenn with Mr. Carew.

Mr. Hutchinson with Mr. Hayden.

Mr. Burton with Mr. Dominick.

Mr. Kendall with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.

Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. Fitzgerald with Mr. Montague.

Mr. Mudd with Mr. Rucker.

Mr. Free with Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Madden with Mr. Oliver.

Mr. Rose with Mr. Tague.

Mr. Merritt with Mr. Park of Georgia.

Mr. Siegel with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.

Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. Stephens with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Thomas.

Mr. Wood of Indiana with Mr. Vinson.

Mr. Taylor of New York with Mr. Wise.

Mr. Winslow with Mr. Upshaw.

Mr. Osborne with Mr. Stoll.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 203, noes 27.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ROGERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FORDNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 14254, Rept. No. 1567) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Michigan report that as a privileged bill?

The SPEAKER. He did.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the question of its consideration is going to be settled without any necessity of that being passed upon, but I would like to reserve the point of order that it is not privileged.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I was about to submit a request. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported may be taken up for consideration under the rules of the House to-morrow morning, and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported be taken up to-morrow under the rules of the House—it is on the Union Calendar—and that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and I discussed the matter of this request a few moments ago, and I have discussed it with several gentlemen upon this side, and would have discussed it more if I had had longer opportunity.

So far as I know we upon this side feel that without reference to the attitude which Members may take on the final passage of the bill there is no desire to delay its consideration. Some of us would have preferred that it go over until next week. We realize that a rule could have been brought in, provided it is not a privileged matter, and that there would be small disposition on this side to resist the adoption of that rule, and therefore so far as I know there is no objection to the unanimous-consent request to make this the order of business under the general rules of the House to-morrow. As to the second part of the request, I understand that by meeting at 11 o'clock debate can be extended longer than otherwise might be possible. So far as I know there is no objection to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, under the request as made the gentleman from Michigan could move the previous question any time after there had been a few minutes' debate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no; this will be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood it was to be taken up in the House under the rules of the House. Then it will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules of debate, which would give those opposed to it an hour?

Mr. MONDELL. There will be no disposition on this side to unduly limit debate. We want liberal debate on the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am very much opposed to the proposition, but if we are allowed to express our views in regard to it I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if it is the intention of the gentlemen on that side to have a vote on this bill to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to, unless there is a request for general debate at such length that it will prevent.

Mr. GALLIVAN. But that is the intention of the managers?

Mr. MONDELL. It is hoped that we may get a vote to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL (REPT. NO. 1568).

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill H. R. 8908 may be changed from the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the Flood Control Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill H. R. 8908 from the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the Flood Control Committee. The Chair understands that the chairmen of both committees are in favor of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, where does it belong, in fact?

Mr. HAUGEN. It belongs to the Committee on Flood Control. Other bills of a like character have gone to that committee. The chairmen of both committees are in favor of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the matter had better go over until to-morrow, so that the Chair may examine it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will withdraw the request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OLIVER, for to-day, on account of official business.

To Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. KINDRED, at the request of Mr. MCDUFFIE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10211. An act authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Piute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following title:

S. 4029. An act to amend and supplement the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas & Pacific Railroad Co., and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts supplemental thereto, approved, respectively, May 2, 1872, March 3, 1873, and June 22, 1874;

S. J. Res. 259. Joint resolution authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal;

S. 1016. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States";

S. 1878. An act to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timberlands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value;

S. 1926. An act to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians;

S. 2023. An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes;

S. 4260. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge over the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon;

S. 4169. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, Kane County, Ill., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 3702. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor lands on the public domain also within such State;

S. 4288. An act to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River;

S. 4341. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Oregon-Washington Bridge Co., and its successors, to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or near the city of Hood River, Oreg.;

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes;

S. 4346. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Delaware State Highway Department to construct a bridge across the Nanticoke River;

S. 4353. An act granting the consent of Congress to the highway commissioner of the town of Elgin, Kane County, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 4439. An act to revive and to reenact an act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta," approved October 6, 1917; and

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of title to certain land within the Shasta National Forest, Calif.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 9, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

965. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for improving the United States Botanic Garden, $122,635 (H. Doc. No. 559); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

966. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the sixth annual report of the Federal Farm Loan Board for the year ended December 31, 1922 (H. Doc. No. 560); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

967. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make reimbursement to the Naval Academy dairy for losses sustained by fire; to the Committees on Naval Affairs and Appropriations.

968. A letter from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting report of the Federal Trade Commission on costs, prices, and profits of the southern pine lumber industry for the years 1917 and 1918; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

969. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Summer Harbor, Me.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BURTNESS: Committee on the Public Lands. S. 3123. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 1561). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 14222. A bill to amend the trading with the enemy act; with amendments (Rept. No. 1565). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 4176. An act to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; with amendments (Rept. No. 1566). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2750. An act to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Regular Army of Second Lieut. Ambrose I. Moriarity; without amendment (Rept. No. 1560). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1252. A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John A. Douglas; with amendments (Rept. No. 1562). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2632. An act to correct the military record of Martin Cletner; with amendments (Rept. No. 1563). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KRAUS: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 14089. A bill granting six months' pay to Harriet B. Castle; without amendment (Rept. No. 1564). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ROACH: A bill (H. R. 14251) for the erection of a Federal post-office building at the city of Centralia, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 14252) to acquire additional site and make additions, extensions, and improvements to the public building at Camden, N. J.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 14253) to fix the amount to be contributed by the United States toward defraying expenses of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURTON: A bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 14255) for the improvement of San Diego Harbor, Calif.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 14256) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Mason City, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DUPRÉ: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan 3,000 wooden folding chairs to the general committee of the Confederate reunion for use at the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans to be held at New Orleans, La., in April, 1923; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: A resolution (H. Res. 514) for the immediate consideration of H. R. 14222; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. HERRICK: A resolution (H. Res. 515) expelling all representatives of the Washington Herald and the Washington Times from the House press gallery; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A resolution (H. Res. 516) fixing the compensation of the expert transcribers in the office of the official reporters of debates and directing payment out of the contingent fund of the House; to the Committee on Accounts.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri urging Congress to accept the offer made by Henry Ford to take over and operate the Muscle Shoals project; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROACH: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, relating to the utilization and preservation of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and sale of fertilizers to farmers and farm organizations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWES: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri urging Congress to accept the offer of Henry Ford in connection with Muscle Shoals; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring the passage by Congress of legislation placing an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DALLINGER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring the passage of legislation placing an embargo on the exportation of coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H. R. 14257) providing for the examination and survey of the harbor in Morehead City, N. C.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 14258) granting a pension to Mary A. Sturtevant; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 14259) granting an increase of pension to Cora D. White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 14260) granting a pension to Nathan B. H. Gardner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14261) granting a pension to Rebecca Raburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROACH: A bill (H. R. 14262) granting a pension to Katie Cummings; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 14263) granting an increase of pension to William N. Richardson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 14264) granting a pension to Josephine Albert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 14265) granting a pension to Lizzie G. Chapman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A resolution (H. Res. 513) for the employment of Richard Streets as a page in the House of Representatives, compensation at the rate of $900 per annum, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, said position to be in lieu of one page at the rate of $2.50 per diem, now authorized by law; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7227. By Mr. ABERNETHY: Petition of Leon Daugherty Post of the American Legion, of Clinton, N. C., opposing soldiers and sailors' adjusted compensation bill, if the revenue to pay for same is to be raised by a sales tax, but favoring the adjusted compensation otherwise; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7228. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of the Cambridge, Mass., Republican Club, favoring an embargo on the exportation of coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7229. Also, petition of the representatives of women on the Republican State committees of New York, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, favoring national child labor legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7230. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution 269, relative to the payment of claims arising through Federal control of railroads; to the Committee on Claims.

7231. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of the Board of Aldermen, Medford, Mass., favoring an embargo being placed on coal shipped from the United States to Canada; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7232. Also, petition of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, opposing recommendation of the Public Printer in regard to annual leave granted to employees in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

7233. By Mr. KAHN: Petition of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, Calif., urging that an antinarcotic week be proclaimed early in 1923; also, that an international conference on the narcotic problem be called, with a view to securing the limitation by treaty of the basic production of poisonous drugs which constitute a major menace to American life; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7234. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of 42 residents of Farmington, Mich., favoring the joint resolution extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics by the purchase and distribution of American food supplies for the use of such peoples; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7235. By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of 94 citizens of Marcellus, Mich., and vicinity, protesting the tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7236. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Washington, D. C., urging Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to enter into such contract or contracts with Henry Ford for the completion and continuous operation of the Muscle Shoals project as will protect the public welfare; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7237. By Mr. LAWRENCE: Petition of the Northwest Missouri Press Association, urging passage of Senate Joint Resolution 232; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7238. By Mr. LAYTON: Petition of members of the Delaware Sportsmen, indorsing House bill 5823, establishing public shooting grounds; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7239. By Mr. MICHENER: Petition of sundry citizens of Michigan, favoring resolution extending relief to German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7240. By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Petition presented by Arthur Schaub, of St. Paul, and signed by sundry residents of Minnesota, urging favorable action by the Congress on resolution to provide immediate relief to Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7241. By Mr. PORTER: Petition of the District of Columbia Department, National Chapter No. 1, American Legion, indorsing Senate bill 4398, authorizing the Seventy-ninth Division Association to erect in France, in the vicinity of Montfaucon, a memorial to the men of the Seventy-ninth Division who died in action there, or afterwards from wounds received, and which bill further authorizes the placing of an enlarged replica of the distinguished-service cross upon a memorial to honor those dead; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7242. By Mr. ROUSE: Petition of Kishmee Grotto, of Covington, Ky., asking the President to set aside a week to be called "antinarcotic week"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7243. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of the Noonan National Farm Loan Association, Noonan, N. Dak., condemning the Strong bill, to change the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7244. Also, petition of William Witte and 70 others, of Regent, New England, Dickinson, and Lefor, N. Dak., urging that aid be extended to the suffering peoples of Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7245. Also, petition of Yucca National Farm Loan Association, Yucca, N. Dak., condemning the Strong bill to change the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7246. By Mr. SWING: Petition of various citizens of San Diego, Calif., favoring action by Congress in extending aid to the famine-stricken regions of Germany and Austria by furnishing food supplies; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1923.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 5, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13880) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1016. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States";

S. 1878. An act to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timberlands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value;

S. 1926. An act to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians;

S. 2023. An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes;

S. 3702. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor lands on the public domain also within such State;

S. 4169. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, Kane County, Ill., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 4260. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge over the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon;

S. 4288. An act to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River;

S. 4341. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Oregon-Washington Bridge Co. and its successors to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or near the city of Hood River, Oreg.;

S. 4346. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Delaware State highway department to construct a bridge across the Nanticoke River;

S. 4353. An act granting the consent of Congress to the highway commissioner of the town of Elgin, Kane County, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 4439. An act to revive and to reenact an act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta," approved October 6, 1917;

H. R. 10211. An act authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service;

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of title to certain land within the Shasta National Forest, Calif.;

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of salaries to Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 259. Joint resolution authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KENDRICK presented resolutions of the Wyoming Engineering Society, of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Sterling-Lehlbach bill providing for the reclassification of positions and salaries in the Federal civil service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of Goddess of Liberty Council No. 62, Daughters of America, of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against any amendment of the existing immigration laws of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of 18 citizens of Chaseley, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry members of the department of clothing and textiles, Kansas State Agricultural College, of Manhattan, Kans., praying an amendment of the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROUSSARD presented a memorial, numerously signed, by sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 269) authorizing the President of the United States, under the provisions of the first sentence of section 202 of the transportation act, 1920, to pay just and meritorious claims for loss of or damage to freight in transportation arising out of or incident to Federal control, and declaring the intent of section 206 (a) of said act in relation to the provision authorizing actions at law against an agent appointed by the President, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PRICE OF SILVER.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I present certain correspondence on the silver situation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING CO.,
New York, January 26, 1923.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senator from Nevada,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, 1923, on page 2184, appears copy of a letter written by you to the Governor of Nevada, in which, among other things, you say in effect that a vice president of the American Smelting & Refining Co. (meaning the writer of this letter) admitted before a Senate committee "that the smelting companies were not particularly interested in the price of silver, as they pay the producers the market price and sell it at the market price."

The smelting companies handle silver from two classes of product—one, the silver contained in ore which they buy; the other, the silver produced from their own mines. I was discussing the former, and my language was intended to refer only to the fact that smelting companies do not seek to make a profit on the silver they buy in ore in the sense of attempting to sell it for more than they pay for it, as does a merchant, but rather contemplate selling the silver at the same price at which they buy it, making their profit out of the smelting and refining charge agreed upon between the parties.

In this sense my statement is strictly true, but I did not mean to say that smelting companies are not interested in the price of silver. The direct opposite is emphatically the case, for the very excellent reason that the higher the price of silver the larger is the tonnage produced by the mines, and hence the greater the profits for treatment charges that inure to the smelters.

There is another most important reason why smelting companies are directly interested in the price of silver. Every one of them is itself a miner of silver, directly or indirectly. The American Smelting & Refining Co., for instance, is to-day producing silver at the rate of about 20,000,000 ounces per year from the mines owned or controlled by it or its subsidiaries. Every 10-cent increase in the price of silver over the cost of production means to it an increased annual profit of $2,000,000. If we assume, for illustration, the cost of producing silver at 50 cents, and the year's output is sold at 60 cents, a profit is made of $2,000,000; if it is sold at $1 a profit is made of $10,000,000. Parenthetically let me add that 90 per cent of our silver-mine production is from outside the United States and is not saleable under the Pittman Act.

In short, as a large miner of silver-bearing ores, the American Smelting & Refining Co., as well as every other smelting company without exception, so far as I know, is as directly interested in the price of silver as it is possible for any miner to be, and this entirely aside from its smelting business and its purchase of silver-bearing ore in connection therewith.

In your letter to Governor Boyle you further say, in effect, that the smelting companies have failed to give their aid to the organization of a selling and credit association which could control over 80 per cent of the production of the world, and that this attitude is "grossly selfish and unfair."

No subject has been more carefully investigated by smelting companies than the organization of such an association as you describe. All investigations have come up against the insurmountable difficulty that such an association is neither legal nor capable of being financed. Under present conditions, if it could be financed, it is not legal, and if it is legal it can not be financed.

The legal difficulty is the Sherman law and supplementary legislation prohibiting combinations for the purpose of raising the price of any commodity. An export association, under the Webb-Pomerene law permitting combinations for sales abroad, would not be effective in the case of silver, for the reason that the price abroad can not be materially raised without likewise raising the price in the United States, and this is specifically prohibited by the Webb Act itself. Obviously the foreign price can not exceed the price in the United States plus freight.

The Copper Export Association well illustrates this principle. It has not tended to raise prices, as is evident from the fact that since its organization the price of copper has been selling pretty steadily below the pre-war level, when there was no export association. All it has been able to do has been to successfully meet the combinations of buyers in foreign countries, which before its organization enabled those countries to acquire their copper at a price lower than it was commanding in the United States.

Entirely aside from the legal difficulty, financial considerations prevent such an association in the case of silver.

The price of silver, unlike that of other metals and commodities in general, is relatively very slightly affected by the production. Other metals and commodities have actual utilitarian uses, but there is in existence in China, Japan, and elsewhere vast volumes of silver which can be immediately placed upon the market, as it is not being utilized for any immediate purpose other than that of being hoarded as a saving. Under this term we may include all silver used for a quasi ornamental purpose. There are, conservatively, at least 10,000,000,000 ounces, and possibly several times that amount, that could be brought upon the world's market in a relatively short time if the price attracted it, and no one can foretell what that price will be from time to time.

In the Review of the Silver Market for 1922, published by Handy & Harman, there is a discussion of this subject on pages 2, 3, and 4, from which a condensed quotation is as follows:

"Production has never been the dominant factor in the silver market, as even a casual comparison of average annual prices and yearly outputs will show. The demand from India and China, more than any other factor, accounts for the price levels at which the silver market rules. Trite as this statement may be, its verity, which has been proved by the experience of many years, appears to have been lost sight of. * * *

"More tangible proof of the comparatively subordinate part which production, or the supply of silver, plays in determining the market price * * * may be seen in a brief consideration of the great rise in silver from 1916 up to January of 1920 and its abrupt fall during the rest of that year. * * * Production figures bore little relation to the course of silver during the years of these violent fluctuations, and at no time during this period could the varying amount of the world's output be said to have influenced the market quotations. * * *

"The pre-war years of 1908 through 1914, however, furnish a more reliable period in which to point out the unimportance of production in influencing silver market quotations. According to statistics furnished in the 1922 report of the Director of the Mint, the world's total output of silver increased from 203,000,000 ounces in 1908 to a record production of 230,000,000 in 1912, but the yearly average price of silver, instead of declining in inverse ratio to the annual supply, rose to an average of over 60⅞ cents during the same year that the world's production was at its maximum. Furthermore, when supplies of bullion had fallen to 166,000,000 ounces for 1914, the year's average price for silver had dropped to less than 55 cents."

In financing any association such as you mention, it is therefore necessary to decide whether withholding a large part of the world's production for a period of time will cause such a rise in the price of silver as will enable the withheld production to be then sold at the higher price.

It is for this reason that the financing of the movement must have behind it some credit in addition to the silver itself, for when the breaking point is reached and the withheld silver placed upon the market the price may immediately fall.

The history of many efforts in the past to control the price of silver, as well as that of other metals, by withholding from the market, has been almost uniformly one of financial disaster.

You have evidently not been informed of the very careful study given by the various smelting companies to the organization of such an association as you describe, and their investigation, through various financial authorities, of the possibility of doing the necessary financing.

No financing would be possible which did not have back of it the entire credit of all the combined smelting companies, and even then the amount of money that could be raised would not be in all probability sufficient to accomplish the desired result. The smelting companies would be taking all the risk, their very financial existence depending on the success of the movement, while of the profits they would only get that proportion which the output of their mines bears to the total output. In other words, they would take all of the risk and suffer all of the loss if there was a loss, but if the project was successful they would only receive a portion of the profits.

Your letter, if I interpret it correctly, is one of great promise in the cause of silver, because you intimate that the Government of the United States might support such an association.

In that event the Government could readily change the law so as to permit of the necessary association, thus removing the legal barrier by which all attempts to date have been stopped. It could also, by its cooperation, remove the financial difficulty without financial risk to itself, because the influence of our Government with foreign countries is, in my judgment, sufficient to stop the greatest menace to silver which now exists, namely, its rapid demonetization through the debasement or entire abolition of silver for coinage purposes. As, one by one, the currencies of the bankrupt countries are stabilized silver should be restored to their monetary systems. The present tendency, supported by the English Government, to substitute paper currency for silver in India should be suspended.

In my humble opinion, the greatest danger to silver in the future lies not in the termination of the Pittman Act, serious though that may be. The end of the Pittman Act, after all, means only a return to the conditions existing before the United States entered the war. The paramount danger to silver lies in the continuation of the recent steady, remorseless increase of the discontinuance of its use as money. The last few years have seen the debasement of the silver coinage in Great Britain, in the Scandinavian countries, in Central American and in South American countries, and its entire abolition in all countries in Europe who were engaged in the war. If for the next 10 years the tendency of mankind to abolish the use of silver for monetary purposes equals the movement in that direction for the last 10 years, one may readily envisage the ultimate destruction of that intrinsic value in silver which has been placed upon it by the consensus of opinion of mankind since the dawn of history.

No association of smelting companies and mines, either or both, can stop this tendency. It requires the action of governments, and if the Government of the United States does not lend its predominating influence in the councils of the nations of the world to the cause of silver during the next few years, when the currencies of the bankrupt countries of Europe are being stabilized, then the cause of silver seems gloomy, indeed.

The Nicholson resolution seems a step in the right direction. It is a pleasure to note that your keen and lucid mind and sincere loyalty to the cause of silver is engaged in the consideration of that measure to which it promises to bring effective results.

As your letter may inadvertently give the wrong impression of the attitude of the smelting companies, and particularly of my company, on the subject of interest in silver, will you not do us the justice of giving the same publicity in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to this letter which you have given to your own? Your so doing will be very greatly appreciated.

With great respect, believe me, sincerely yours,

F. H. BROWNELL,
Vice President American Smelting & Refining Co.

—

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, February 5, 1923.

Mr. F. H. BROWNELL,
Vice President American Smelting & Refining Co.,
120 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. BROWNELL: I have read more carefully your letter of January 26, in reply to a letter addressed to the former Governor of the State of Nevada, appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 22, 1923, on page 2184.

I am pleased to have your explanation of the meaning that you intended to give in your testimony before the Committee on Mines and Mining of the United States Senate, wherein you said in substance that the smelter companies were not interested in the price of silver, as they all sold at the market.

I was aware, of course, that for many reasons the smelter companies should be interested in the price of silver. You have stated very clearly these reasons. This should urge the smelter companies to take the most active interest in all plans looking to the betterment of the silver industry.

I am still rather at a loss to understand why the smelter companies have so quickly surrendered, particularly in the matter of financing an export association. There is a minimum price for silver. At that minimum price there is no better security in the world than silver bullion. Since the writing of your letter I have discussed this very matter with men who are able to finance such association, and they have expressed their entire willingness to undertake it.

You use a double argument against the formation of such an association. You say if it can be financed, then it is not legal; and if it is legal, then it can not be financed. It is this hopeless attitude on the part of the smelters that appears so unreasonable under the statement of the interest of the smelters in silver as set forth in your letter.

The smelter and copper people organized a copper export association. I assume that that was legal—at least, our Government has not seen fit to attack it. What was the object of such association? Was one of its purposes to sustain the price of copper? Is there any distinction in law in sustaining the price of copper to prevent it from going to a lower level or in raising it from the lower level to the sustained price?

Copper is sold abroad and in the United States just as silver is sold abroad and in the United States. Did the sustaining of the price of copper abroad sustain the price of it in the United States? If so, was that a violation of our antitrust acts? Is it any more illegal to artificially prevent the price of copper from going down in accordance with the supply and the demand than it would be to put it up to such price and hold it there by the same means?

All of our antitrust acts were passed for the purpose of preventing the fixing of unfair and extortionate prices through combinations in restraint of trade. A silver export association will have no such purpose nor will it have that effect.

The exchange value of silver and subsidiary coins and gold in the United States is on the basis of approximately $1.29 an ounce for silver. Whenever the price of silver is below such price it is below par. The purpose and intent of a silver export association is not to artificially increase its value, but, on the contrary, to remove the artificial restrictions imposed upon its marketing, which do now and for a long time have prevented it from rising to its natural value based on supply and demand.

Congress had in mind at the time that the Webb-Pomerene Act was passed these combinations in foreign countries which have discriminated against and restricted the rise in price of our products. I can hardly conceive of a case in which the price of our products were increased abroad that there would not be some shadowy reflection upon the price at home. It was not this shadowy reflection that Congress intended to prohibit, because such a prohibition would be an annulment of all of the benefits of the act.

The greater part of our American silver is sold abroad. Suppose the association received only that proportion of the American-produced silver and left the proportion that is generally consumed in the United States in the hands of the producers or holders to be sold in competition in the United States as they saw fit. Could the association then be charged with combining to increase the price of silver in the United States? Would not there then be an active competition between the same competitors that now exist in the market of the United States?

The Webb-Pomerene Act was not a foolish thing, as the copper people discovered when they organized the copper export association. It has proven a great benefit to copper. Such an association can be as legally organized for silver, and it will prove equally as beneficial to that metal.

While I am convinced that the organization can be accomplished in a legal way so at least as to protect that part of our silver that is normally sold abroad, it is my intention when the opportunity offers to introduce an amendment to the Webb-Pomerene Act that will clearly remove any ambiguities and dissipate the fears of you and your associates with regard to the legal power to organize a silver export association.

In your reply to me you include a long argument to show that silver is in a desperate situation by reason of the debasement of silver coins in Europe. At the same time, while you quote in your letter United States experts Handy & Harman, you do not emphasize that portion of their report dealing with the subject of debasement of coin. Handy & Harman in their report on this subject say, "But Europe is not our great market for silver."

Again, the silver experts to whom you refer, Handy & Harman, in their report say, "The demand from India and China more than any other factor accounts for the price levels at which the silver market rules." Undoubtedly our great markets for silver are in India and China. There is no debasement of silver in either of these countries and never will be.

The agencies of the British Government have always made a large profit upon the sale of silver both in India and in China. The advantage of Great Britain in oriental commerce is due to a great extent to their control of the supply of silver.

It is true that the fixing of a price for silver is an international matter, but, as I have before stated, so long as foreign agencies can artificially restrict the price of silver below a dollar an ounce, it is useless to discuss with them the fixing of a price for silver at a dollar or above that price. We have it in our power to fight and destroy such restrictions, and such was the intention of the Webb-Pomerene Act. As I have said before, the organization of such an association will be attempted, and I hope that you and your associates will take a less fearful attitude toward the matter.

I thank you for your very frank discussion of the subject. I am aware of the great knowledge you possess with regard to the production and marketing of silver and its condition throughout the world, and it is particularly for this reason that we must have your earnest and active support.

Sincerely,

KEY PITTMAN.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I present several resolutions from State and city governments, also a few of many communications received by me from citizens illustrating the unrest and anxiety in New England and other parts of the country because of the present coal shortage. These letters indicate that the patience of anthracite-coal consumers is rapidly becoming exhausted, and if some action is not taken by this Congress we should not be surprised at the extreme political views certain to follow such experiences as these letters depict. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and also that a copy of the RECORD be sent to the Federal Coal Commission.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1923.

Resolutions favoring the passage by Congress of legislation placing an embargo upon coal.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States various bills and resolutions providing for and favoring the passage of legislation placing an embargo upon the export of coal from the United States during the present period of coal shortage; and

Whereas the Hon. JOHN J. ROGERS, Congressman from Massachusetts, has introduced a bill in Congress entitled "A bill declaring an embargo on anthracite coal," being House bill 12827, which declares that the conditions at present prevailing in the production and distribution of anthracite coal constitute a national emergency; and

Whereas great distress and hardship exist in New England on account of such coal shortage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts urgently requests that Congress take immediate steps for the passage of appropriate legislation to relieve the great distress existing in New England, and hereby records itself in favor of immediate passage of House bill 12878; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In House of Representatives, adopted, January 29, 1923.

A true copy.

Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

—

CITY OF MEDFORD, January 30, 1923.

Resolution in board of aldermen, offered by Alderman Edwin M. Harkins.

Be it resolved, That, owing to the present inadequate coal supply and the stringent regulations in force relative to procuring and selling coal, the bill now pending before the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., relative to placing an embargo on coal being shipped from this country to Canada is a measure that deserves the support of the Congressmen and Members of the Senate from Massachusetts; and be it further

Resolved, That the board of aldermen of the city of Medford hereby places itself on record as favoring this legislation; also that a copy of this resolution shall be forwarded to the Congressmen from Massachusetts and to the Senators from this State and to Vice President Calvin Coolidge, of this State.

In board of aldermen, January 30, 1923. Passed.

A true copy.

Attest: CHARLES A. WINSLOW, City Clerk.

—

BOARD OF ALDERMEN,
SOMERVILLE, MASS., January 25, 1923.

Resolved, It is the opinion of this board that the so-called Rogers bill, now before the Federal Congress to the effect that an embargo should be established on the exportation of coal to the Dominion of Canada, should pass; and it is further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Representative to Congress from this district and to the Senators from this State.

A true copy of an order approved January 26, 1923.

Attest:

JASON M. CARSON, City Clerk.

—

DETROIT, MICH., December 29, 1922.

Hon. JOHN HAYS HAMMOND,
Chairman of United States Coal Commission, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The Republican National News Service has received a large number of letters from all over the country, asking what is being done regarding coal by your commission, and what progress is being made toward obtaining concrete results before the expiration of this winter.

One of the deep-seated issues that comes home to every citizen is the coal situation. It should be grappled with and solved immediately. It is the most important question before the people of all classes to-day.

The mines should reopen, and the men should go back to work on a definite understanding that whatever the tentative terms of resumption, they should begin work with the explicit purpose and under the fixed program of going immediately, vigorously, and intelligently. Our Government should relentlessly, with arbitrary determination, assume dictatorship over the mines, because there exists an emergency directly affecting the peace, health, safety, and welfare of the Nation, requiring at once governmental regulation and control of the supply of coal during such an emergency, and its equitable distribution to consumers at reasonable prices.

I have personally visited many families of the tenement districts of Detroit, and the condition is appalling. I met a family consisting of father, mother, and five children, burning wood and obtaining poor heat out of that. The mother is expected to be confined shortly, and one of the children is sick in bed. This is a fair example of what exists in other parts of the country. The people are more interested now in how they can buy coal than they are in any other question now before Congress.

The coal question is not a political issue and should not be used for party advantage from any angle, which is clearly demonstrated by the personnel of your commission. I am deeply sensible to the fact that no higher caliber of men could be selected by President Harding to solve the coal problem.

I am taking the liberty of inclosing a bill as drawn by Governor Groesbeck which contains his analysis of the situation, highly commended by the leading men throughout the United States, including governors of States.

The suggestions made in this letter are made with a kindly spirit with no intention to criticize anyone connected with your commission to retard its activity.

With best wishes, I remain yours faithfully,

HENRY W. ROSE,
General Manager Republican National News Service.

(This form of letter was mailed to every member of the United States Coal Commission.)

—

[From the Detroit News-Journal.]

THE COAL REPORT.

As an expedient for the diversion of an outraged public, the coal fact finders have had a certain political value. As discoverers of new information the body was bound to appear of slighter purpose. The intelligence it has just brought the Government in its first report is merely what thousands of informed citizens have always known. Every fact in the finding is old stuff, every observation might have been made after a day's diligent reading last March.

The commission cites five familiar reasons for the scarcity and high price of bituminous coal, with which it is largely concerned. They are profiteering, which is not discussed; labor difficulties, growing out of a deeper condition; transportation shortage; over-development of mines and surplus miners; and irregularity of demand. If there is any novelty in the report it is its evaluation of these facts. The fact finders regard the first three conditions as symptomatic, the last two as the basic diseases of the coal industry.

Being merely a recounter of old tales, the commission has not felt impelled to produce any ready-made miracle for the correction of either condition. It speaks mildly of encouraging consumers to store coal in the spring and summer, thus making demands on mines and transportation uniform through the year. Consumers, of course, will never do this, since the public is obliged to store no other commodity half a year ahead, and has no intention of tying up funds in dead stock or financing anyone's industry. Concerning the surplus of mines and miners the commission has nothing to say. Unless the public interferes this problem must be unmade by the industry itself, since it has been erected by the same agency. Obviously if the public is supporting 200,000 surplus miners and their families there should be a diversion of their efforts to other fields.

In its parting shot the commission makes the not very original comment that something must be done at once, and makes casual reference to a more intimate participation of the public in the public business of digging and moving coal.

The importance of this report, however, lies chiefly in the fact that it has been made. There is nothing new in it, certainly. But another political expedient is playing out. That is a help, since the problem goes automatically back to the Government's hands, where action must now originate on the familiar truths reported by the commission. If this body has been sufficiently forceful to animate Washington toward seeking any path to peace and order in the coal industry, it will have justified an existence which to date has not appeared necessary. It will, at any rate, have done more than an aimless but loudly protestant public has accomplished in a year.

The law of supply and demand takes a lot of punishment at times. The coal commission has just succeeded in proving that coal is hard to get and harder to pay for because there are too many mines and too many miners.

—

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 1, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note with interest your advocacy of the Government taking over the control of the coal mines—a basic necessity. I believe all the investigations on both sides show that the best good of the country in regard to the production and cost of coal will be best served by what you propose, and I know that I voice the opinion of many other men and women that this sane and feasible solution may be brought about and properly safeguarded from the evil effects of partisan politics. * * *

Very sincerely, HELEN D. CHAMBERLAIN
(Mrs. George D. Chamberlain).

—

WORCESTER, MASS., January 11, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senator, Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I read your suggestions in reference to shipments of coal to New England. Since then I read the clippings inclosed, and it seems to me if there was an embargo put on shipments of anthracite coal to Canada it would help New England people very much. * * *

Most respectfully yours,

M. A. WHITING.

—

BROWN SHOE CO.,
St. Louis, January 3, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: * * * If the next election has Government ownership of coal mines and railroads for its issue, I believe the side advocating Government ownership would sweep the country. The people are very sick of the railroad and coal situation just now. * * * Go after the railroads and coal mines. That is what the people are interested in.

Yours very truly, R. B. MCCARTHY.

—

HARWICH, MASS., February 6, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: * * * I have the misfortune to be the local fuel distributor for fuel, and the situation here is deplorable. We have been forced to deplete our forests at an alarming rate in order to prevent actual distress, and if something is not done we shall undoubtedly suffer another winter. Are we to freeze throughout New England while the operators and miners are quarreling over a division of spoils? Is our National Congress helpless to devise any method to remedy this situation? I have been in Pennsylvania and know the situation. Plenty of coal, plenty of men to mine it, and the people who live in the North suffering for want of fuel. Your own knowledge of the conditions is superior to mine and I trust will lead you to point the way to some remedy before we are faced with the same condition another year. If taking over the mines is the only remedy, let us take them; if there is a better way, let us take that; but let us do something now and not wait as we did last year. We are anxiously awaiting some act by Congress that will lead us to believe that our representatives are alive to the importance of immediate action.

Yours respectfully, CHAS. E. HAMER.

—

[From the Detroit Evening Times.]

UNITED STATES MINE OPERATION SOUGHT—MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE TO DEMAND ACTION TO SECURE ADEQUATE ANTHRACITE.

[Special to the Detroit Times.]

LANSING, January 24.—Federal operation of anthracite mines in Pennsylvania will be demanded by the State of Michigan, it developed to-day.

Convinced beyond any doubt that the Federal and State Governments have exhausted all available means to secure anthracite in adequate quantities from the mines, a concurrent resolution is to be introduced in the legislature by Representative Aaron W. Miles, of Big Rapids.

The resolution will request the enactment of a Federal constitutional amendment which would give the Federal Government the power to operate and perhaps own those mines.

TAKE INITIATIVE.

Michigan would thus be taking the initiative in the attempt to obtain this constitutional amendment, and after a canvass of influential members of both the house and senate, it seems quite probable the resolution will be adopted.

William W. Potter, State fuel administrator and the man who is in as close touch with existing conditions in the Pennsylvania mines as anyone in the country, said this afternoon he would be heartily in favor of Federal control and perhaps Federal ownership of the anthracite mines. It is probable that Potter will assist in every possible way to draft a suitable resolution for introduction in the house.

CERTAIN OF STAND.

"I am absolutely certain the only way to get adequate supplies of coal from the Pennsylvania mines," the fuel administrator declared, "is to operate those mines either under Government control or Government ownership. Numerous letters have come to my office asking that Michigan take the initiative in constructing the necessary machinery to secure such a Federal constitutional amendment. I am glad to know that Representative Miles is preparing such a resolution, and if any senators or representatives are not familiar with the anthracite situation in the United States, I want them to know that all my information is at their disposal at any time. I am convinced that if they knew the situation as I do all of them would exert their influence for the passage of the Miles resolution."

Potter declared further that the resolution would be the proper thing at this time, regardless of whether or not it asked for Government ownership of the hard-coal mines or merely Government control.

LYNN, MASS., February 7, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Over 3,000 families in this district without any supply of coal. The Lynn (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce petitions you to place an embargo on all anthracite coal for foreign countries until the necessities of the people in our own country are properly taken care of. Copy sent Interstate Commerce Commission.

RALPH S. BAUER, President.

—

JANUARY 24, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Care of United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I believe the proposition of the United States establishing standards for units of heat per 100 pounds in both bituminous and anthracite coal will be one of the most helpful things that has happened in a long time, in so far as the American people are concerned.

I am sending you an editorial from this morning's Boston Post, which will give you an idea of how the matter is being received.

Most of the delays on our railroad trains in New England which have been continuous all winter have resulted from the miserable quality of steam-making, bituminous coal sold to the railroads, the coal being so full of dirt and sulphur that it is impossible to make any great amount of steam from it, and the consequence is that when the train starts out it has to run so slowly because of this that they are anywhere from half an hour to four hours late at their destination. I have talked with many of the engineers on the different engines, and they say that the delays are almost entirely up to the coal. It seems to them that the coal set aside for their use in the engines has been taken from the dump at the mines, as there are so few heat units in it.

You can see how this affects every consumer of coal in the country, whether hard coal or soft coal, and the point raised by the Boston Post that the different grades of coal would mean different grades of prices, corresponding to the heat-producing elements in the product, is something that will eventually work out to at least create honesty and lack of deception in the coal business.

In the meantime the people everywhere are patiently suffering privations unknown to the legislators at Washington, hoping that sometime in the future matters will change so they can more nearly know that they are getting just what they pay for.

With best wishes to you in the effort, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

RALPH S. BAUER.

—

FIREPROOF COAL.

Senator WALSH'S proposal to enact a law that will compel standardization of coal will strike a responsive chord throughout New England and doubtless in every other section of the country. For even though the chief trouble in recent years has been to get any kind of coal at any price there are still a few of us left with faith that under proper regulation real coal can be produced in sufficient quantities and at reasonable prices.

As to the quality of coal that has been delivered in this section in recent years, a great many people will testify that President Bauer, of the Lynn Chamber of Commerce, was making a conservative statement when he said that 35 per cent of the anthracite delivered in Lynn was fireproof. It is well known that the large buyers of coal, the big industrial corporations and the public utilities companies, employ experts who know coal and who insist that the coal they buy shall contain a certain number of standard heat units to the pound. But the average householder simply orders "coal," and if the material delivered is black he pays the bill.

That there are wide variations in the heating value of coal from different mines everyone connected with the business will readily admit. Why, then, should the price be practically uniform amongst the various dealers? Cotton, wool, flour, almost every basic commodity, is sold on grade at variable prices. It is just as essential for fair dealing that coal for family use be graded and priced accordingly.

As we have remarked before, we are not inclined to hold the retailers very much to blame in this matter of adulterated coal. They have to take it "as is" from the big operators and wholesalers, and it is hardly to be expected that they are going all over it and throw out stone and slate that they have paid for at coal prices. The fault is with the operators, who are too greedy to pay for "picking," as they used to do years ago—or are too mean to forego the profits they make on the "fireproof" stuff. The only way to get after them is by Federal law.

—

LYNN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Lynn, Mass., January 29, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I am sending you one of many samples of fireproof coal—a shovelful taken out of a 20-ton pile from a coal yard in this district.

This so-called hard coal is sold at $16 a ton to the consumer. Less than 5 per cent of it will burn in any kind of a test. When put up in 25-pound bags and sold at 35 cents a bag to thousands of families, who are unable to obtain coal in larger quantities, this means that they are paying $560 a ton for that portion of this fuel that will really burn and make heat. This is dishonesty and robbery. The mine owners or operators are responsible for it.

The only relief is for the National Government to establish at the mines grades of coal based on its heat-producing content per 100 pounds as shipped out and sold according to standard grades, with severe penalties for violation.

Every State in the Nation is afflicted with this fireproof, unburnable-coal swindle. Because it fails to produce heat, results in distress and sickness, leading to death among thousands of families during these long weeks of freezing weather.

To overcome this disaster is a real job, and I hope you have the courage and strength to go through with it. The people in Washington have little idea of the suffering this lack of obtaining fuel that will produce heat has caused—to say nothing of the millions of dollars that have been lost on account of transportation and production delays.

Very truly yours,

RALPH S. BAUER.

FEBRUARY 3, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I was very glad indeed to get your letter and a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, showing that you presented the letter of the fuel commissioner of the State of Wisconsin along the same lines you and I have been taking up together.

Will you please send me a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that has the account of your presenting the letter I sent you originally to the Senate in the form of a petition and having it referred to the committee, as I would like to keep this for my file.

This fireproof coal swindle is nation-wide in its extent, and I think if the Senators who are keeping house in Washington would look into their own coal piles they will find to what extent they are getting theirs with this fireproof product.

I am inclosing to you two more clippings, one from the Boston American of to-day and one from the Lynn Item of to-day. I have had clippings sent to me from papers all over the United States on this matter, all giving you credit for handling it in the Senate.

Senator LODGE writes me that he will do everything he can to help you get this bill through, as I wrote him asking him to do this.

John Hays Hammond, who is the head of this special committee investigating the fuel question, personally knows me. When I was president of the Essex County Associated Boards of Trade several years ago I invited him to two of our outings as a guest of the association, and he came to both of them and seemed to enjoy it immensely. So he will remember me all right, if you have occasion to take this matter up with him, and you might mention this to him.

I know of no subject that really concerns and directly interests the ordinary run of people so much as this paying continually in times of stress for such a large proportion of fuel that will not create any heat at all.

You certainly have the best wishes of this whole Commonwealth with you on this matter.

Very truly yours,

RALPH S. BAUER.

—

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.,
715 South Douglas Avenue, January 24, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed clipping from the Springfield (Ill.) State Register intrigues me.

We are at the coal-mine mouth, and it does us little good.

The arrogant "public-be-damned" attitude of the operators is only the more apparent.

Providence has been kind to the consumers in giving us an open winter, and the operators have come down one step from their arbitrary raise of $1.25 per ton and knocked off 50 cents. As this arbitrary lift of $1.25 came on top of a 50-cent boost made before the strike last April, we consumers still figure we are being gouged to the $1.25 limit.

Surely the operators are doing their getting while the getting is good. The consumers are defiantly told that we must pay all the costs of the operators and their loss of profits during that strike. In any case, we seem helpless. Freeze or pay the price is what we are up against.

* * * * * * *

Frankly, the coal situation is not a pleasant one to consider.

The combustibility is a most important question. Even here we are victims of the present habit of leaving a large percentage of incombustible material in coal.

Perhaps you think the operators would be good enough neighbors to not abuse their community. Their greed is insatiable and their coal full of horseback.

I have reached my three score years and ten and am now simply waiting until the operators' greed shall o'ershoot itself and fall on the other side. It is coming to them and is going to bump them plenty.

If not too much trouble, will you send me a few papers on this Canadian angle of the game, and other angles? I am happy to find some one who is asking a few pertinent coal questions.

There is little use of talking of normalcy until we get back to old-fashioned honesty and all classes are nearly on the same business level in regards to the returns from their labors.

A fair day's wage for a fair day's work and a fair return for invested capital will win out in the end. Lord hasten the day. It will come, but like Old Black Joe, "I'se coming mighty slow."

Respectfully.

GEO. WILLIAMS.

—

CAMDEN, N. Y., January 26, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I take my hat off to the man who serves the people instead of private interests. I note the stand you take in regard to the coal situation and efforts to bring about a change. As you say, there is much suffering for the need of it. This town has a population of 2,000 and three retail coal yards, and not a pound of hard coal to be obtained at this writing. The New York Central Railroad runs through it, and trains of loaded cars pass daily through it with coal for Canada. Why should this be allowed?

I am a Republican, but can see the party speeding on to defeat in 1924 from playing the game of politics and neglecting the interest of the people.

I wish you success, but doubt if any measure taken will bring about any immediate relief, as a long program will be gone through with and warm weather come before anything will be effected. It takes Congress a long time to get into action. In the meantime the people will suffer and maybe wake up.

Respectfully,

A. B. LE CLARE.

—

BOSTON, MASS., February 1, 1923.

Hon. Senator WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose a clipping which tells me that you are introducing a bill in regard to the grading of coal, and I take this opportunity of informing you that I am pleased that you should do this.

As a manufacturer and also as a consumer at home I have had many grounds on which to make complaint about the kind of coal that I have had to pay for. I can see no reason why coal should not be graded and paid for according to its quality. It comes very close to food products in determining the cost of living under modern conditions.

We have been paying $17 a ton for anthracite in West Newton, where I live, and for soft coal to burn in our building in Boston and our factory in Somerville $12 a ton. We have to take just what we can get, as there is no competition in the price, all the dealers asking the same in Boston. With such prices as these the matter of quality in fuel becomes very important. The business men feel as I do, that the price is altogether higher than necessary, but that is another matter.

I wish to thank you for putting forward this bill, and would be glad to render you any assistance if it would be any value.

Respectfully yours,

PAPER GOODS CO.,
By EDGAR E. AHELAMS.

"LONGMEAD" ROAD ENDING,
Plainfield, N. J., January 23, 1923.

Hon. DAVID WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It was with great pleasure that I noticed your interest in the present coal situation in this country. The situation in Lynn and Boston is no worse than in New Jersey. Recently the mayor of this city, in order to relieve the poor, had the coal sold in bags, the price of which would aggregate around $15 and over a ton.

I think that it is about time that some one would come forward as the spokesman for the people and not wait until the situation becomes worse.

Trusting that you will continue your good work, I am,

Very truly yours,

FRANK LINKE.

LAWRENCE, MASS., February 6, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

It is reported that thousands of tons of coal consigned to Lawrence and other New England points in railroad tie up at Rotterdam Junction, N. Y. We exhort our United States Senators to take immediate action before the proper Federal board to cause the railroads to move this coal to its destination. If cold wave continues conditions will be alarming.

Hon. DANIEL W. MAHONEY, Mayor,
PETER CARR,
JOHN A. FLANAGEN,
PATRICK F. MCNULTY,
WILLIAM H. D. VOSE,
Aldermen of Lawrence, Mass.

ARTHUR R. HENDERSON & CO.,
Cambridge, Mass., January 22, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I read with interest your statement of your conviction that Government ownership of coal mines was the only solution of the coal situation. In this statement you said something to the effect that that conclusion was reached by you after a thorough study of the situation and that unless some one could offer a better solution you would remain so convinced.

This seemed sufficient invitation to warrant my writing to you to make a suggestion which I believe is worthy of your consideration.

I am a Progressive Republican, and I think I have always believed in the Government ownership of railroads, the telegraph, and telephones (means of communication). In the Government ownership and operation of railroads I believe it would be possible to control the coal situation without Government ownership. By specific regulation of seasons and times of shipment and the enforcement of those regulations on operators and miners and distributers under licensing regulations and requirements this coal situation could be handled.

At present it is a rotten, rotten mess, and my notion of the situation is that it is a thoroughly organized plan of greed from the mine owner and miner down to the smallest retail dealer. It has taken several years to accomplish it, but they have done it now. We certainly are a long-suffering public.

* * * I am not a socialist and never had any sympathy for socialism, but I often wonder we do not have more of it.

May I ask you to let me know what you think of this suggestion?

Very truly yours,

A. R. HENDERSON.

PEABODY FURNITURE CO.,
Boston, January 20, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH.

DEAR SIR: I take this liberty of writing you and expressing my appreciation as a Republican of the stand you have taken on the coal situation. Your conception of the matter, as expressed or printed in the Herald or Traveler of the 19th instant, is to my mind and that of every thinking man and woman absolutely correct. The sooner this abuse and imposition upon the American people is corrected the better for the Government. Is it possible that the representatives of the people can not see where such a condition of affairs is bringing us to? It is, indeed, unfortunate that they are so unconcerned or blind to the needs of the people and ultimately that of their country. If we are to be saved, our only hope is in men like yourself—unbiased, unselfish, and with a touch of human sympathy, yet ever mindful of the economic needs of the country.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM C. LOVETT.

DORCHESTER MASS., January 12, 1923.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I am sending you a clipping from the Boston Globe of this date, which I think sets forth pretty clearly some of the deplorable phases of the coal situation.

* * * * * * * *

I for one have so far been unable to buy a single ton of nut coal this winter, although my order has been in the office of the Metropolitan Coal Co. for about two months, and we have two small children in the house at that. If I had not had a little coal left over from last year, we would have been in a bad fix at this time.

Can not something be done to prevent a recurrence of this state of affairs next year?

Very respectfully yours,

FREDERICK M. GREEN.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, February 2, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Massachusetts Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Is it possible that a few coal owners and operators in the State of Pennsylvania are bigger than the Government of the United States? That they may throttle the situation so acutely as to cause the suffering that is now existing in the State of Massachusetts? Certainly there are no excuses for the conditions that existed last spring, due to the strikes in the coal regions, when a Government as large as this stands idly by and allows it to exist, knowing full well what the consequences will be and are. We feel sure that you and our Congressmen could, if you wished, do something to relieve the intense suffering among our people, caused by the lack of anthracite coal, with no relief in sight.

It is disgraceful for our Government to allow it. Doesn't it seem strange to you that a few coal barons and money fakirs of Wall Street can influence the present administration to believe that the coal miners are to blame for the hardships we are now going through, due to the lack of coal, when in consequence the blame rests entirely with the chosen Representatives to Congress and administration?

This situation will not all be forgotten when the citizens of Massachusetts come to cast their vote in the fall of 1924. We are satisfied that the present Representatives and Senators from the districts have surely all laid down on the job.

Respectfully yours,

WM. E. STAPLES,
Representative Fourth Berkshire District.

CHELMSFORD CENTER, MASS., February 8, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Member of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: May I be favored with a copy of your bill on the standardizing of anthracite?

After 30 years in the retail coal business, and now closely identified with the trade, also as a consumer, I am much interested in some form of regulation at the point of production.

Yours with high respect,

HERBERT R. WHITE,
Chelmsford Center, Mass.

---

9 BEVERLY ROAD, WORCESTER, MASS.,
February 5, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write to say that I am in hearty accord with effort to have a Federal law to eliminate "fireproof" coal from our coal bills.

I heat three flats. Last fall I had installed a forced draft controlled by a thermostat so I could burn buckwheat coal. I put in as much as my bin would hold. Lately I have had to buy more. The first was passable, but this last 4 tons! Out of about 4 shovelfuls I picked almost a quart of stones—not slate, just stones. There is also a lot of small pieces about one-half inch that look like melted rock or iron ore, besides the usual amount of slate. Coal dealers blame it on the mines, but why should not the dealer protect his customer; why should they be allowed to sell this stuff for coal? A grocer is not allowed to sell sand for sugar, or even a coal dealer to give short weight, but what's the difference if it's 10 per cent stones?

Yours for protection from extortion,

P. A. CARR.

CAREY'S MEN'S STYLE SHOP,
Boston, Mass., December 20, 1922.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: * * * I have always been conservative, but I fear if there isn't some relief from the present condition of things many others, including myself, will be following Bill Haywood and Debs, whom I always thought insane. Now I think different. It seems we are at the mercy of a pack of greedy gougers, with no relief in sight.

Commissions have been investigating. What have they accomplished? There is no need to investigate. You all know we are trimmed to a finish. I may be wrong, but I think there is a fight to a finish coming in the near future, and if it does, I think I know who is going to win. I am writing this letter not with any hope it will do a fraction of good, but merely to express my opinion and let Washington know how we feel.

Respectfully yours,

T. J. CAREY.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION,
The Old South Chapter, January 1, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. WALSH: I am writing to thank you for the interest you have taken in the coal question.

I assure you there is much suffering, and I believe there will be many deaths on account of not being able to get coal.

It is a shame and disgrace to our country, but those men in Washington are very comfortable and they do not care for the people, the ones who put them in office; but I am glad to feel that there is one of you who remembers us. If your efforts do not help us we appreciate your thought just the same.

Very respectfully,

REBECCA L. MARSTON,
44 Henry Avenue, Melrose Highlands, Mass.

CHICOPEE, MASS., December 29, 1922.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The coal situation in our city is critical. Can not something be done to relieve us? Hundreds coming to my store daily complaining that they have none and can get none. When a car comes in there are 300 to 500 children waiting to get a bushel to draw away on their sleds. I myself am burning soft coal at home. I have four children under 10 years old, and there are many others who will suffer if larger quantities are not immediately forthcoming. You know the months of January and February are cold. The Government must take care of us.

Yours,

JOSEPH R. HASTINGS.

24 SHEAFE STREET,
Boston, Mass., December 19, 1922.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed clipping from the Boston American shows where American anthracite coal is being delivered in Canada while us poor people here in Boston can not seem to get any hard coal at all. This matter seems quite strange.

I have put in an order for some coal since September and have been unable to receive any at all. We have used every effort and have called the coal company a great many times, as we are desperately in need of it.

We know you are interested in the welfare of the people and any step which you may take to help this situation will be more than appreciated by the general public.

Thanking you, I beg to remain, very respectfully,

MARY A. COLUCCI.

—

43 CHAPEL STREET,
Canton, Mass., December 20, 1922.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Won't you do something to help people get coal, please?

Why is it innocent little children have to shiver and freeze while overworked parents actually have to beg for coal after getting a letter from the fuel administration of the town? Our regular dealer would give us no hard coal, only the cannel coal, which is very poor, just like painted rocks as large as a teakettle, and when the oil or tar burns off there is nothing but clinkers left, and $17 a ton for that! What kind of a Government have we? Why can't some one do something? Do we have to go to the fuel administrator every time we want a bit of coal, then beg to buy it, and pay such high prices for junk? We have had just one-half ton of hard coal, and Sunday, after seeing cars of hard coal in the coal yard, we are unable to get anything but buckwheat coal, which falls right through the grate. Now, let me tell you I do not ask for charity. I will pay for coal if I can get it, and get it I must. I have five small children all under 8 years. My husband is a good provider, works early and late for us, but he has done all in his power to get coal, so I now appeal to you in the name of the law.

Whoever is responsible for this coal situation has indeed no conscience, and I think and know you are a just man working for the common good, so do see if you can not do something so all will be treated equal. If hard-working people who are willing to buy coal and give their families the best they can afford suffer so, I tremble to think what the poor and needy suffer, and at this Christmas season.

My five little ones have whooping cough and I trust you will do all in your power to relieve the situation before the extremely cold weather sets in.

Wishing you the season's greeting, I am, very truly,

Mrs. MARY I. KESSLER.

—

MITTINEAGUE, MASS., December 29, 1922.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: May I ask you a few questions which I hope you will find time to answer for me, as I find it hard to understand? It is the coal question which has us all guessing. Why is it that the railroads can not supply cars enough for the mines to ship us hard coal, but they manage to get cars for soft coal to sell at $13 to $15 per ton? Why is coal (soft) sold at above prices when it is quoted at mine at $2.35 to $4.50 for gas coal?

There is no shortage here of soft coal; can buy all you want at above prices and some of the mixtures (good road filling for spring road building). It certainly took cars to deliver same.

I am inclosing clipping from our local paper (Springfield Daily News), as it affects us. Why does this happen? Also, why is there no company coal shipped East? All around this district it it independent coal, and of course the price must be more, as it costs more. Company coal holdings must be very small.

Why were we led to believe there would be coal at reduced prices and not to buy last spring? Now, the strike is settled; freight rates the same, miners' pay the same, and coal selling around $20 a ton. It was not so high during war times, and pay was 20 per cent higher.

We were told to have fuel-saving day during the war to help win. There is no need to tell us now; we have to, for want of coal. I am beginning to believe like alien work mates when told not to buy this or that by our leaders, be it sugar or coal, as it will be cheaper or more plentiful. Then is the time to buy and get all you need.

Also, why is it when the Senate starts a probe on high prices they go higher? But the boats go heavier laden to the other side of the ocean, and a six months' or one year probe is ended with no results and another started.

If you can enlighten me, Senator, I will be greatly obliged. Thanking you for the favor, I beg to remain,

EDWARD BARNARD,
108 Moose Street, Mittineague, Mass.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. FERNALD. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 13046) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Wilmington, N. C., marine hospital reservation, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read first.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to convey to the city of Wilmington, New Hanover County, State of North Carolina, by the usual quitclaim deed, at a fair valuation to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but for not less than $20,000, the following-described tract of land, with all structures and improvements thereon, being the marine hospital reservation in the city of Wilmington, if in the opinion of the said Secretary of the Treasury it is no longer needed for marine hospital purposes, to wit: Fifteen acres, more or less, covering four whole and two one-half city blocks, lying between Eighth and Tenth Streets and extending from Ann Street on the north to a point about 125 feet north of the north line of Nun Street, in the city of Wilmington, county of New Hanover, State of North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE CAPITOL PARK, BOISE, IDAHO.

Mr. FERNALD. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 12007) providing for the conveyance of certain land to the city of Boise, Idaho, and from the city of Boise, Idaho, to the United States, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Boise, Ada County, Idaho, for enlargement of the State capitol park, and for no other purpose, all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to the alley running east and west through block 54, in which is located the post-office site in the said city: Provided, however, That the city shall not have the right to sell and convey the said premises, nor to devote the same to any other purposes than as hereinbefore described, and shall not erect thereon any structures or improvements except such as are incidental to boundaries and ornamentation as part of the State capitol grounds; and in the event that said premises shall not be used as part of the said State capitol grounds, and cared for and maintained as such, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States: Provided, also, That the city of Boise shall convey to the United States for alley purposes, in accordance with a resolution of the city council of Boise, April 25, 1922, a strip of land in said block 54 as now laid out for such purposes, commencing at the northeast intersection of the post-office site (addition) with Jefferson Street; thence with said Jefferson Street, crossing said alley, 20 feet; thence in a southwesterly direction 78 feet 6 inches; thence in a reverse curve, following the curb now in place, to a north lot line of the said post-office site; thence along said lot line, northwesterly, approximately 49 feet to a point; thence northeasterly to the point of beginning.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has a report which he is ready to submit, and when it is presented I wish to ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let me state to the Senator from Michigan that after 2 o'clock debate will be limited upon the pending bill, and there are a number of amendments, and with the limited time I trust the request will not be made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well; I shall call up the bill later.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11389) for the relief of Robert Guy Robinson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1117) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 4318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make collections and refunds of taxes out of the proceeds of sales of property held in the Treasury, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1118) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6204) to grant the military target range of Lincoln County, Okla., to the city of Chandler, Okla., and reserving the right to use for military and aviation purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1119) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11603) to validate for certain purposes the revocation of discharge orders of Lieut. Col. James M. Palmer and the orders restoring such officer to his former rank and command, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1120) thereon.

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1513) for the relief of Margaret Nolan, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and submitted a report (No. 1121) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1490. An act for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros. (Rept. No. 1122); and

H. R. 10529. An act for the relief of Harry E. Fiske (Rept. No. 1123).

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1538) for the relief of Louis F. Meissner, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1124) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3879. An act for the relief of William H. Lee (Rept. No. 1125); and

S. 4071. An act for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis (Rept. No. 1126).

COINAGE OF COMMEMORATIVE 50-CENT PIECES.

Mr. PEPPER. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4468) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherlands, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this measure. I think it will occasion no debate. The bill is in the usual form and provides that the coinage shall be done without expense to the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherlands, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co., there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 300,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or the striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 4506) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Las Vegas, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4507) granting an increase of pension to Louise Lucier; and

A bill (S. 4508) granting an increase of pension to Alice Hathaway; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4509) to extend the time for the reimbursement of certain sums appropriated for the benefit of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 4510) to amend section 24 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 4511) granting a pension to John J. Hester; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 4512) for the relief of Oscar A. Demple; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4513) granting an increase of pension to Mary Lamb; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4514) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey to be made from Anclote Anchorage to Sponge Exchange Docks and Basin, Tarpon Springs (Fla.) Harbor;

A bill (S. 4515) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey to be made from Whitehead Spit Buoy to the Florida East Coast Railway Terminals, Key West (Fla.) Harbor;

A bill (S. 4516) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Manatee River, Fla.;

A bill (S. 4517) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey to be made from Lake Apopka to Lake Tohopekaliga, in Florida; and

A bill (S. 4518) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey to be made of an inland waterway from Pensacola Bay, Fla., to Mobile Bay, Ala.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 4519) to authorize the county of Lee, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge over the St. Francis River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COLT:

A bill (S. 4520) granting an increase of pension to Ella R. Shaw; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4521) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Florence E. Blanks, a former employee of the post office in St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 277) granting permission for the erection of a monument to symbolize the national game of baseball; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HARRELD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 278) providing for continuation of register and receiver of the land office at Guthrie, Okla., at salaries in effect prior to act of January 24, 1923; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. KING. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending ship subsidy bill, House bill 12817. It is not an amendment which I indorse, except that it is an improvement upon the pending bill. In view of the efforts which are being made by the President and Mr. Lasker and numerous lobbyists who are around here in favor of the shipping bill, it is a good time to offer the amendment for consideration. I move that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

APPRAISAL OF INDIAN TRIBAL PROPERTY.

Mr. ASHURST submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13835) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $233,885.82 to pay the State of Massachusetts for interest and premium paid on coast-defense bonds, as set forth in the findings reported by the Court of Claims in favor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and printed in House Document 359, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to pay $2,500 to Charles F. Redmond as compensation for compiling a revised supplement to the compilation entitled "Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, and Protocols Between the United States and Other Powers," etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JOINT COMMISSION ON GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

Mr. NICHOLSON submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37), which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the continuing decrease in the production of gold and silver.

2. The causes of the depressed condition of the gold and silver industry in the United States.

3. The production, reduction, refining, transportation, marketing, sale, and uses of gold and silver in the United States and elsewhere.

4. The effect of the decreased production of gold and silver upon commerce, industry, exchange, and prices.

The said commission is further authorized:

1. To confer with citizens, associations, or corporations of foreign countries with a view to the stabilization and wider use of silver in exchange.

2. To propose, either formally or informally, to the President of the United States, or the heads of the proper departments, plans for negotiations with foreign governments to the same end.

The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission or any subcommittee of its members is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, or adjournment of Congress in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditure shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives in equal proportions, upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13880. An act for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 5, 1923:

S. 472. An act for the relief of William B. Lancaster.

On February 6, 1923:

S. 2210. An act for the relief of Lucy Paradis; and

S. 4390. An act to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of June 3, 1922.

On February 8, 1923:

S. 841. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins; and

S. 1945. An act to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a few days ago, while the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate, I gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules in order that I might offer an amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make the point of no quorum?

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to do that, because there are some Senators absent whom I desire to have present when I offer the motion. In order that those Senators may be here when the motion is made, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKellar	Smoot
Bayard	Gooding	McKinley	Spencer
Brookhart	Harreld	McNary	Stanfield
Bursum	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Calder	Harrison	New	Sterling
Cameron	Heflin	Nicholson	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Townsend
Couzens	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Culberson	Kendrick	Page	Underwood
Curtis	Keyes	Pepper	Wadsworth
Dial	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Ladd	Pomerene	Warren
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Watson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson
George	McCormick	Sheppard
Gerry	McCumber	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on the 5th of February last, while the Army bill was under consideration, I gave notice that I intended to make a motion to suspend the rules of the Senate in order that I might offer the following amendment to the bill, to be inserted on page 104, after line 24:

For the improvement of nitrate plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., by the installation of new machinery therein in order that said plant may be utilized for experimental purposes in extracting nitrogen from the air with the view of lessening the cost of explosives in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace, $2,000,000.

Mr. President, the proposed amendment would be subject to a point of order under the rules of the Senate, and, therefore, I gave notice that I should make the motion which I now make to suspend the rules in order that I might offer the amendment. I wish to speak briefly in regard to the fertilizer situation and also as to the amendment which I propose to offer, if the rules of the Senate shall be suspended to enable me to do so.

Mr. President, I come from a section of the country where the fertilizer question is not at the present time a real live issue, and it probably will not be so during my lifetime. I am, therefore, not moved in this action by any consideration that in the ordinary happening of events I or my people could have a direct interest in the result. I believe, however, that since the people of a large portion of the country are concerned in the fertilizer situation and since the prosperity of agriculture, or that part of it which is dependent upon fertilizer, is also vitally interested in the question, as are also the consuming public, who are anxious that commodities for human consumption should be produced and delivered to the consumer as cheaply as possible, that this is a subject of great importance in which all of us, when we are considering the welfare of the country, are deeply interested.

We are now compelled, Mr. President, to import nitrates from Chile, and the Chilean Government has levied an export tax on nitrates amounting to something over $11 a ton, so that fertilizer is necessarily very expensive. I am one of those who believe that, since this is a matter in which all the people have a direct interest, though some of them do not now realize it fully, the Government of the United States can afford to spend public money for the purpose of any legitimate experimentation having in view the cheapening of fertilizer ingredients, the use of which is necessary to sustain human life.

The question of the cheaper production of fertilizer is growing in importance from year to year. In some places even now the success of agriculture is dependent upon the accomplishment of that result. We have everywhere an unlimited source of supply of nitrogen, which is one of the necessary ingredients of all fertilizer. The air which we breathe is composed largely of it; the supply is unlimited, and it is not confined to any locality of the globe; but, Mr. President, so far our scientists have not been able to extract nitrogen from the air without going to an expense that makes the cost of the fertilizer produced from it almost prohibitive. Unless we reestablish our civilization on a different basis or unless we cheapen and improve the method of extracting nitrogen from the air, we will be brought face to face sooner or later with a situation, due to the cost of fertilizer, whereby the cost of living to every human being on earth will be increased to such an extent that, as I have said, we will have to reestablish our entire civilization. To my mind it is a serious question; it is one that faces not only us but the entire world.

It is common knowledge, Mr. President, that nitrogen, one of the principal ingredients of fertilizer——

Mr. President, I wish Senators would not continue their loud conversation around me while I am trying to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. NORRIS. As I have said, I have no selfish interest in this subject; I could have avoided altogether the work that I have devoted to it without in any way affecting my personal or political fortunes. I have come in contact with it not because I wanted to; I did not seek the study of the question, and if I had followed the lines of least resistance I would have made no study of it; but in my official capacity as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry it seemed to me that if I did my duty I ought to face this question, not for my people so much as for other people not only in this country but in all the world.

I was about to say, Mr. President, that it is common knowledge that nitrogen, one of the necessary and principal ingredients of all fertilizers, is also a necessary and principal ingredient of all explosives. So there is a connection between nitrogen in time of peace and explosives in time of war. When we became involved in the World War the necessity for having more nitrogen in order to supply our armies and the armies of our allies was apparent to all students of the subject. The question of explosives was all important, and our Government officials, together with all the scientific men they could gather together, began its study.

It was known that there were in operation several processes of extracting nitrogen from the air; it was known that most of those processes were very expensive, that they required immense amounts of capital and some of them very large power facilities in order to bring about the necessary result. So our officers, wisely I think, decided that the Government of the United States as a war measure should go into the business of extracting nitrogen from the air. Everybody knows that the war developed one thing very prominently, and that was that manyfold more explosives are required in modern warfare than have ever been used before and that large quantities are necessary to keep armies in the field. I presume the people will never know how near the verge of ruin we stood on that question alone.

Germany had several processes by which nitrogen was extracted from the air. It had been extracted in Norway, where water power was very cheap. The one method that was probably understood better than any other was what was known as the cyanamid process, but it was known that that process, while successful, was very expensive and required very large amounts of power. It was known also that Germany was extracting nitrogen from the air by other processes which it was believed were cheaper and more economical. One was known as the Haber process, but our scientists did not have the knowledge to put that process into operation. After legislation by Congress the executive department, under authority of law, located at Muscle Shoals, Ala., a great governmental institution and undertook to build not only dams across the Tennessee River, where large amounts of power could be developed, but to construct the machinery, the buildings, and the plants necessary to extract nitrogen from the air.

The one process that was known and understood, the cyanamid process, was provided for by a very large plant. It is known as nitrate plant No. 2. It is as modern as any plant of its kind in the world. It is the last word in that process. The capacity of that plant is 40,000 tons of nitrogen a year; but it was known by our scientific men that nitrogen was also an important ingredient of fertilizer, and it was thought that the two things could be worked together. For war purposes the cost is a secondary consideration. For fertilizer purposes it is perhaps the first consideration. So they constructed also what was known as nitrate plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals with a view of extracting nitrogen from the air by the Haber process.

Compared with nitrate plant No. 2, it was a very small affair. It has steam power connected with it, as I remember now, of 5,000 or 6,000 horsepower. The other plant takes a great deal more power. The Haber process does not require nearly so much power. In fact, power is really a secondary consideration in the extraction of nitrogen from the air in that way; but our people did not know enough about the Haber process to make that plant a success. We spent several millions of dollars on it. It never has operated. It has been a failure, while the other plant was as successful as anybody expected it to be.

We have that plant at Muscle Shoals. The machinery in it is of no value. The building is modern and as nearly fireproof as it can be. Its power plant is modern, but as far as the extraction of nitrogen from the air is concerned it has been a failure. Since that time up to the present great advancement has been made in the extraction of nitrogen from the air, and we know now how to build a plant to extract nitrogen from the air by the Haber process. It is still an expensive process for fertilizer, perhaps too expensive to make it practicable. It would be desirable, of course, in time of war that we should establish that process, even though it was not cheap enough to extract nitrogen for fertilizer. We have, of course, the large nitrate plant No. 2 in running order, ready to start up on an hour's notice for the manufacture of fertilizer to its complete capacity. It is a safeguard to the same extent and in the same way that a battleship is a safeguard. Until we devise a better method, a cheaper method, a more economical method, we must, of course, think of nothing else except to keep it in that condition, as we now keep our battleships in first-class condition.

On the basis of the testimony taken by the Agricultural Committee on the Muscle Shoals propositions that were referred to that committee, I think it is a fair statement to say that scientific men agree that there must be some improvement somewhere in the way of cheapening the extraction of nitrogen from the air before we can use that process and have it practical and economical enough to lower the cost of fertilizer. I am just as firm in my belief that we are going to succeed, that by investigation and experimentation we are going to lessen the cost, as I am that we have any plant at all. We have already advanced quite a perceptible degree beyond the knowledge that we had at the time that we built those plants.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. DIAL. Do I understand that plant No. 2 could be operated by water?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Plant No. 2 has a steam power in connection with it that will operate it when there is not water power. There is not any there yet, of course, but the intention was to operate it by water power when the dams were completed, because that power would be much cheaper than steam, although steam power down there is cheaper than it is in most sections of the country.

Mr. President, because of the importance of this question as a war proposition, if we should be so unfortunate as ever to need it for that purpose, and because of its still greater importance as an agricultural proposition, in my judgment—because, as a war proposition, we can use the other one if necessary—to my mind the most important thing is for the Government, through its scientific departments, its chemistry bureaus, to experiment. We have that other plant there. It is of no value whatever unless it is used for some purpose. It is true it could be scrapped and the building and the power used for anything in the way of manufacturing; but since we have constructed it, since we own it, since we must concede the importance of the matter, it does seem to me that we are justified in seeing if we can not, by experimentation, cheapen the cost of the extraction of nitrogen from the air.

Since we have constructed that plant a Haber-process plant has been constructed by private people at Syracuse, N. Y., and they are extracting nitrogen from the air now; but I am told by chemists who have examined the plant that, although it is probably as modern as any that we have in this country, they can not even there get the nitrogen cheaply enough to reduce materially the cost of fertilizer, unless they do away with overhead expenses of all kinds.

Recently I talked with one of the leading chemists of our country, who was selected by President Wilson and his advisers to travel over Europe, or that part of Europe where he could travel, before the plant was located at Muscle Shoals. He traveled also over this country, with a view of finding a good location. He has recently been to Europe. He returned just a short time ago. He came to my house a week ago Sunday and told me that in France they had already improved upon the Haber process; they had operations going on now by which they had reduced the cost of extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere below what Syracuse was able to do, so that improvement is going on. It seems to me that as long as there is a hope of cheapening the process we are justified in keeping on, and who should do it? It is in the interest of all of the people, not only of our country but of the world. We are legislating, however, only for our people. It seems to me we are justified in the use of public funds to go on with that experimentation, especially when at an expense of several millions of dollars we have constructed a plant down there that can be remodeled and made modern. I do not expect it to remain, as it will be reconstructed. I do not want to practice any deception on the Senate or on the people. My own belief is that if we should install the machinery according to my amendment here the time would come when that machinery itself would become junk.

I should be glad to see that time come, because when they work with it on a large scale they will discover, in my judgment, new methods. In fact, that is the object that I have in view. So, Mr. President, it has seemed to me that we ought to remodel the plant down there, that we ought to install the most modern machinery known to the scientific world and extract nitrogen from the air, all of the time working for improvement, recognizing, I will admit, that we may fail.

I am not offering this proposition with any mathematical assurance that it will be a success. I concede that there is such a thing possible as man having reached the last step in the extraction of nitrogen from the air, but I do not believe it. In fact, the time will come in the generations that shall follow, if we have reached the last step, when the human race will be in a sorry predicament; so I have not any hesitancy in using public funds for the purpose of experimentation in this great, important industry, and experimentation always means that we may lose our money and get no return. That is a possibility. I believe the time will come—I think it will follow if this amendment is agreed to—when nitrate plant No. 2, which is now there in full condition to extract nitrogen under the cyanamid process, will become out of date, when we will junk that machinery, and eventually use that great plant by a simpler process, a cheapened process. In fact, Mr. President, the chemists of the entire universe are working on this proposition. If private parties get it, the process will be patented and the people will not get the full benefit of it. If the Government does it, it will be free and open to everybody, not only in this country but everywhere else. We are doing it for the good of all the people. No one will have a monopoly of it if the Government officials make the improvement; and, Mr. President, in my judgment we have them now.

I was talking this morning with a Senator about this proposition, and he said: "The thing I do not like about your proposition is that it is a Government institution. I would rather let private initiative go and get it."

Mr. President, I would, too, if it would get it. I do not want to interfere with private initiative; but if private initiative does get it, the first thing that will happen on every improvement that is made will be a patent not only in this country but in every other country; and while some relief would come to the people at large, perhaps, it would be many years before we would get the full benefit of it. We would have to pay a royalty, whether the Government did it or anybody else did it, to somebody who took out the patent. On a thing that is of such universal importance it seems to me that we can afford ourselves to employ specialists, chemists, and let them experiment. They will not be in competition with any others. Their methods will be open to the inspection of every chemist and every scientific man in the world. They will consult with everybody everywhere where they can get any information, and work in harmony with them with the one view of cheapening the method of the extracton of nitrogen from the air.

The Senator with whom I was talking this morning—a broad-minded man, a very able Senator, in whom I have the utmost confidence, and for whom I have unlimited respect—said: "One of the troubles with Government employees is that when they get a job that is permanent they lose their initiative. They do not go on and try to do better and improve conditions. They are interested in having short hours themselves and increasing their salaries."

Mr. President, I think there is a great deal in that, and I am not here to deny it. But I am here to assert that at least, in my humble judgment, it does not apply to our scientific men. During the time I have been chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I have come in contact with some of the chemists of the Bureau of Chemistry. I have likewise come in contact with some of the men who are in the Bureau of Standards, all scientific men of the highest degree of efficiency, and I want to say that I never met a body of men more intelligent in the first place, more honest in the next place, and more patriotic in the third place. As a rule they have no idea about 9 o'clock and 4 o'clock and 8 hours a day.

I have a neighbor, a man living within a stone's throw of where I live, in the suburbs of Washington, who has fitted up a laboratory in his attic, and you can find him there every Sunday; or, if he is not there, he will probably be at the Bureau of Standards, and he can often be found there at night. He becomes interested in a problem and never stops studying and working on it. He hardly stops to eat. One of the principal chemists in the Government service during the war used to come to my house quite often and tell me what he had done and what he was doing. He had no idea about his salary; he had no conception of money. He was wedded to his profession. He cared more about doing something for the benefit of humanity than he did about being a millionaire and having an office in Wall Street.

I think of all the classes of men I have ever come in contact with, those people in the Government employ who are doing scientific work are more unselfish than any other class of people I ever met. I know of one of those chemists who turned down an offer from the Standard Oil Co. time after time to go out at more than double his salary, to leave the Government service; and although he was a poor man, striving to pay the mortgage on a little seven-room house he had bought, he refused to do it. So I believe no objection of that kind can be urged as against the class of men, the class of governmental officials, who would handle this work of experimentation if this amendment were agreed to.

I think I said that I could not make any definite promise about what would be accomplished at Muscle Shoals. We are traveling on a path which leads into an unknown and an undeveloped wilderness. We may fail; but, unless somebody makes the investigation and brings about an improvement, if it is possible to bring it about, we will all suffer on account of it. I believe in this kind of an investigation, this kind of experimentation on the part of the Government, because whatever good does come from it will immediately be open to all the people of the United States. No private initiative will be denied the right to use the process, whatever it may be, or go into business anywhere they please and utilize the improvements developed, and get the benefit of the discoveries made at the expense of the public.

A two-thirds vote will be required to carry this motion to suspend the rules. I have talked with several of the Senators who are in favor of accepting the proposition of Mr. Ford in regard to Muscle Shoals, I do not want to be, and I will not be, unless I am forced into it, led into a debate on the Ford proposition now. I think this is away beyond it, away above it. I can not expect this motion to prevail if those who are in favor of accepting Mr. Ford's offer are opposed to the motion, because we will lack the votes. I want to be perfectly frank and perfectly fair with those who believe that Mr. Ford's offer ought to be accepted, and say that while it does not follow as a matter of course, it may be that if this amendment is agreed to, it will require a modification of Mr. Ford's offer. In his offer Mr. Ford has said nothing about nitrate plant No. 1. He has agreed to keep up nitrate plant No. 2, the big one. Under his offer he would get title in fee simple to nitrate plant No. 1 as well as to all the others. He may use it for any purpose. He may manufacture automobiles there, or he may tear out the machinery and use the building for any other purpose. He is not limited in any way.

It is claimed by those who advocate the acceptance of the Ford offer that Mr. Ford is going to cheapen the price of fertilizer. The people have been led to believe, by the wonderful propaganda which has gone over the country, that he is going to cut the price in two. Recently an interview was given out by Mr. Gray Silver, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, but who, as a matter of fact, devotes most of his time to the Ford proposition, in which he said that if this offer of Mr. Ford were accepted, the price of fertilizer would be cut not only one-half but three-fourths. I will read the first sentence of his interview, which he gave to all the newspapers, and which is published in the American Farm Bureau Weekly News Letter, which goes to all the farmers of that organization throughout the United States. He said:

By authorization of Congress, the price of nitrogen used as a fertilizer in this country can be reduced three-fourths.

Then he went on to say that the way to reduce it would be for Congress to accept the Ford offer. It has often been stated by me and others that no such proposition is involved in Mr. Ford's offer. Mr. Ford has never agreed to reduce the cost of fertilizer one cent; and I do not complain because he does not agree to that, but he does not know whether he could reduce it.

I think he could reduce it, but if he does he will have to experiment; he will have to have a factory somewhere; he will have to have an extensive plant at some place where he can work out all the suggested improvements and see which is practical and which is not in the way of getting nitrogen from the air. It is not known now, either by Mr. Ford or anybody else.

So I am not offering this as against the Ford proposition. Mr. Ford has not yet disclosed to any human being that he is going to utilize this plant No. 1 for the purpose of experimenting in the extraction of nitrogen from the air, with a view of cheapening the price. If he has that idea in his mind—and it would be reasonable he should have—if he is in earnest, if he means what he says, if he thinks he can cheapen the price, he must utilize some machinery, he must utilize some buildings, he must utilize some plant, and he must do it on a large scale in order to cheapen this product; and if he expects to use nitrate plant No. 1, which was built for that purpose, then this will not interfere with his offer one iota. If he got the property, he could simply go on just the same. If, on the other hand, he does not intend to do that, if he does not intend to use nitrate plant No. 1 for experimental purposes, if he does not expect to utilize that method of cheapening the product, then he would have to modify his proposition and he would have to agree not only to maintain plant No. 2 but to maintain plant No. 1 as a nitrate proposition. That would be a small modification. If he is in earnest, if he expects the country to believe the representations which have been made in his behalf, he ought to be glad to do it, it seems to me. So, even though I favored the Ford proposition, I would likewise favor this amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Just for information, why does not the Government operate plant No. 2?

Mr. NORRIS. The Government would operate plant No. 2 if we were in war, and they would operate it, I suppose, even in time of peace if they wanted to make explosives. They could operate it to-morrow; but we are not in war, we do not need a great supply of explosives, and therefore they keep it in a stand-by condition, ready to operate, the same as a battleship.

Mr. DIAL. I thought there was simply a good deal of water running away, doing no good, and that we could operate the plant and make fertilizer and experiment.

Mr. NORRIS. The water power is not finished yet. We can not operate plant No. 2 or any other plant there by water power now because the dam is not completed. We could experiment with plant No. 2, and I should think it would be all right to do so. Most of the scientific witnesses who testified before the committee, while they could not say definitely, as a rule, at least, gave it as their opinion that the probable improvement and the cheapening of the extraction of nitrogen from the air would not come through the cyanamid process but through the Haber or some modification of the Haber process. If I am not right in that, I would like to be corrected by any member of the committee who heard the testimony. It was testified, as I recall, that the field seems more inviting for the manufacture under the Haber process than any other. It must be improved and we expect that it will be improved.

Mr. President, I know there are some Senators who are opposed to the Ford offer and to any other proposition of developing this property. I am not criticizing them. I concede that they have just as good a right to their opinions as I have to mine. I can not myself understand how a man can take that position, but that makes no difference; there are lots of things I do not understand. Those Senators are against the Ford offer, and they are against any other proposition for the improvement of Muscle Shoals. When they are combined with those who want to accept the Ford offer, they can defeat this amendment or any other similar proposition, because a two-thirds vote is required to suspend the rule and make the amendment in order. Therefore, if those Senators who are in favor of the Ford offer do not feel that they could support a proposition of this kind at this time, of course I can not hope to have my amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to take the position that a vote against his motion to suspend the rule and vote upon the proposition which the Senator is about to submit commits those who vote against it to the Ford proposition. I do not so understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not mean to say that, because there are those who are opposed to the Ford offer who will likewise be opposed to this motion. I know that, and I think I said it. I tried to do so.

Mr. KING. I think there are some Senators here who have not committed themselves to the Ford proposition, but who may vote against the Senator's proposition, because they may not feel that it is wise to expend $2,000,000 for the purpose indicated by the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that; the Senator is perfectly right. I concede that a Senator may think we can not afford and that it is not good wisdom to expend this amount of money in experimentation; and, of course, those Senators may be right, because I can not promise any definite result. I do not know what the outcome will be. I only see this one opening in the wilderness, however. It seems to me there is no other. Some man may invent some other method, or some mine of fertilizer may be discovered somewhere in our own country which would result in a reduction in the price. There is no indication that that is going to happen. I would be glad if it should happen.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has just made a suggestion aside to me that I think is worthy of consideration. He asks what is the objection to not confining this proposition to the extraction of nitrogen from the air. I do not want it confined in that way, I will say frankly to the Senator, although perhaps the amendment does that. I would be glad to modify it so that any method would be open to use. I really accept the wisdom of the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan. It does not make any difference where the nitrogen comes from. It must come, I think, from some place, or we will be in a deplorable condition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am in great sympathy with the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska. After listening to the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] yesterday, in which he contended that the processes of extracting from the air, if I understood him correctly, were not feasible, it occurred to me that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska should be so changed as to appropriate $2,000,000 to be used by the scientists of the United States Government in developing some method of producing nitrogen, whatever that method might be, and not confine it in terms to extraction from the air.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be glad to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator when I offer my amendment, if I ever get an opportunity to offer it. I would suggest a proviso that they shall not be confined to nitrate plant No. 2 or to this particular method, but that they may use the money in any way they see fit. I did not hear the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] yesterday, although I knew he was going to speak. I had a conference that took me away from the Senate and when I returned I found he had finished. I have not had time to read his address in the RECORD. I have great respect for the Senator from North Dakota. He is, as we all know, a chemist. If there is any other method, or if we can modify my amendment so as to make it general in any way to cover any other method, I shall certainly be glad to accept it. I would just as soon cheapen the cost of fertilizer in some other practical way as through the method of obtaining nitrogen from the air. If we can get it in any other way I shall be glad to have it done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am delighted at the interest the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] takes in the manufacture of nitrogen at the Muscle Shoals plant. I wish that I could agree with him that his proposal is a practical one and one that could produce results that would be beneficial.

I remember when I was a Member of the House I made the first speech that was made on the question of developing air nitrogen in this country. It was during Mr. Taft's administration. I heartily supported the provision in our national defense act appropriating $20,000,000 and authorizing the President of the United States to select a site for a dam and for the building of a plant to make nitrogen out of the air. That is the law now. It is really the law that controls the existing plant, because although vastly more money was spent than $20,000,000, it was under the provisions of the national defense act that the plant was located at Muscle Shoals and the subsequent appropriations and authorizations and allotments made.

I am sure that my friend from Nebraska does not contend that there is any way to supply an adequate amount of nitrogen, except from the Chilean nitrate beds, unless it shall come from the air. I am sure that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], to whose remarks I listened yesterday with great interest, because he is a great and able chemist, would not so contend. He indicated that there might be other methods than those used now by which we could produce an adequate supply of nitrogen, but I did not understand him to abandon the air as the source of supply. So far as I know, although we find nitrogen in plant life and find it in many other places, it is not found in usable commercial quantities outside of the guano beds of the Pacific Ocean islands, which are about exhausted, and the Chilean nitrate beds of South America and the atmosphere which rests above us. So far as the world knows, that is where it must come from.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was interrupted just at the moment and did not hear the sentence just before the last one uttered by the Senator from Alabama. What was it the Senator said about the source of nitrogen?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I simply said if we eliminate the guano beds of the Pacific islands and the nitrate beds of South America, I know of no other place where an adequate supply of nitrogen could come from except out of the air. I mean in commercial quantities. Of course we could produce nitrogen by breathing the air into our lungs and allowing the blood to absorb the oxygen in the air and then exhale the nitrogen, but we can not confine that in commercial quantities to accomplish any result.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will admit, however, that it can be acquired through by-product coke ovens.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; there is a moderate supply that can be taken from that source, but I would not say an adequate supply. I happen to be in the coke-oven business myself. There is only a small supply of nitrogen that can come from by-product ovens, because the amount of by-products that we make is limited by the production of the pig iron. We can not make the by-products commercially successful for the mere production of coke unless we are going to use the coke in the blast furnaces of the country for the production of pig iron. That supply is largely absorbed in the lines that are not used for fertilizer purposes. We supply the nitrogen that is used to make ammonia which is used in the refrigerating plants of the country.

So that when we come to speak of nitrogen for either war purposes or the supply of fertilizer for agricultural purposes we have the Chilean nitrate beds on the one hand, and we have the atmosphere on the other hand. Now, I take it that the Senator from Nebraska in saying that he was ready to adopt any other method that would prove practical meant, as a practical proposition, any other method that could be invented or found that would convert the nitrogen that is found in the air into a form that could be commercially used. Of course, we would all agree to that if some one would find the way. I believe that the world should go on experimenting. I have been told that there have been over a thousand methods devised by which the nitrogen can be drawn from the air, but there are only two or three of them that have ever been practical that can be used to produce a commercial product. The cyanamid process, the Haber process, and perhaps one or two others have been successful, but at any rate we could count all the processes that can be considered at all practical on the fingers of two hands.

I do not object to experimentation. In connection with the Muscle Shoals plant I hope the day may come when in addition to producing nitrogen for war purposes and fertilizer purposes there may be a great experiment plant, but I am not in favor of putting the cart in front of the horse. We had too much experimentation in the matter in the beginning. When the national defense act was passed before we got into the war the bureaus of the Government used a very large proportion of the appropriation in experimentation and delayed action over 18 months, or nearly two years, by their experimentation that got us nowhere. Then finally they had to come down, when war forced us to action, to do the practical thing, to take a known process to accomplish any result.

A part of their experimentation after we got into the war was the building of nitrate plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals. It never met with my approval because I thought we ought to do something that was practical and that was not an experiment, which that plant was. It was an effort to adopt the Haber process when we do not know what the Haber process is except theoretically. We knew theoretically what it was, but we did not know the practical details of how to work it out. The result was that the money expended on plant No. 1 was not of any benefit. All that time we were delaying the building and operation of a practical plant by a process that the world had tried and the world knew, but finally at great cost, because it happened during the war time, we built the plant. If we had started to build plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals two years before the war, before the strain was made on our resources, we probably could have built it for one-half the money that it cost us to build during the pressure of war conditions. But it was this experimentation, when the Congress has called for action, that delayed the plant and probably cost the Government $40,000,000 more than was necessary.

Now, if we want a lay-by plant to take care of the Government during war times and serve the agricultural interests of the country during peace times, the practical thing to do is not to experiment as an initial step but to adopt the best practical methods of the day and hour and put them into use, using them for the benefit of the people who want the nitrogen, who need the nitrogen, and to whom we pledged the Government to furnish nitrogen in the national defense act passed some five or six years ago. I do not remember the exact date of its passage.

There is no question before the Congress that is nearer to my heart than the real development of this great plant at Muscle Shoals in the interest of the American people, as well as the people of my State.

What we spend, however, I desire shall be spent along business lines, so that a practical result may be accomplished and one which we know is going to be accomplished when we spend the money, and not to spend any more money in experimentation until real accomplishment has been made in the interest of those who need this necessary plant food in order that they may develop agriculture and produce cheaper food. Therefore, Mr. President, I do not favor the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

I do not know about what we are going to experiment. I think if we should provide an appropriation of $2,000,000 to experiment it would take us away from the practical question of doing something, of accomplishing a result. I think there is a real issue before the Senate and before the House of Representatives, and that is how are we going to operate the plant we already have? We have a going concern; that is, a concern that is prepared to go. We have a great nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, probably the greatest single nitrate plant in the world, which has in the past made and which can now make nitrogen in the form of cyanamid in commercial quantities, and along commercial lines, and which can supply the fertilizer market. Such production is no experiment. Nitrogen is being produced at the plant at Niagara Falls to-day, which is a plant of similar construction to ours, although it is not so great a plant as that at Muscle Shoals. The fertilizer interests of America are absorbing its product. Nitrogen is being produced in Germany, although the bulk of the production of nitrate in Germany is under the Haber process. The cyanamid process, however, is being used successfully. It is being done in France; it is being done in England; and I think there is also a plant in Italy, although I am not sure about that. But, I repeat, this production is no experiment. Nitrogen has been made. All we shall have to do is to start turning the wheels.

So far as the dam is concerned, that is practically an accomplished fact; it is in the process of building. In the course of two years or, at any rate, not to exceed three years, that great plant will be finished, and the electrical current will flow from the river into it. When this bill passes, as it will, there will then be no dispute about the completion of Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, because the bill not only carries the appropriation for this year but authorizes the engineers to make the final contract for its completion. So, practically speaking, we know that at the end of three years we are going to have great electrical power behind the nitrate plant, which can be successfully and efficiently operated in a business way.

If we are going to spend $2,000,000, I desire that it shall be spent along practical lines—lines which we are developing—and not stop the wheels of this endeavor for further experimentation at this time.

I wish, however, to go further than that; that is not my only reason for opposition to the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska. I think the question before Congress now for determination is how the great nitrate plant which is now finished and the power plant at Dam No. 2, which will be finished, at Muscle Shoals, in not to exceed three years, shall be operated. Are we going to operate it by private effort or are we going to operate it as a Government institution? That is the issue which is before the Congress. The Senator from Nebraska favors the operation of this great plant by the Government, while the Secretary of War and the administration did not agree with him in reference to that matter. I agreed with the Senator from Nebraska at one time; two years ago it seemed to me that there was no other way to secure its operation; but the administration which is now in power did not agree with the Senator from Nebraska or myself. The administration said that these great plants should be operated by private concerns; and the Secretary of War asked private enterprise to make a bid or bids for the operation of those plants, so that the Government would have a stand-by plant to make nitrates in time of war and an operating plant to make nitrates for fertilizer in time of peace.

In response to the request of the administration, coming through the Secretary of War, Mr. Henry Ford made a proposal to take over these plants, to pay the Government a certain amount of money, himself to invest $10,000,000 for the future operation of the plants, and agreed that he would put the plants in operation and would yearly produce 40,000 tons of concentrated nitrates, which I am told equals the amount of Chilean nitrates that we import into this country. I am not sure that I am accurate in reference to the latter statement, but it is approximately correct that the 40,000 tons of concentrated nitrates which Mr. Ford guarantees to produce, if we shall close the contract with him, will substantially equal the amount of nitrogen that we are now importing from Chile in the form of Chilean nitrates. Of course, there is a lot of waste product in the Chilean nitrate, and the tonnage runs to a very much greater amount than 40,000.

However, the question now before the country and before Congress is as to whether we are going to accept an offer which was called for by the War Department and which was made by Henry Ford and submitted to the Congress of the United States for ratification or rejection. So far as I am concerned, I am not going into a full discussion of the Ford offer at this time. I merely wish to say that I think the Ford offer the best proposal that has been made in order to work out the situation along practical lines. The reason why I say it is the best proposal is that behind it is a man who is financially responsible and who guarantees to make 40,000 tons of concentrated nitrogen a year. When he is given an opportunity to carry out that proposal the American people will get the benefit of it. He has agreed to convert that 40,000 tons of nitrogen into fertilizer for the benefit of the American farmer and not to charge over 8 per cent of profit for himself, which is a reasonable limitation.

I do not believe there is any other man in the United States with the capital behind him that could accomplish this result, and I do not believe the Government, if it should operate these plants, can produce 40,000 tons of nitrogen, convert them into fertilizer, and turn the fertilizer over to the agricultural interests of America as cheaply as can Henry Ford. Therefore I stand for the Ford proposal, and if I have an opportunity to vote in the Senate on it I shall vote for it. But there are Senators who differ from me; the Senator from Nebraska differs from me, and I respect his opinion very highly, because I know he is never moved by motives except the highest. Everybody knows the Senator from Nebraska to be an honest and sincere man, and I respect his opinions, although I very seriously differ from his judgment in the matter. I think his judgment is wrong. However, that is the issue. Why should we sidetrack it? Why should we go off on a tangent?

I think it is nothing but fair to Mr. Ford, if the Congress is going to act on this matter at all, that before we tie it up and complicate it by additional expenditures and additional experimentation and additional contracts, we should have a fair and honest vote on the proposal of Mr. Ford as the situation stood when he made the proposal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, is it not rather a universal rule of business ethics that when bids are invited the bidders must be told whether their proposals are accepted or rejected?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that action ought to be taken within a reasonable time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; I am in thorough accord with what the Senator says; and I think that is the position here. I believe that Congress has treated Mr. Ford in relation to his offer in a very cavalier way. I think that is the least that can be said about it. The administration invited an honest business man to make an honest proposal. It did not come voluntarily from him, but it was made by invitation. The offer has been here for more than a year; in fact, I think for more than 18 months, and it has been ignored by inaction. As I have said, I think Henry Ford's offer ought to be accepted. Senators may disagree with me; a majority of the Senate have a right to express their opinion on the subject; and the judgment of the House and the Senate must determine the question. Other Senators may be right, and I may be wrong, but I do not think they are right, and I have not any doubt in my mind about one thing, namely, that no matter who is right or who is wrong as to what should be done with this plant, when there was invited a proposal about a Government business, and a very large Government business, from a substantial citizen of the United States, he is being treated in a cavalier manner when it is proposed to sidetrack his proposal——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is worse than cavalier; it is puritanical.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When it is proposed to sidetrack his proposal for further experimentation, and a direct opportunity is not given to the Congress of the United States either to accept or reject the proposal.

Therefore I think that, in the interest of the great plants which are in my State, and their future development along practical lines, in what I believe to be the best interest of the Government and of those people of the United States who desire cheaper and better fertilizer, we ought, before we do anything else, directly accept or reject the Henry Ford proposal. Then, if we shall accept it, the situation will be ended; but if we reject it we should then consider what we are going to do with these great plants. After that question is determined, then we can decide how we are going to do it, and then the question as to whether we shall enter upon further experimentation or not may be a vital one and one worthy of consideration. Of course, if we are not going to operate the plants ourselves, but are going to turn them over to Henry Ford, it will be for him to determine how he will experiment and how he will produce the nitrogen; but we must first determine the question as to how and when and by whom these great plants are to be operated. Therefore, Mr. President, I intend to vote against the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, some days ago I wrote the Secretary of the Treasury asking him to give me the figures showing the amounts of principal and interest to be paid by Great Britain under the proposed agreement. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD Secretary Mellon's reply and the figures he sent to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 7, 1923.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of February 6, and note your desire for figures showing the amounts of principal and interest, each, to be paid by the British under the proposed debt settlement plan as published during each year of the loan.

In reply, I take pleasure in inclosing herewith a schedule which I think will give you just the figures you desire.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

(Inclosure.)

Statement of amounts payable to the United States on account of the proposed refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain.

Year.	Principal.	Schedule of annual interest installments to be paid by British Government on refunding bonds at rate of 3 per cent for first 10 years, 3½ per cent until final payment.	Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal.	Total annual payments.
1	$4,600,000,000	$138,000,000	$23,000,000	$161,000,000
2	4,577,000,000	137,310,000	23,000,000	160,310,000
3	4,554,000,000	136,620,000	24,000,000	160,620,000
4	4,530,000,000	135,900,000	25,000,000	160,900,000
5	4,505,000,000	135,150,000	25,000,000	160,150,000
6	4,480,000,000	134,400,000	27,000,000	161,400,000
7	$4,453,000,000	$133,590,000	$27,000,000	$160,590,000
8	4,426,000,000	132,780,000	28,000,000	160,780,000
9	4,398,000,000	131,940,000	28,000,000	159,940,000
10	4,370,000,000	131,100,000	30,000,000	161,100,000
11	4,340,000,000	151,900,000	32,000,000	183,900,000
12	4,308,000,000	150,780,000	32,000,000	182,780,000
13	4,276,000,000	149,660,000	32,000,000	181,660,000
14	4,244,000,000	148,540,000	32,000,000	180,540,000
15	4,212,000,000	147,420,000	37,000,000	184,420,000
16	4,175,000,000	146,125,000	37,000,000	183,125,000
17	4,138,000,000	144,830,000	37,000,000	181,830,000
18	4,101,000,000	143,535,000	42,000,000	185,535,000
19	4,059,000,000	142,065,000	42,000,000	184,065,000
20	4,017,000,000	140,595,000	42,000,000	182,595,000
21	3,975,000,000	139,125,000	42,000,000	181,125,000
22	3,933,000,000	137,655,000	46,000,000	183,655,000
23	3,887,000,000	136,045,000	46,000,000	182,045,000
24	3,841,000,000	134,435,000	46,000,000	180,435,000
25	3,795,000,000	132,825,000	51,000,000	183,825,000
26	3,744,000,000	131,040,000	51,000,000	182,040,000
27	3,693,000,000	129,255,000	51,000,000	180,255,000
28	3,642,000,000	127,470,000	53,000,000	180,470,000
29	3,589,000,000	125,615,000	55,000,000	180,615,000
30	3,534,000,000	123,690,000	57,000,000	180,690,000
31	3,477,000,000	121,695,000	60,000,000	181,695,000
32	3,417,000,000	119,595,000	64,000,000	183,595,000
33	3,353,000,000	117,355,000	64,000,000	181,355,000
34	3,289,000,000	115,115,000	64,000,000	179,115,000
35	3,225,000,000	112,875,000	67,000,000	179,875,000
36	3,158,000,000	110,530,000	70,000,000	180,530,000
37	3,088,000,000	108,080,000	72,000,000	180,080,000
38	3,016,000,000	105,560,000	74,000,000	179,560,000
39	2,942,000,000	102,970,000	78,000,000	180,970,000
40	2,864,000,000	100,240,000	78,000,000	178,240,000
41	2,786,000,000	97,510,000	83,000,000	180,510,000
42	2,703,000,000	94,605,000	85,000,000	179,605,000
43	2,618,000,000	91,630,000	89,000,000	180,630,000
44	2,529,000,000	88,515,000	94,000,000	182,515,000
45	2,435,000,000	85,225,000	96,000,000	181,225,000
46	2,339,000,000	81,865,000	100,000,000	181,865,000
47	2,239,000,000	78,365,000	105,000,000	183,365,000
48	2,134,000,000	74,690,000	110,000,000	184,690,000
49	2,024,000,000	70,840,000	114,000,000	184,840,000
50	1,910,000,000	66,850,000	119,000,000	185,850,000
51	1,791,000,000	62,685,000	123,000,000	185,685,000
52	1,668,000,000	58,380,000	127,000,000	185,380,000
53	1,541,000,000	53,935,000	132,000,000	185,935,000
54	1,409,000,000	49,315,000	136,000,000	185,315,000
55	1,273,000,000	44,555,000	141,000,000	185,555,000
56	1,132,000,000	39,620,000	146,000,000	185,620,000
57	986,000,000	34,510,000	151,000,000	185,510,000
58	835,000,000	29,225,000	156,000,000	185,225,000
59	679,000,000	23,765,000	162,000,000	185,765,000
60	517,000,000	18,095,000	167,000,000	185,095,000
61	350,000,000	12,250,000	175,000,000	187,250,000
62	175,000,000	6,125,000	175,000,000	181,125,000
Total		6,505,965,000	4,600,000,000	11,105,965,000

Schedule of annual principal installments to be paid on account of principal of refunding bonds to be issued by Great Britain.

1	$23,000,000	33	$64,000,000
2	23,000,000	34	64,000,000
3	24,000,000	35	67,000,000
4	25,000,000	36	70,000,000
5	25,000,000	37	72,000,000
6	27,000,000	38	74,000,000
7	27,000,000	39	78,000,000
8	28,000,000	40	78,000,000
9	28,000,000	41	83,000,000
10	30,000,000	42	85,000,000
11	32,000,000	43	89,000,000
12	32,000,000	44	94,000,000
13	32,000,000	45	96,000,000
14	32,000,000	46	100,000,000
15	37,000,000	47	105,000,000
16	37,000,000	48	110,000,000
17	37,000,000	49	114,000,000
18	42,000,000	50	119,000,000
19	42,000,000	51	123,000,000
20	42,000,000	52	127,000,000
21	42,000,000	53	132,000,000
22	46,000,000	54	136,000,000
23	46,000,000	55	141,000,000
24	46,000,000	56	146,000,000
25	51,000,000	57	151,000,000
26	51,000,000	58	156,000,000
27	51,000,000	59	162,000,000
28	53,000,000	60	167,000,000
29	55,000,000	61	175,000,000
30	57,000,000	62	175,000,000
31	60,000,000
32	64,000,000	Total	4,600,000,000

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say, in reference to those figures, that Senators will recall that the average rate of interest paid by the United States on this $4,600,000,000 of bonds—4¼ per cent—by a simple calculation amounts to $195,500,000 per year. I also call attention to the fact that the highest interest rate and principal rate combined, as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, is one hundred and eighty-seven million and some hundred thousand dollars a year. The average amount of principal and interest paid by Great Britain each year during the life of the loan is just a trifle above $180,000,000; so that the loss to the American people each year will be just a trifle more than $15,000,000, and at the end of the period the British loan will be paid, and, unless our loan is paid by us by taxation of the American people, it will not be paid.

I submit these figures, and I hope that Senators will examine them.

Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent to submit as a part of my remarks an article substantially as published in the New York Times a day or two ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator says "substantially as published." What does he mean by that?

Mr. McKELLAR. There were some matters of law, the acts of Congress, that were incorporated in the article as written that were not incorporated in the article as published. Of course, I am perfectly willing, if the Senator has any objection, to read the article.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before I consent to the insertion of that I should like to see it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will take pleasure in handing it to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. After that I probably shall not object, but I should like to see it first.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will send it over to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not time to read it now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Mississippi object?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object for the present.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator objects, I will read the article into the record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Who is the article from?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is written by myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh!

Mr. McKELLAR (reading)—

"The debt settlement proposition with Great Britain is purely a business proposition. If the proposal submitted by the two commissions is fair and just alike both to the United States and Great Britain, it ought to be confirmed by the Congress. If it is not fair and just alike to both countries, it ought not to be confirmed. Surely no one can gainsay this proposition. I take the position that the settlement is neither fair nor just to the United States. I take the position we should confirm no settlement which means the cancellation of the principal while Great Britain's annual interest and principal payments combined are not as much as our annual interest payments alone. The result of the agreement is that in 62 years Great Britain, without paying as much in principal and interest combined in any one year as we pay in interest alone, will rid herself of the whole debt, while we will still be obligated in the principal sum of $4,600,000,000. I can not yet give exact figures"—

I am reading from an article that was prepared by me some days ago. I have just submitted the exact figures, as given by the Secretary of the Treasury—

"but, according to figures I have, the annual sums to be paid by Great Britain, including both principal and interest, will not exceed $185,000,000 in any one year."

That statement is not exactly accurate. For one year, I think, the combined payments amount to $187,000,000, and for one or two years to $186,000,000; but the average as submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury is substantially $180,000,000 a year; so that I overestimated it rather than underestimated it.

"The original agreement under the act of April 24, 1917"—

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi and to the Senator from Kansas that that is the part of the article I desired to insert in the RECORD. It deals entirely with excerpts from previous statutes governing these bonds, and I am a little surprised that my two friends object to things like that going into the RECORD. I regret that they did it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I objected merely because I did not know what it was. I told the Senator that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offered to show it to the Senator.

"Under the act of April 24, 1917:

"The President is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to purchase at par from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States their obligations hereafter issued bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act.

"In the act of September 24, 1917, in which another bond issue was authorized, a like provision was inserted, except that it was provided as follows, in the second issue of bonds:

"But the rate or rates of interest borne by any such obligation shall not be less than the highest rate borne by any bonds of the United States which, at the time of the acquisition thereof, shall have been issued under the authority of said act approved April 24, 1917.

"It also further provides that whenever the American Government had to pay a higher rate of interest that foreign governments should likewise pay the increased rate.

"On April 14, 1918, another act was passed providing for the taking of bonds under like conditions. On March 3, 1919, it was provided that until the expiration of 18 months after the termination of war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to establish, in addition to the credits authorized by section 2 of the second Liberty bond act as amended, credits with the United States for any foreign government now engaged in war with the enemies of the United States for the purpose only of providing for purchases of any property owned directly or indirectly by the United States not needed by the United States, or of any wheat the price of which has been or may be guaranteed by the United States. The act further required the Secretary to take 'obligations hereafter issued bearing such rate or rates of interest not less than 5 per cent per annum maturing at such date or dates not later than October 15, 1938, etc.'

"The act under which our commission was established provides as follows as to the rate of interest:

"Provided that nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or any other obligations due to the United States by any foreign government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4¼ per cent per annum.

"And again—

"This act shall not be construed to authorize the exchange of bonds or other obligation of any foreign government for those of any foreign government or cancellation of any part of such indebtedness except through payment thereof.

"Great Britain received this money under the terms of these various acts, but instead of selling and delivering to our Government her bonds, she simply made certificates of indebtedness bearing the rate of 5 per cent per annum. This she did of her own accord, and our Government now holds these certificates of indebtedness, bearing the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and Great Britain has paid recently nearly $100,000,000 as interest upon obligations. It will thus be seen that the Congress voluntarily and in exact accordance with the terms under which the money was borrowed from the American people, and in exact accordance with the terms under which it was loaned to Great Britain, authorized the commission to refund the debt at an average rate of interest of 4¼ per cent, that being the average we have to pay, without including the cost of selling our bonds, which cost was quite large. This was the situation when the two commissions met in Washington some weeks ago for the purpose of refunding the debt.

A BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

"The terms on which the money was loaned constituted a plain business transaction. The money was accepted by Great Britain as a business transaction. Our dealings with Great Britain all during the war were all on a business basis. She charged us full war prices for transporting our troops over to France, troops who so nobly aided in preventing her destruction as well as defending our own honor. She charged war prices for all supplies furnished, for all property rented, such as camps, buildings, offices, and the like, to our armies. After the war was over, though she owed us billions in principal and interest, she demanded the cash in dollars—not in her depreciated pounds—for all sums we owed her on any account whatsoever, which balances ran into the millions, and we appropriated the money and paid her cash, in dollars and at full war prices, for all we owed her.

"As heretofore noted, we loaned her, after the war was over, something like a billion of dollars, and really under an express contract for 5 per cent, in order that she might buy our war supplies over there—many of them bought very cheap—and in order that she might bolster up her exchange and increase her commerce. The value of her money was thereby greatly enhanced. Her credit was thereby greatly improved, her business greatly prospered. There has been nothing that suggests the Shylock about our dealings with her. We have resolved every doubt in her favor. We have been more generous to her than any nation ever was to another in the history of the world. We have been generous to her in dollars, generous to her in service, and generous to her in our unfailing sentiments of kinship. She promised us bonds in the very beginning when we loaned her the money, but she gave us no bonds at that time, as she agreed to do. She made no pretense of giving us bonds, and for four years paid us not a cent of interest, and our Government did not even ask any such payment thereof during the time we paid the balances to her.

"Last fall she said she wanted to settle. We passed a bill constituting a commission to settle with her. She had given us obligations at 5 per cent. She wanted to get that interest rate reduced. That law was openly passed. The terms were expressly set forth. She had full knowledge of these terms. When her commissioners first came over they announced that they were going to pay to the last farthing. The people of the United States thought she was. Everybody knew those terms. The terms on which she borrowed this money were the lowest any nation ever borrowed money for in time of war. The interest rate agreed upon was the identical rate we borrowed the money for from our own people, 4¼ per cent. What could be fairer, what could suggest less of the Shylock, what could be less hard, what could be more generous? The rate was probably a little less than one-third the rate at which she borrowed, through J. P. Morgan & Co., the $500,000,000 borrowed by her just before we went into the war. There is no evidence that she has not paid J. P. Morgan & Co. in full, or is paying in full, at the enormously high rate of interest agreed upon with Morgan & Co. It seems that there was no reduction even asked for there.

THE CONFERENCE.

"Yet, though avowing that Great Britain was going to pay to the last farthing, when she got into secret conference with our commission she took a very different attitude. She claimed, in substance, that it would be to our interest to tax our people for part of the interest she had agreed to pay instead of requiring her to tax her people for it; that she was not able to pay full interest; that her people were already heavily taxed, and more heavily than any other people, and that they would have to economize further to pay even a part; but in a public statement the head of their commission said: 'We are not here to ask for favors or to impose upon generosity.' He simply wanted a 'square deal'; and then, by means known only to the most masterly diplomats, the British commission now say they secured an offer from the American commission to disregard the law of Congress under which the money was loaned, to disregard the contract which the United States already had with Great Britain with respect to this loan, to disregard the law under which the commission was created, to disregard the generous terms which the Congress had fixed, and to make the British a new proposal which will scale the interest charges on the debt in such a way as to permit Great Britain to pay less than the interest charges originally agreed upon and finally to cancel the principal of the indebtedness; and yet Mr. Baldwin announced that he was 'not here to ask for favors.'

WHAT THE SETTLEMENT MEANS.

"The settlement proposed permits Great Britain to pay interest for the first 10 years at 3 per cent and thereafter at 3½ per cent during an additional 52 years. It provides that, beginning the first year with $23,000,000 payment on the principal, such payments upon the principal will be regularly increased during the life of the bonds until in the sixty-second year the amount of the installment of principal will be $175,000,000 a year.

"The average rate of interest that the United States pays on this debt of $4,600,000,000, in round numbers, is 4¼ per cent, or $195,300,000 annually. If this proposed settlement is confirmed by the Congress, Great Britain will never in the 62 years pay as much as $195,300,000 in both interest and principal payments, and at the end of the period she will have paid us in full under the proposed agreement, while we will still owe the entire $4,600,000,000."

Of course, provided that we do not refund it at a lower rate of interest at some time in the future. In such event we would take the risk, we would take the chance. As for some of these bonds, they can not be redeemed until 1947, and as to others I am not advised as to whether or not they can be refunded at certain periods. If the Secretary of the Treasury had the right to fix certain periods at which they might be refunded we might save something, but nothing like the immense amount involved in this transaction. I continue the reading:

"In other words, Great Britain's annual payments of both principal and interest will not amount to as much as our annual payments on interest alone. Of necessity, therefore, we will in the long run have canceled the principal indebtedness. This was precisely what our commission was prohibited by law from doing.

GREAT BRITAIN SOLVENT AND ABLE TO PAY.

"Why should we enter into this agreement to cancel the principal of the indebtedness due by Great Britain? She is fully able to pay it. Her bonds are above par. Her exchange is within 18 cents of normal and going up all the time. It has received a large boost by the expected saving of this settlement upon such favorable terms to her. She has nearly all the world, except the United States, indebted to her. She will undoubtedly get her portion of German reparations before the matter is concluded. Our debt against her is as good as gold. There was no business necessity of scaling our debt or canceling the principal. If our commission did it voluntarily, as the Great Britain commission claims, then our commission was unmindful of American interests and rights and was violating the law, and the Congress ought not to feel in the slightest bound by its action. Great Britain knew the law we had passed, and she can not claim any advantage if she secured or acquiesced in the American commission violating the American law.

THE RIGHT OF THE TRANSACTION.

"Every international controversy should be settled upon the exact rights of the parties thereto. Great Britain, in 1917 and 1918, earnestly sought those loans. Without them and without the services of American soldiers there would have probably been no British Empire to-day. We loaned her this money with the agreement that we would take her bonds bearing the same rate of interest that our bonds were to bear, issued to secure this very money, though Great Britain's bonds were then selling on the market at 95 cents and 2½ per cent; consols at 53. There was never greater generosity shown than in the lending of money upon such terms. That contract under which it was borrowed is the just measure of the right of the case. We lent the money on the solemn promise to our people that Great Britain would pay the same interest on it as we pay and that our people would not be further taxed for either principal or interest. We are paying now an average of 4¼ per cent for this money. We should take British bonds bearing a like rate. If in the future we are able to refund our bonds at less interest we should then, in all fairness, allow Great Britain to benefit by the reduced rate. In my judgment, such a settlement would be exceedingly fair and just and even extraordinarily generous.

WE HAVE NO RIGHT TO SETTLE ON ANY OTHER TERMS.

"We are trustees of the American people. What man of us who holds a British obligation, perfectly good, bearing 4¼ per cent, will to-day refund it for 3 or 3½ per cent? Of course, no individual would do it. Yet, because it is so easy to tax the American people, there are Representatives in Congress who are willing to make this gigantic reduction in settlement of the British debt. We have no right to do it. The war cost America nearly or quite as much as it cost Great Britain. We received no territory and no reparation, as Great Britain did, and there is not the shadow of an excuse that we can render the people of the United States in defense of our action if we settle this debt upon the terms set forth by the debt commission, which settlement means a less rate than we are paying and a cancellation of the principal.

EXCUSES.

"The British say that they used the money over here to buy American supplies at war prices. So they did; but our goods and supplies were more valuable to them than all the money in the world. They could not have prosecuted the war without our goods and supplies, and they could get them cheaper nowhere in the world. Besides, they charged us for supplies bought of them even more than they charged their own people, or tried to do so. The fact that they bought our goods, instead of being an excuse for reducing the debt, forms a higher reason why it should be collected as agreed upon.

"They next say that they were in the war before we were and lost vastly more men. The answer to this is, we did not owe Great Britain the slightest obligation to have entered the war before we did enter it, not the slightest. It was not our responsibility. We more than did our part and every Briton has admitted it—or at any rate until the debt payment question arose. We had nothing to do with bringing on the war and had no duty to prevent it in the same way that Great Britain had.

"It is next claimed that we should give Great Britain these vast sums of money because of our kinship. The reply to this is that Great Britain has never considered her kinship with us when it interfered with her interests. The question of kinship is all the more reason why the debt should be settled on fair terms, otherwise it will always be a bone of contention. The greatest acrimony in the world always arises when people who are kin have controversies, and especially when one side gets an advantage. Great Britain is the only nation that ever made war on us twice. This debt settlement is not a matter of kinship or sentiment but purely a matter of business. The question is, Should we allow Great Britain this great reduction in her debt, this cancellation of the tremendous principal of her debt, and make up the loss by putting additional tax burdens upon our own people, or shall we settle on the original terms which must be admitted to be the fairest, most generous, ever entered into between nations?

NO OCCASION FOR UNSEEMLY DISCUSSION.

"There is no necessity for crimination or recrimination in regard to these debts. Great Britain is a mighty nation. Her people are a great people; they are a debt-paying people. They are entirely a solvent people. She is not an international bankrupt. She will pay as she agreed to pay if the Congress so directs. She will not lay down upon her obligations. In the refunding transaction she has overreached our commission. She has obtained the recognition of terms from our commission that are not justified, that can not be defended, and in my judgment will never receive the approval of the American people. If we have a proper regard for our own heavily burdened taxpayers we will not ratify this proposed settlement but will settle under the original terms. Such a settlement would be absolutely fair to our own people and absolutely fair to Great Britain.

"The provision for permitting Great Britain to pay only 1½ per cent interest during the first five years is wrong. She is paying more interest than that now. The provision giving her the right to pay in Liberty bonds for par and interest is also to the disadvantage of the United States. She borrowed in dollars and should be required to pay back in dollars."

During the reading the following colloquy took place:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand that at 2 o'clock we go under the 10-minute rule. I want to make some observations in reply to the Senator from Tennessee, and I would like to inquire whether it is his object to consume all the time until 2 o'clock?

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked the Senator and the Senate to permit me to place this matter in the RECORD without reading, and the Senator from Mississippi objected, something rather unusual when a request of that sort is made. I do not desire to take up any more time than is necessary. I am trying to read as rapidly as possible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator did make a few remarks, and said he wanted to put something in the RECORD in corroboration of them. My utmost concept never led me to believe that he was going to put in the RECORD in corroboration of his own assertion something which he at some place had previously said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps the Senator did not hear me state that it is an article which was published in the New York Times a few days ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator did not say it was written by himself. It is rather unusual to have a man prove his own statement by something he himself previously said.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator misunderstands the situation. He either did not hear my request or he misunderstands it now. I am not trying to prove anything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You are reading your article, are you not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I desired to put in the RECORD my views on this subject, and that is what I propose to do, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senator be allowed to print the balance of it, if it is from his pen.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will not object, I will make the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then, let the Senator ask it.

Mr. McKELLAR. So that the Senator may have as much time as can be given him now, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the article, which is very brief, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that the article is one written by the Senator himself?

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then, under the rule of the Senate, the Chair understands it can not be printed without being read by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is the rule, Mr. President, and I am sorry to discommode the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the statement of the Chair?

Mr. McKELLAR. That it is not proper to put the article in the RECORD in that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not by unanimous consent?

Mr. McKELLAR. The rule prohibits it. I will just continue. I will try to hurry through so as to give the Senator the time he is seeking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will deprive me of the opportunity of replying to the Senator, of course, for it is now only 10 minutes of 2 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask unanimous consent that the Senator may have an opportunity. I continue reading.

The reading having been concluded, Mr. McKELLAR said:

I ask that the article I have read may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is one diversion of the American politician well known to the current history of the United States for the last 40 years which used to be very popular, but which, thank God, is ceasing to be quite so popular now as it formerly was. I refer to the attempt to cultivate the voters who happen to hate our British ancestors by "twisting the British lion's tail." That performance has been enacted upon this stage and upon the stage at the other end of this Capitol many times more ably than it was enacted a few minutes ago, and by many men much abler than the Senator who just enacted it.

We have just witnessed a rather curious performance. The Senator offered to put in the RECORD something to corroborate a statement which he had just made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will leave it to the stenographer's record. When I do hear, I hear.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not hear me, then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator made several statements, most of which were incorrect, some of which were correct, and then he offered to read an article in corroboration of what he had said. He failed to mention that the article was written by him. If he had mentioned that the article was written by him, the Chair would have ruled it out upon a point of order upon a request to insert it in the RECORD; but he failed to mention that fact. Why? Then I said that I would not consent to its insertion unless I knew something about it, that I would like to read it first, and the Senator wanted me to read it then, which, of course, was impossible. Then he undertakes to prove his own statements by his own previous statements. That may be debating; but if it is, it has never been honored much in the past history of debating, either in Great Britain or in this country or in any other free country.

Now, Mr. President, I have only 20 minutes, as I understand it, 10 upon the bill and 10 upon the amendment, and a minute or two of that time has already expired.

The Senator from Tennessee said in his broad way that "the war cost the United States almost as much as it did Great Britain." Why, it did not cost the United States as much as it cost Canada. It did not cost the United States as much as it cost Australia. It cost the United States only a little bit more than it cost New Zealand and South Africa, not in money alone but in men. We did not measure prices and expenses in money alone there. We left 50,000 upon the field of battle. Great Britain left something approaching 1,800,000, if I remember correctly. Little Canada alone left twice as many upon the field as we did, and Australia probably nearly twice as many.

Then the Senator wants us to regard this as a little retail mercantile operation—the whole cost measured in dollars or in pounds or in pounds measured back in dollars. Not one word is said by him about human life; not one word about human sympathy; not one word about saving civilization. He wants the United States to be regarded as a cool outsider who came to the aid of Great Britain, engaged in fighting against Germany and Turkey and Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary, as if we were cool outsiders, as if it were no matter of ours, no affairs of ours! He talks as if part of the money was lent by us before we became partners in the enterprise. We were not outsiders. We were partners in the enterprise and avowed our honor and our lives and our money to its success. Thank God, it can not be reduced to a little simple proposition of a retail dealer's offset with another retail dealer with whom he keeps mutual accounts.

A great deal of the money that Great Britain obtained from us, coming down to money merely, was money which she borrowed from us to lend to the other copartners in the common enterprise. She lent a great deal more than she borrowed. Why, it is like two men going out to fight a feud with other men in another family, and then one of them keeping account of each chew of tobacco on the route and insisting upon the other fellow paying it back with interest after the game of death is over.

Why, Mr. President, I should be ashamed of any people in the world who could regard a great enterprise like that—a great adventure, or "the great adventure," as Theodore Roosevelt called it—from a common ordinary standpoint of interest rates and nothing else. If we could do that with Great Britain, we could not do it with Belgium, whose people were slapped over like helpless children by superior strength and without any provocation of any description. We could not do it with Serbia, to whom an ultimatum was issued that amounted to a surrender of her sovereignty.

The best terms that we will ever get for the payment of a debt are the terms of the bill for the payment of Great Britain's debt. The Senator spent quite a time telling how much Great Britain owed us and how much we owed Great Britain, but not a word about France or Italy, and when the time comes to fix terms of settlement with France or Italy, he will be found doubtless in favor of more favorable terms to them than these terms are to Great Britain and less favorable to us. There will be no votes to be gained then. It will be said that France is our hereditary ally, our hereditary friend; she came to aid us in the Revolution—Rochambeau, Lafayette, and all that.

I am one of the few men on this floor who voted against the bill which the Senator spent so much unnecessary time in reading. I said then that if we were going to "negotiate" with people, we must "negotiate"; that if we are going to lay down an ultimatum, then we should lay down an ultimatum. The Congress laid down an ultimatum and then, in spite of that, the President of the United States, clothed with constitutional power, proceeded to "negotiate," hampered only by the one thing to which he was forced, to wit, that before he could get the results of his negotiations into accomplishment, he must consult Congress. He is now consulting Congress.

There were a few other little inaccuracies. The Senator said that we "are paying more in any one year" in the shape of interest or rate of interest than Great Britain is paying upon this common transaction. Later on, it is true, he said the statement was not exactly accurate. It is well that he made at least that reservation. It was not only not exactly accurate; it was not accurate at all. Under the terms of this settlement, if we make the settlement, we will get back every dollar of principal that Great Britain owes us and we will get more in interest than principal during the extension of time.

Mr. President, the Senator said that Great Britain borrowed this money "of her own accord." Belgium borrowed what she borrowed "of her own accord." France—brave, virile, generous France—borrowed what she borrowed "of her own accord." Oh, in a certain sense that is true, of course. They had to try to borrow it, but they borrowed it under a world necessity of maintaining civilization and democracy against barbarism and autocracy. We had the money, and we ought to thank God that we did have it so we could help the world, instead of stepping in like a cheese-paring retail merchant and saying, "While we were engaged upon a common enterprise which resulted in my saving my wife and children and you saving your wife and children from the Indians who were attacking us, I lent you a pound of tobacco, and it has been six months and I want interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum on it."

Mr. President, I thank God that in great national affairs that sort of a voice as a rule goes unheeded, as well as in great international affairs, great philanthropic affairs, great adventures, to carry through great enterprises in behalf of liberty and humanity and right, in behalf of peace and against the spread of war.

The two fallacies in the Senator's argument were these: The first was that "we were an impartial outsider, and Great Britain was in trouble, so we lent her money." We were in some degree of trouble ourselves and we were not impartial outsiders. We were partners in the enterprise. That is one of the fallacies in his argument. Thank God this question mounts to a height of argument far above that sort of thing.

The next fallacy in his argument is that somehow Great Britain is not paying us her debt. She is under this settlement paying every dollar of principal, and that will be more than half of our debtors will pay. She is paying us an amount of interest, an amount which, stretched through the time of payment, will amount to more than the principal itself. Moreover, she is not saying to us what practically France is saying to-day, because France is saying practically, "Unless we can collect from Germany we can not pay you; unless we shall collect from Germany we shall not pay you." The balance of the Allies and associates in the Great War owed Great Britain nearly twice as much as Great Britain owes us. Great Britain has never once said, "Unless we can collect from our debtors we can not pay you, or we will not pay you."

The Senator paid one tribute to Great Britain which came unconsciously from him, I suppose. He called them a debt-paying people. Thank God, our ancestors in Great Britain have always been a debt-paying people, and I hope that their descendants in America will always be a debt-paying people. I am pretty near a hard-shell Baptist about one thing. I think almost there is an eleventh commandant; in the words of St. Paul: "Owe no man anything."

Now, what is the object of this? It is true that the proposition comes from a Republican administration. It is true that I consider it an absolute miracle that a Republican administration can at any time do anything right, but sometimes it does. I am neither Pharisee nor Sadducee, and I am prepared to admit that "good can come out of Nazareth" at times. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, these great rich United States will pay their public debt off in about one-fourth the time that Great Britain will pay hers, one-half of the time anyhow, and if we pay off our debt our interest stops and we will make a clear profit in interest alone as against Great Britain when the final settlement day comes between Great Britain and us.

Then this debt-paying nation—Great Britain—furthermore has said, "We ask another privilege of you, that if at any time we can pay more than we think, you shall take it." I am astonished that somebody does not get up and say, "No; that would deprive us of some interest in the future."

Mr. President, I am going to take my seat now with this final remark: I hope that the time will never come when America can regard her allies and associates in a great war as merely men who were engaged in a mercantile operation with them. The Senator emphasized again and again and again that this was purely a mercantile operation, or, as he called it, a business proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely followed the example of President Harding, who used the expression in his message.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the President of the United States said that, he did a great deal to cancel the broadmindedness of his administration by the feebleness of his utterance. The Senator did not improve it by repeating it. Nobody ever improves a feeble utterance by repeating it, and no honest man who does not believe a thing ever repeats it. I took it for granted that when the Senator kept dwelling upon it as "a purely business proposition and nothing else" that he meant it, whether Harding had first said it, or whether he had first said it, and I would have thought from my knowledge of him that he would have granted less credence to the proposition because Harding first said it than he did if he himself had been the originator of it. "A purely business proposition!" France in the Ruhr; the German people sullen; Turkey on the alert on the outside; Bulgaria waiting for the proper moment to help Turkey against her fellow Christians; the United States certain to be drawn in again, if it should become a world war; for somebody would tread upon our neutral rights; the whole world in chaos; we alone rich and united; with European cabinet governments likely to be overthrown day after to-morrow by an adverse vote; yet, gentlemen who are elected to the Senate of the United States—who, of course, deserve their place in it—want us to consider past transactions with our copartners in the World War and the present state of the world as a pure "business affair," a pure matter of dollars and cents and pounds and shillings and pence!

Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] did not mean that. I have known him for a long time, and I know he could not have meant that. He was not thinking about the real meaning of his words when he uttered them. He would have been one of the last men in the world to have meant that.

Thank God, man has a dual nature. He is a trading animal, of course, in a certain sense, just as he is a hating animal and a loving animal in a certain sense, and yet there is a sense in which man was built in the image of God. He can go upon the wings of thought to the very footstool of God and scrutinize Deity itself. That part of him always responls to the more generous emotions and the more generous impulses of human nature and will never consent to be bound by mathematical calculations. I saw a thing in a book not long ago that struck me. The author said that he had no confidence in Ricardo's political-economic theories. The other asked, "Why?" "Why," he said, "Ricardo considers a man solely as an economic unit, and man is not an economic unit; he has traditions; he has ideals; he has loves; the most wicked of us have our adorations inside of ourselves somewhere; and I have never heard"—and this is the sentence to which I call attention—"that a man ever fell in love by mathematical calculation or ever died for a syllogism." And, like the author, I have never heard of it either. So far as I am individually concerned, I had rather fall in love, emotionally and accidentally; and when I come to die I had rather die for a sentiment or a love, and I am not going to die for a logical syllogism or for a mathematical calculation, especially not from the standpoint of the retail merchant, keeping a petty account with another peanut establishment and measuring interest not by mutual advantage in a common enterprise but by daily offsets of expense account.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to know whether or not there is an amendment pending.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a motion pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that—

> No Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, * * * nor more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment thereto.

When an amendment is pending, does it not follow under the agreement that speeches are limited to 10 minutes and that the only time a Senator may speak on the bill is when no amendment is pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Generally speaking, the Chair would rule that way, but when a Senator rises and says he wishes to speak on the bill the Chair has to assume that he is speaking on the bill; and the Senator would also have 10 minutes to speak on an amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in indorsement of what my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said a few moments ago in opposition to the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I can not see the good that is hoped to be accomplished by the adoption of the Senator's proposed amendment. Its adoption would mean the expenditure of $2,000,000 on plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals. It may be that the Ford offer will be accepted—and I very much hope that it will be—and if it shall be accepted the money which the Government would expend for putting plant No. 1 in order might not be expended as Mr. Ford desired. In other words, it may be that the $2,000,000 which the Government might expend in putting plant No. 1 in running order would result in the installation of machinery and processes wholly different from those which Mr. Ford would employ.

My recollection is that Mr. Mayo, Mr. Ford's engineer, testified before our committee in the hearings last year that they had a secret process, or thought they had, which they were not at this time willing to make public. They hoped, however, to make commercial fertilizer and make it so that it could be sold for half the price at which fertilizer is being sold to-day.

I am anxious to complete the work at Muscle Shoals; it is a crying shame that it has not been completed long ago; but, as my colleague has said, the whole thing has been abandoned; the Government had quit work; the work already done was being injured, and the money which we had already expended was about to be lost. We all know that nobody had made any bid on it and that the Government had quit work; but when the Government invited bids, Mr. Ford came and inspected Muscle Shoals and made his offer, which is by far the best offer that has been made, and I am whole-heartedly in favor of it. The more that offer is studied, Mr. President, the more men who will carefully examine it, the greater will be the number of Members of the Senate and of the House who will favor finally giving this project over to Mr. Ford. A speech was made recently in the House of Representatives by Representative MADDEN, of Chicago, Ill., strongly indorsing the Ford offer, and I suggest that anyone who wants to inform himself upon this subject, if he will study the speeches delivered by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], will acquire the information which he may desire. I believe that a majority of the people in the country who have informed themselves favor accepting the Ford offer.

Now, when the matter is held up as it is, with bills pending in the Senate and in the House for the acceptance of the Ford offer, it does seem to me that it would be a little bit out of place for the Government now to appropriate $2,000,000 to put plant No. 1 in running order, when, if the Government should see fit to accept the Ford offer, that whole amount may have been unwisely expended. It may be that it would not be the process that Mr. Ford wants, that he could not use it, and if so, it would be money wasted. On the other hand, if the Government does expend that $2,000,000 there, somebody will say then Ford ought to amend his proposal and offer more than he has already proposed to give the Government for this work. Then he might answer, and say, "I can not use the process you put in; I do not want it at all; it is not worth anything to me." That does not seem to me to be good business.

I believe that, as my colleague has suggested, this matter should be determined and that we ought to have a decision upon the question as to who is going to operate Muscle Shoals. If Mr. Ford is not going to get it, he is entitled to know just what the judgment of Congress is; and if he is going to get it, I submit that he ought to get it soon, because we can thereby save much to the American people. The farmers of America are certainly entitled to the consideration and the benefit that would come to them from the acceptance of the Ford offer.

The making in the United States of a nitrogen supply equal to that now which we bring from Chile, a foreign power, each year would result in great good; it would be something worth while to the whole country.

The thing to do now is to decide what we are going to do with Muscle Shoals. Let us decide whether or not we are going to accept the Ford offer. I would like to see it accepted to-day. I am opposed to complicating the matter by tying new propositions to the project. And I trust that the Senator's amendment will not now be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in offering this amendment I confess I was not thinking of Mr. Ford or any other bidder. He is not the only bidder; and, in my judgment, his bid is not as good as the bids of several others which have been made, although I am not in favor of accepting any of them. However, men disagree on those propositions. I was thinking of making available cheap fertilizer, but it seems I have conflicted with the wishes of Mr. Ford. I was thinking of giving to the farmer fertilizer below the present cost; I was thinking of making an investigation that would reduce the cost of fertilizer, and I did not think that I had first to consult Mr. Ford before offering the amendment.

The junior Senator from Alabama who has just spoken says that if we appropriate this money and change this plant, perhaps Mr. Ford would not like it. Well, I confess I had not thought about that, Mr. President. Perhaps he would not. I did say that if he were interested in getting cheap fertilizer for the farmer, he would have to experiment, as anybody would have to do in order to cheapen the process; and if he secured the contract and was in earnest when he was thinking about the dear farmer and providing cheap fertilizer for him he could profit by this improvement in the plant, and it would help him to cheapen the cost of fertilizer. If we wait until the dams are completed and then turn the project over to Ford and he decides to put in this improvement—and he will have to make this or some other improvement—it will then be a year or two before it will be ready, while, if Ford does not get it and somebody else gets it or the Government keeps it and we do not begin this improvement until the dams are finished, we have only delayed furnishing cheap fertilizer to the farmer that much longer. I did not know that we had to consult Mr. Ford when we were trying to get cheap fertilizer for the farmer, and so I have probably made a mistake.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. Does the Senator know of anything in the Ford offer which binds him to experiment in the matter of obtaining nitrogen?

Mr. NORRIS. No. I said that when I was speaking before. Of course he is not bound to experiment at all, but I assumed that he would, because his men say that he expects to cheapen the cost of fertilizer. If he does, he will have to experiment.

Mr. HARRELD. As a matter of fact, is he not guaranteed 8 per cent profit, whether he cheapens the cost of producing nitrogen or not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator surely does not mean that.

Mr. NORRIS. He is not guaranteed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, that is what the Senator from Oklahoma said—that he was guaranteed a profit.

Mr. NORRIS. No; he is not guaranteed.

Mr. HARRELD. He agrees to sell it for not exceeding 8 per cent profit.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he can find a market.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; he does not have to sell it for less than 8 per cent profit. That is true. He can sell it without any profit if he wants to, but it will not be Ford; it will be this corporation, I presume, that will sell it, and not sell it below 8 per cent profit. I think that is a fair construction of what the practical operation will be.

The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] says, likewise, that he thinks Ford has some secret process, some secret improvement that he knows now, by which he is going to make cheap fertilizer. Mr. President, that may be. I can not dispute that. If he has, if he gets this plant he will cheapen the product; but as a great, big American, as a great, big patriot, as Mr. Ford of course is, would it be fair even to him for us to say or to believe or to intimate that he has within his brain a secret process by which he can cheapen fertilizer to the American farmer, and that he has kept it a secret all these years, and is still keeping it a secret, while the poor farmer is toiling in the sun, trying to raise a crop, and paying an enormous price for fertilizer? If we will credit him with the ordinary amount of milk of human kindness that there is in the heart of any honest citizen, we certainly will not say that he has a secret process by which he can cheapen the cost of fertilizer and that he will not divulge it for the American farmer unless he is given Muscle Shoals, unless he is given a hundred-year lease, unless he is given $100,000,000 worth of property for $5,000,000, and unless he is given the money of the taxpayers at less than 3 per cent.

I think more of Mr. Ford than that. Certainly, Mr. President, we will not ascribe to Mr. Ford such unphilanthropic principles as those. We will not charge Mr. Ford with being so hard-hearted, with considering the poor farmer so little, that he will carry in his brain a secret process by which he can cheapen fertilizer to the farmer and not give the farmer the benefit of it unless we pay him a bonus from the Treasury of the taxpayers of the United States. As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] says, he is probably one of the wealthiest men of the world. If we are going to say——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we can not hear this drop-stitch conversation that is going on over there.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator can hear what I say, and I am the one who has the floor, and I am not responsible for anybody else.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if we want to cheapen fertilizer to the farmer we ought not to say, when the proposition comes up: "We do not know what Ford thinks about it. We must consult Henry Ford first. Maybe this legislation will not suit Henry Ford. Maybe he has a secret process in his mind, and if we will pay him several hundred million dollars out of the Treasury he will give that process to the American farmer and let him live." If that is how we must legislate, then it is time we turned the Senate over to Mr. Ford's men and Mr. Gray Silver.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's amendment, it appropriates $2,000,000, not to be available until July 1. If Congress, before the end of this session, should accept the Ford proposition, then the Government would not have to spend that money.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it would not, and that reminds me of another point, Mr. President. This money will not be available before the 1st of July, and between now and the 1st of July we can find out what Henry Ford thinks about it, and if he does not like it we can repeal it. There is plenty of time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. An extra session can be called.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; of course an extra session can be called if he wants it.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, my political fortunes are not tied up in this proposition. I have not any interest in it. Although I may be foolish, I have been moved only by what to me seems to be the duty to do something to help out the American farmer.

I do not seem to have pleased the Ford men any better than I have pleased the administration. I conceded to begin with that I could not secure the passage of this amendment, because under the rules it takes a two-thirds vote to suspend the rule, if the Ford people are opposed to it. It is quite evident that the Ford people are opposed to it. They are going to vote against it. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in longer debate or useless voting; and since the Ford people do not want it, and I can not pass it without their assistance, I will just have to let the American farmer go on the fertilizer question; and I therefore withdraw the motion that I have made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I gave notice a few days ago that I should propose a suspension of the rules for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"That in conformity with the act entitled 'An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands,' approved August 29, 1916, the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to provide for a general election of delegates to a constitutional convention which shall prepare and formulate a constitution for an independent republican government for the Philippine Islands, and that upon the ratification and promulgation of said constitution and the election of the officers therein provided for and upon satisfactory proof that the government provided for under said constitution is organized and ready to function, the President of the United States shall recognize and proclaim the independence of the Philippine government under said constitution and shall notify the governments with which the United States is in diplomatic correspondence thereof, and shall invite said governments to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands; and that the President is directed to withdraw the military forces of the United States from said islands within six months after said proclamation recognizing the independence of said Philippine government."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent rule I will have but a short time to discuss this amendment, so can not hope to cover the vital points involved. First let me call the attention of the Senate to the following resolution adopted by the Philippine Legislature:

SIXTH PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE, FIRST SESSION.

Begun and held at the city of Manila on Monday, the 16th day of October, 1922.

Concurrent Resolution 5, asking the Congress of the United States for authority to call and hold a constitutional convention for the Philippine Islands.

Whereas it is a principle recognized in all democracies, and especially in the political organization of the United States, that a people must be governed by its own constitution, as the legitimate and efficient form of government of the people, by the people, and for the people;

Whereas the situation of the Philippine Islands is and always will be a substantially anomalous one so long as we are not governed by a constitution approved by our representatives, our present liberties, guaranties, and institutions being but concessions of the Congress of the United States;

Whereas the Filipino people have from the beginning on opposed this anomaly and have expressed their desire to enjoy the benefits of immediate and complete independence;

Whereas the people and the Government of the United States have solemnly promised to grant such independence as soon as a stable government can be established in the Philippine Islands;

Whereas such stable government does now exist and operate in said islands, with the necessary guaranties for permanent success and security;

Whereas it is essential, in order that the bonds of friendship between the people of the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands may be strengthened and the best interests of both peoples promoted and assured, that the demand of the Filipino people be complied with and the solemn pledge of the American people redeemed in a speedy and satisfactory manner; and

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that the discussion and approval, by the legitimate representatives of the people, of a political constitution for the Philippine Islands is an orderly and expeditious procedure for the immediate realization of our independence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives of the Philippines concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby is, requested to authorize the Philippine Legislature to provide for a general election, to be held for the purpose of selecting delegates for a constitutional convention, which shall prepare, discuss, and approve a political constitution for the independent Philippine Republic, determine, with the Government of the United States, what kind of relations, if any, shall in future be maintained between said Government of the United States and the Government of the Philippine Islands, and, finally, provide for the election by the people of the Philippine Islands of the officials who shall have authority and perform duties under the constitution so approved, and to whom the present government of the Philippine Islands shall be transferred as soon as they shall legally assume office.

The presiding officers of both houses of the legislature are hereby authorized to communicate the text of this resolution to our Resident Commissioners, for presentation to the Congress of the United States.

Adopted, November 29, 1922.

[SEAL.]

MANUEL L. QUEZON,
President of the Senate.
MANUEL ROXAS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This resolution, which originated in the Philippine Senate, was finally adopted by the same on November 29, 1922.

[SEAL.]

FERNANDO MA. GUERRERO,
Secretary of the Senate.

Finally adopted by the house of representatives on November 21, 1922.

[SEAL.]

NARCISO PIMENTEL,
Acting Secretary of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, this resolution should go to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, and I ask such reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that in the closing hours of this session I can not hope to have the resolution which I have offered considered either by a committee of the Senate or by the Senate itself; but I have felt constrained to challenge attention to the Philippine question and to what I conceive to be the duty of the United States regarding such question. The Philippine Islands are far distant from our shores and the wishes of the millions of people inhabiting them seem to be of but little concern to the American people or to this Congress. It is true that declarations have been made by organizations and political parties within this Republic, in which freedom is promised to the Filipinos; and solemn promises have been made that the United States will withdraw its authority and leave the government of the Philippine Archipelago to the inhabitants thereof. But apparently these promises are forgotten and the years go by without bringing to the Philippine people the realization of their desires and aspirations. In view of the solemn pledges made by the Congress of the United States, to withdraw the sovereignty of this Republic from the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence, I have been surprised and grieved at the indifference to such promises and the general apathy existing throughout the country with respect to the rights of the Filipinos. Senators are familiar with the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, commonly known as the Jones Act, in which the following legislative declaration appears:

> Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the war with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and
>
> Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and
>
> Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence: Therefore
>
> Be it enacted, etc.—

The Jones Act, as Senators will recall, gave to the Filipinos a larger measure of local self-government than that which they had theretofore enjoyed under the American occupation. While it did not give to the Filipinos the full measure of liberty which they desired, nevertheless it was a progressive step and afforded them wider opportunities for political and economic development. When the Jones Act was under discussion there were many people in the United States who believed that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands were entitled to complete independence, and contended that the United States should withdraw from the islands and surrender the control of the same to the people and to the government erected by them. This view, however, did not prevail, although the thought was expressed by many who did not support the immediate independence of the Filipinos, that within a few years they would have so demonstrated their capacity to maintain order and observe international obligations as to not only justify but require that the United States wholly withdraw from the islands. It seems to me that the time has now come when our Government should redeem its promises and enact such legislation as will enable the Filipinos to call a constitutional convention and formulate such organic law as to them may seem proper.

The Filipinos are a unit in demanding independence. They have patiently and patriotically conducted themselves during the years in which the United States has governed them. They have welcomed all suggestions made looking to their progress and development. They have eagerly assimilated whatever of good our Government brought to them. They have studied our Constitution as well as our institutions. They have sought to learn the art of self-government, appreciating that—

> Self-government is not a mere form of institutions to be had when desired * * * it is a form of character.

But during all these years they have maintained their ideals and their national aspirations. While recognizing the fine service of this Republic and the sacrifices made by it in their behalf, they have never lost sight of what they believed to be their destiny and the independent station which they felt they were entitled to enjoy among the free peoples of the earth.

Conceding the advantages derived from the administrative efforts of this Republic, they still desire their own freedom and the right to order their own lives and to determine the form of government under which they shall live. Their attitude is one to be commended not condemned. Their desires for a republic of their own choosing should find a hearty response and most cordial support in this Republic which is a child of revolution and has grown to preeminence and power under the laws and institutions which a free people enacted and established.

The desire for freedom can not be successfully countered by pointing to the benefits derived from alien control. Material or moral benefits, rich and important though they be, never compensate a courageous, virile, and self-reliant people for a denial of liberty or even a slight deprivation of the right to govern themselves.

The authority of the British crown was tenuous indeed, in 1776, and there were no chains of bondage and no servitude in the thirteen Colonies. The people in the New England colonies as well as in all of the thirteen Colonies, were practically self-governing and enjoyed a high degree of liberty; but they were not completely free; therefore, they severed the cord, slender though it was, which bound them to the British Empire.

And so the Philippine people, though they acknowledge the beneficent work of this Republic in their behalf, have looked forward with the keenest delight to that day when the flag of this Republic would be lowered from the forts and buildings within their homeland and the flag of a free and independent Philippine republic raised as the symbol of authority and sovereignty over their country. Mr. President, no government which we can give them will prove entirely satisfactory to them. We do not regard the Philippine Islands as a part of the territory of the United States. By legislative enactment and by decrees of our judicial tribunals we have said that the Philippine Archipelago is not a part of the United States, nor may the Filipinos enjoy the privileges and immunities possessed by citizens of the United States. We have in effect declared that the Philippine Islands may not be admitted to the Union as one or more States but are to be treated as a colonial possession, subject to such laws and authority as the Congress of the United States may provide. This attitude condemns the Philippine Islands to a status different from that enjoyed by other territory over which our flag floats and which is subject to the control of the Federal Congress. In other words, we have differentiated the Filipinos and their home land from territory which has been acquired by the United States and out of which sovereign States have been carved. It is manifest that such an anomalous situation would intensify the desires of the Filipinos for independence and a severance of the bonds which now bind them to the United States.

Mr. President, we assumed jurisdiction over the Philippine Islands and their inhabitants without the consent of the latter. Our flag was not welcomed by them; they had won their independence from the Spanish Crown and set up a republican form of government under a constitution which contained many liberal and progressive features. They exhibited remarkable patriotism and great ability, and there were manifold evidences that they were competent to govern themselves and to establish domestic tranquillity and discharge such international obligations as are required of an enlightened nation.

It is not my purpose to review the causes leading to the occupation of the Philippine Islands by American troops and the overthrow of the Philippine republic and the assertion of control and authority over the islands and their inhabitants; but I wish to briefly call attention to the fact that the act of this Government in the matter referred to was war, and it resulted in bringing under the authority of the United States millions of people against their will and without their consent.

There were many in the United States who insisted, at the time of American occupation of the Philippine Islands, that they be annexed to the United States forcibly or otherwise, and forever remain a part of the territory of our Nation. Others took the view that our occupation should be indefinite and that when we believed the Filipinos had demonstrated their competency to maintain a stable government we should withdraw from the islands. Still others insisted that our course was imperialistic and could not be defended in morals or upon any principles which had guided the life of this Republic. Without pausing to discuss these views—and time would not permit if I so desired—it is sufficient to say that the Filipinos were led to believe that their islands would not be annexed by the United States, and that in time we would withdraw from the islands and surrender all authority and control to a government to be established by the Filipinos.

President McKinley, soon after the commencement of the Spanish-American War, declared that "forcible annexation can not be thought of—that, according to the code of American morals, is criminal aggression."

Mr. President, I have taken perhaps more than 10 minutes, and I shall now speak on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did not give that notice when he began his remarks.

Mr. KING. I have not offered it as yet as an amendment to the pending bill. I merely directed attention to the fact that I had given this notice. I have not moved for its consideration. I now offer the motion which has been read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I now claim the right to address myself to the motion for 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. McKinley at a later date declared that—

The Philippines are ours, not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, and to train in the science of self-government.

Mr. Taft, when Secretary of War, speaking of the Filipinos, said:

When they have learned the principles of popular self-government from a gradually enlarged experience therein, we can discuss the question whether independence is what they desire, and grant it, or whether they prefer the retention of a closer association with the country which, by its guidance, has unselfishly led them on to better conditions.

In 1907 Mr. Taft, in opening the Philippine Assembly, declared that the policy of the United States looked to the improvement of the people industrially and in a self-governing capacity, and he further stated:

As this policy of extending control continues it must logically reduce, and finally end, the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, unless it shall seem wise to the American and the Filipino peoples, on account of mutually beneficial trade relations and possible advantage to the islands in their foreign relations, that the bond shall not be completely severed.

In 1908 Mr. Taft, speaking to the General Assembly of the Philippine Islands, referred to the ultimate independence of the islands.

There are many statements made by officials of the United States authorized to speak, made following the occupation of the islands by the United States, which support the contention I am making, that the Filipinos were led to believe that it was not the purpose of the United States to annex their territory or to keep them indefinitely under the dominion of this Republic. The concurrent resolution adopted by the Philippine Legislative Assembly, and which has just been read, is a pertinent and proper reminder of the promise which we have made and the duty resting upon the United States. This legislative declaration is an assertion of the competency of the Philippine people to govern themselves and a solemn statement that they have a stable government established and functioning. It is a respectful demand that we redeem our promises. We declared, as stated in the Jones Act, that the United States would "withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein."

Does anyone doubt that a stable government has been established? One need only ascertain conditions in the Philippine Islands and compare them with many governments of Europe, as well as other nations of the world, with which we have diplomatic relations, to be convinced that a stable government is established therein. A stable government does not necessarily mean a government which may not change or may not suffer from internal convulsions. But industrial and political conditions in the Philippine Islands furnish satisfactory evidence to the students of government that the Filipinos have made remarkable progress along economic and political lines and have shown character and capacity and those fine qualities which exist in a greater or less degree among a free people and those who seek an orderly and progressive government.

Mr. President, the declarations made by Mr. McKinley and Mr. Taft, as well as those made by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wilson, have been regarded by the Filipinos as pledges that the United States would withdraw their sovereignty from the Philippine Islands and recognize their independence. I remarked that the progress made by the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands has been phenomenal. I submit that the evidence is clear that the time has arrived when the Filipinos have the right to demand that we comply with the solemn covenant contained in the act of Congress of August 29, 1916.

Permit me to briefly call attention to some of the conceded facts with respect to conditions now prevailing in the Philippine Islands. The population is probably 12,000,000. It was more than 10,000,000 in 1918. More than nine-tenths of the inhabitants of the islands are Christians belonging principally to the Roman Catholic Church. May I say in passing that undoubtedly the influence of the religious faith of the people has contributed to the progress made by the people and is, in part, responsible for the orderly conditions there existing.

There are perhaps 500,000 Mohammedans within the islands and several hundred thousand who are denominated pagans. The European and American population is limited. There are some in our country who have affected to believe that Japan was seeking to colonize the Philippine Islands with a view to ultimate annexation of the islands. The fact is that but few Japanese reside in the Philippine Islands. In 1918 the number was less than 8,000. Japan has evinced no purpose whatever to interfere with the Philippine Islands and in all of her dealings with the islands and with the Filipinos the conduct of Japan has been that of a friendly and honorable nation. The jingoists are responsible largely for the untruthful and fantastic stories which in the past were so persistently circulated, either for the purpose of prejudicing the American people against Japan or to strengthen the imperialistic view entertained by some of our citizens and thus compel the United States to retain control over the Filipinos.

The entire European and American population in 1918 did not exceed 11,000. It will thus be perceived that the Philippine Islands are inhabited by Filipinos. For 20 years they have been in contact with the spirit of our Constitution and have developed a respect for the principles of free government. They are familiar with the Bill of Rights and with the constitutional guarantees enjoyed by the citizens of this Republic. They are acquainted with the tripartite division of powers and understand the functions of the judiciary and the duties of the Executive and the authority and responsibilities of the legislative branch of government. They have courts presided over by able jurists in which controversies arising among the people are determined in an orderly and judicial manner. Their lawyers are men of character and ability, and it is declared by those familiar with the workings of the courts that they compare favorably in their knowledge of the law and in the administration of justice, with courts in some of the States of the Union. The records show that the courts are resorted to by the people to settle disputes, and that there is respect for the courts and for their decrees.

The legislative branch of the government consists of two houses, and the laws enacted demonstrate that men of ability and possessing a knowledge of progressive legislation have places within the legislature. The fiscal affairs of the islands are sound, and the officials exhibit a devotion to their work and an appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon them which argues well for the efficiency of the administration and the stability of any government which they may establish. Great progress has been made in education. Both young and old have exhibited an enthusiasm for knowledge that has been most remarkable. There are to-day enrolled in the public schools more than 950,000 pupils. There are more than 5,000 schoolhouses, and facilities for education have been taken to the remotest parts of the archipelago. The thirst for knowledge exhibited by the people is good augury for the progress of the people.

There is a university in Manila attended by hundreds of students, and the courses of study there prescribed would be creditable to some of the most advanced universities to be found in the United States. I am told that in the law department of this university seven years of study are required. Throughout the islands there are hospitals, dispensaries, and institutions that care for the sick, afflicted, and indigent; indeed, the essential concomitants of a highly civilized state are found among the Filipinos. There are thousands of men and women of the highest culture and refinement and of broad and comprehensive knowledge.

Hundreds of miles of roads have been constructed, so that the people are brought into closer relations. The internal commerce has greatly expanded and the domestic products have reached a very large volume. I have not seen recent figures as to the foreign commerce, but my recollection is that the figures which I last saw showed a foreign commerce exceeding 600,000,000 pesos.

One of the remarkable features of the islands is the almost universal ownership of land by the people. There are nearly 2,000,000 farms in the islands, showing that a very large proportion of the male population are agriculturalists and own their own farms. This situation makes for stability and character and insures industrial and material progress. Practically all of the land of the islands is owned by the Filipinos, and, as I have indicated, the agricultural products are varied and abundant.

While there is no great individual wealth there is but little poverty. The products of the islands, as stated, are varied, and there is every indication that the exports will increase and that the foreign commerce will expand.

Mr. President, a people, homogeneous as the Filipinos are; living in territory that yields abundantly in fruits and agricultural products; free from debts and oppressive taxation; not menaced by foes from without or dangers from within; and possessing characteristics and ideals and aspirations such as are exhibited among the Filipinos and with a record of achievement along moral, religious, and material lines—demonstrate their fitness for self-government and furnish convincing proof of their future advancement. I submit, Mr. President, that in view of these conditions it is the duty of the United States to give the Filipinos the opportunity to frame their organic law, establish a republic—that being the form of government they desire—and, having so done, to withdraw from the islands and bid the people and their new government Godspeed along the pathway of independence.

May I inquire what reasons exist for our retaining jurisdiction over the islands? The costs to date of this experiment, in what some denominate imperialism and others colonialism, has been stupendous. In 1902 Senator Hoar declared that it had cost our Government $1,000,000,000. I am advised by the Bureau of Insular Affairs that, according to the figures in that office, the United States has expended nearly $700,000,000 in connection with the Philippine Islands. The bill before us carries large sums to be expended in the Philippine Islands during the next fiscal year; and, of course, if we retain possession there will be millions annually required which must be met by taxing the American people.

Mr. President, if we are sincere, if we believe in the right of self-determination, if we still follow the precepts of the Declaration of Independence, then the conclusion is inevitable that the Philippine Islands belong to the Filipinos and not to the United States. They have the right to govern themselves in their own way and establish such forms of government as to them may seem just and proper. We can by pursuing the course which I have indicated in my resolution earn the eternal gratitude of the Filipinos. They will be willing to enter into any treaty that will be fair and just and protect whatever interests we may feel our Government or American citizens may have in the Philippine Archipelago. We can bind the Philippine people to this Republic with bands of steel by a generous and just course. This great Republic will have forever the love and the unalloyed affection of the people of these 5,000 islands, more than 7,000 miles distant from our shores. They will pattern their government after the Government of this Republic. They will seek the spirit of liberty which has animated the American people and will have pride and joy in following the footsteps of a Nation that is the greatest force for freedom and justice and righteousness in all the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the Senator from Utah to suspend the rules. (Putting the question.) The motion is rejected, there not being two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I indicated the other day that I should move to strike out the appropriation of $56,000,000 plus, under the rivers and harbors item, for the reason that the House had included in the Army bill an appropriation which dealt with rivers and harbors, and I felt that an opportunity should be given the Senate to determine whether they would consider these two bills together, or whether they would insist upon a policy which would call for a segregation of these two important subjects. But the vote yesterday conclusively demonstrated that no attack could be successfully made upon this huge appropriation. The recommendations of the Budget Bureau have been disregarded, the condition of the Treasury ignored, millions of dollars have been demanded for creeks and streams, where there is no commerce—and there is no power to prevent the demands from being satisfied. I shall therefore not press the motion which I gave notice I would offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I sent to the desk yesterday a notice that I would move a suspension of the rule, which I ask may be read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Utah gives notice of an amendment to insert the following at the proper place in the bill:

That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations, to appoint representatives to a conference to be held in the city of Washington, which shall be charged with the consideration of the causes and purposes of present military and naval expenditures, and the formulation of measures for the reduction of land and naval armaments, for the improvement of industry and commerce, the assurance of public order, and the promotion of peace throughout the world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move to suspend the rule?

Mr. KING. For the purpose of submitting a word or two, I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has already spoken on the bill.

Mr. KING. Then I move to suspend the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had intended to address myself to the motion. Yesterday the time of the Senate was so occupied in the discussion of the rivers and harbors provisions of the bill that I had no opportunity to present my motion, and this morning Senators have consumed the time allotted to general debate in considering Muscle Shoals and the debt-funding plan. I had thought I could have a part of the time before 2 o'clock, when the limit on debate was set. I regret that there is no opportunity to consider the resolution without suspending the rule. I shall seek an opportunity to offer it when it will not be subject to a point of order and can be fully discussed.

The observations just made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] indicate the necessity of the United States taking a course such as is contemplated by the amendment which I had intended to propose. At an early date I hope to have the opportunity to present it to the Senate in the form of a resolution and to obtain a vote upon it. I shall not press the motion at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. KING. I withdraw it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint any commissioned officer of the Army not above the grade of brigadier general, who served in the Army of the United States during the World War, whose service since that war has been creditable, and who has been or may hereafter be retired according to law, to an advanced grade on the retired list at the highest grade held by him during the World War: Provided, That no officer shall be thus promoted who was demoted prior to November 11, 1918, for professional unfitness: Provided further, That any officer so advanced on the retired list shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of his grade at date of such advancement and that no increase of pay and allowances shall result from the provisions of this act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the amendment is intended to give to officers of the Army of the United States who served with credit and many of them with distinction in the late war the reward for those services of being allowed to retain the title of the highest rank in which they served during the war. It does not involve the expenditure of a dollar of money. It does not increase in any way their retired pay. It would have the effect of saving those officers from the humiliation which many of them have suffered in place of the reward and distinction from a country that ought to be grateful for their services. This humiliation comes from being demoted in status for the remainder of their lives while on the retired list, many of them being old men, and in not being allowed to wear on occasions of ceremony the uniform or to write upon their cards the name of the rank under which they rendered these responsible services to the Nation.

I have in mind one case of an engineer officer who retired as a colonel. He had a long and distinguished career in the service of his country after he graduated from West Point. He served in France and there, through his efficiency, he became the chief engineer of the American Expeditionary Forces, the head of the great Engineer Corps which we sent to France. Yet, when he returned to the United States he was demoted to the rank of colonel, and is not allowed under existing law to assume on any occasion the rank under which he rendered those valuable and distinguished services in France.

I have a letter from the Secretary of War recommending the adoption of the amendment, which I ask leave to have printed at the close of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just for the information of the Senate, I wish to call particular attention to one paragraph in which the Secretary of War stated:

The amendment proposed by Senator POINDEXTER carries with it no expense to the Government. The increased rank it proposes to confer carries with it no additional pay; it offers only an honorary peacetime title to those who have held the actual title and met the obligations which went with the actual rank, but who, because of retirement, are prevented from reaching such rank the second time. In spite of the fact that the officers concerned would receive no material benefit from this legislation, I think its passage would be a source of much gratification to them and would be recognized by the service generally as a gracious act of recognition of war service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would happen in a case like this. Suppose one of these officers so demoted were called into active service, what rank would he then have?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He would have his actual rank and not the brevet or complimentary rank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think so. I do not see on what theory that would be so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly that would be the case, because there is a provision expressly prohibiting giving him any command except under the rank under which he originally retired. It prohibits paying him any salary emoluments except those of that rank. If that does not accomplish the purpose, the amendment could be further amended in order to accomplish it. The Secretary of War stated in his letter that that is the effect of it. In fact, the amendment was prepared at the War Department in order to avoid any such effect as that which is suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me he is either one or the other, and if he should be called into active service at his actual rank it ought to be so stated. Otherwise he would be called in at his so-called brevet rank and he would have the pay in that case, of course, of the higher rank.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It reads:

These privileges shall not entitle any officer to command, pay, or emoluments.

Under the provision it would be impossible to call him into active service at the advanced rank. The provision is contained in the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What authority would there be to call him into service with either rank?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There would undoubtedly be the authority of the Commander in Chief of the Army under the general law authorizing the detailing of retired officers to active service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but the War Department has no authority to call a man in, after demoting him, and give him active pay.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would not be demoting him, because it is expressly provided, should the amendment go into effect, that it carries no command and no pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It carries no command, but the Secretary of War under certain circumstances has the power to take a man on the retired list and put him on active duty and give him active pay. I ask the Senator what rate of pay he would have? Would it be the pay of his retired rank or would the Secretary of War demote him and give him the lower rate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He would have the pay provided by law, and that is the pay of his actual rank. It is expressly provided in the amendment that he can not get any other pay. I fail to see how the question the Senator from Nebraska raises could be considered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The amendment provides for his pay while he is retired, but the law provides that when he is on active duty he shall have the pay of his actual rank.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator does not state the amendment exactly. It does not say while he is retired, but it is universal in effect. It says:

These privileges shall not entitle any officer to command pay or emoluments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator where that language appears in the amendment he has offered? I can not find it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg the pardon of the Senator. I was reading the law that is already applicable to the officers of the Civil War. I had several typewritten sheets before me and apparently picked up the wrong one. In effect the language of the amendment which I have proposed is the same—

That any officer so advanced on the retired list shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of his grade at date of such advancement, and that no increase of pay and allowances shall result from the provisions of this act.

It is the same in effect, although not exactly, as the language which I was reading, and which I read from a typewritten sheet which I picked up by mistake, and which is the present law relating to officers who served in the Civil War.

In that connection I call attention to the provisions of the Revised Statutes of 1866, enacted immediately after the close of the Civil War. The following provision was then enacted:

All officers who served during the Rebellion as volunteers in the Army of the United States, and have been honorably mustered out of the volunteer service, shall be entitled to bear the official title, and, upon occasions of ceremony, to wear the uniform of the highest grade they have held, by brevet or other commissions, in the volunteer service. The highest volunteer rank which has been held by officers of the Regular Army shall be entered, with their names, respectively, upon the Army Register. But these privileges shall not entitle any officer to command, pay, or emoluments.

That was enacted in 1866.

Mr. WARREN. That had reference entirely to volunteer officers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That applied to volunteers.

Mr. WARREN. Those officers were receiving no pay after they were mustered out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. WARREN. They had no retired pay.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But in 1897 the following provision was passed, which Senators will find at page 546 of the second supplement of the Revised Statutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to speak 10 minutes upon the bill.

The provision of 1897, to which I had just referred, reads as follows:

All officers who have served during the War of the Rebellion as officers of the Regular Army of the United States, and have been regularly discharged or resigned from the service, shall be entitled to bear the official title and, upon occasions of ceremony, to wear the uniform of the highest grade they have held, by (2) brevet or other commission, as is now authorized for officers of volunteers by section 1226, Revised Statutes (February 4, 1897).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state how many officers the amendment would affect?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that I can do so, unless the information may be contained in the document which I have here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would, in effect, be the promotion by wholesale of thousands of retired officers, would it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There would not be any such number, and it is not a promotion at all, in so far as command or pay are concerned. It is a mere honorary rank which would be held by such officers if the amendment should be adopted. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] called attention to the fact that the act of 1866 applied to volunteers. I have read the statute which was passed in 1897 which gives to officers of the Regular Army the same identical privileges as to title and wearing the uniform of the highest rank which they held by brevet or other commission during the Civil War as were accorded to the Volunteer officers in the act which was passed in 1866. The amendment which I propose and which is recommended by the Secretary of War and is greatly desired by officers who are affected by it would give to the officers in the last Great War the same compliment and privileges that are enjoyed by the officers who served in the Civil War.

APPENDIX.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 6, 1923.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

SIR: With reference to your letter of February 3, 1923, requesting a report on an amendment to H. R. 13793 introduced by Senator POINDEXTER, I invite your attention to the fact that in my report of November 4, 1922, on S. 3669 (copy inclosed) the War Department gave favorable indorsement to the provisions contained in the amendment proposed by Senator POINDEXTER. Since the date of that report, however, several matters in connection with this legislation have been brought to my attention which I think should be incorporated in the amendment. The reasons for the proposed changes are given below, and the amendment as it would read with these changes incorporated is given as the concluding paragraph of this letter.

The reasons for the changes recommended are as follows:

It is desirable that provision be made for brigadier generals who held the rank of major general during the World War to cover the case of those who may retire without having reached the highest rank held by them during the World War. It is not necessary to extend the provisions of the bill to major generals, as there are now several bills before the Congress which provide World War rank for officers of that grade.

A few officers were demoted prior to November 11, 1918, for causes not involving professional unfitness, and the change recommended would prevent an injustice being done them. During the World War some retired officers who had received promotion after going on the retired list received further temporary promotion. By the terms of the amendment as introduced such officers, if advanced to the highest grade held by them during the World War, would receive the pay of the grade held by them when retired instead of the pay of the grade to which they were promoted while on the retired list.

The amendment proposed by Senator Poindexter carries with it no expense to the Government. The increased rank it proposes to confer carries with it no additional pay; it offers only an honorary peace-time title to those who have held the actual title and met the obligations which went with the actual rank, but who, because of retirement, are prevented from reaching such rank a second time. In spite of the fact that the officers concerned would receive no material benefit from this legislation, I think its passage would be a source of much gratification to them and would be recognized by the service generally as a gracious act of recognition of war service.

The amendment with the changes above referred to incorporated is given below. In this form it has the full approval of the War Department.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint any commissioned officer of the Army, not above the grade of brigadier general, who served in the Army of the United States during the World War, whose service since that war has been creditable, and who has been or may hereafter be retired according to law, to an advanced grade on the retired list at the highest grade held by him during the World War: Provided, That no officer shall be thus promoted who was demoted prior to November 11, 1918, for professional unfitness: And provided further, That any officer so advanced on the retired list shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of his grade at date of such advancement, and that no increase of pay and allowances shall result from the provisions of this act.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

—

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have been unavoidably delayed until now in the preparation of the report on S. 3669, to which I referred in my letter to you of August 7, 1922.

I have given careful consideration to the general question of rewards to officers for war-time service and have arrived at the conclusion, after going over the various bills concerning this question that have been introduced from time to time, that this matter can not be equitably nor satisfactorily disposed of unless consideration is given to the claims of all officers of whatever rank who had World War service. For this purpose I think it is both necessary and convenient to divide these officers into two general classes—those who now hold the rank of general officer and those not above the rank of colonel. S. 3669, with the amendments suggested below, offers, in my opinion, a suitable reward for the last-named class.

In arriving at a standard which may be used in determining whether or not an officer is entitled to the reward under consideration, I have become convinced that the satisfactory and equitable criterion is to be found in the character of service rendered during the war, and that length of service and the possession of a decoration should not be considered as determining factors. The great majority of the officers who took part in the war did not have long service, but the services rendered by them were meritorious—in many cases highly so. If the chance to secure decorations came equally to all members of the service their possession could be taken as indicative of meritorious service to the exclusion of other considerations, but as a matter of fact the opportunity to gain them comes to but few, and failure to receive them does not indicate lack of merit.

The various bills referring to this subject which have been introduced have for their object the promotion with or without pay of the officers to whom they relate to the rank held by them during the World War. During that war every worthy officer of the Regular Army, except a very few in the higher grades, received promotion. The deserving ones retained their advanced rank or received further promotion, and the undeserving were demoted. Those holding advanced grades when the war ended had demonstrated their fitness for increased rank by the satisfactory performance of their war-time duties. It seems to me that we have in this fact the standard we are seeking.

If we are now, in time of peace, to confer war-time rank on retired officers not above the rank of colonel, it seems to me that we should not exclude any of those who held advanced rank at the time of the armistice. By doing so we would make a distinction in time of peace which was neither necessary nor practicable in time of war, and would thus place a higher valuation on peace-time rank without command than on war-time rank with command.

While the bill, on account of the omission of pay, does not offer as satisfactory a solution of the matter as I would wish, I believe the solution offered is the only one practicable at this time, and I think its enactment would be gratifying to members of the service and would probably put a stop to the flow of bills on this subject.

S. 3669, amended so that it would receive the approval of the War Department, would read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint any commissioned officer of the Army not above the grade of colonel, who served in the Army of the United States during the World War, whose service has been creditable, and who has been or may hereafter be retired according to law, to an advanced grade on the retired list at the highest grade held by him during the World War: Provided, That no officer shall be thus promoted who was demoted prior to November 11, 1918, for causes other than physical: And provided further, That any officer so advanced on the retired list shall have pay and allowances of his grade at date of retirement, and that no increase of pay and allowance shall result from the provisions of this act."

Respectfully,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington brings up a very important and very complicated matter. Thus far Congress has not found a way which is satisfactory to its own ideas of giving suitable recognition to officers who distinguished themselves or who served with credit during the war with Germany. There are three or four bills relative to the subject which are pending in the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, one of them introduced by myself, and even that is but tentative in its provisions. The fact of the matter is the Senate Military Affairs Committee is groping toward the objective sought in part by the Senator from Washington. The Military Affairs Committee is not yet satisfied just what is the right thing to do. It is at work on the subject, and I am informed that the House Military Affairs Committee is also studying the problem.

The truth is we have given no recognition to any Army officer as the result of his service in the World War with the single exception of General Pershing. No other officer, no matter how distinguished his service was—and some of them commanded 500,000 men—has received any recognition.

However, as this is legislation which is offered to an appropriation bill and touches on a topic which at least two standing committees of Congress are now studying with all earnestness, I feel impelled to raise the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire at this time to call up the motion which I made on yesterday to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out, on page 3, line 1, of the bills, the numerals "$840" and to insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$1,140."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the rules be suspended in order that he may offer an amendment to the pending bill, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$840" and in lieu thereof to insert "$1,140"; so as to make the clause read:

Thirteen telephone switchboard operators at $1,140 each.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to suspend the rules.

The motion was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on yesterday I offered an amendment, to come in on page 73, line 20, but the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] then made a point of order against the amendment. I have since explained the matter to him, and I think the point of order will not be made against the amendment at this time. So I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 73, at the end of line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$100" and in lieu thereof to insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories, for target practice for issue and sale in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice, in pursuance of the provisions of law, $40,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, in explanation of the situation which impels me to offer the amendment, I desire to say that this item is to provide an appropriation for the purchase of small-bore rifles. Appropriations for this purpose have heretofore been made as high as $100,000 at different times, but during the World War production the appropriation was dropped down to the nominal sum which is carried in the pending bill, somewhat by reason of the fact that plenty of such rifles were made in the war production. Now, however, the supply of those rifles is exhausted. They were turned over to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps camps, which are, however, the best places in the world for them. We need a thousand rifles, while there are only 200 of them now available. Such rifles cost about $40 apiece.

The appropriation carried in the amendment, if agreed to, will provide rifles of small bore to be used for training purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator from Iowa quite certain that a .22-caliber Springfield rifle costs $40?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; the .22-caliber rifle is the same as the .30 caliber, except, of course, as to bore.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand; but how much does the .30-caliber rifle cost?

Mr. BROOKHART. It costs $41. That is my recollection. They are made by the Ordnance Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly no such figure as to the cost of rifles has ever been presented to the Military Affairs Committee. Does the Senator mind stating where he got the information that a Springfield .30-caliber rifle costs $41?

Mr. BROOKHART. The cost is $39 or $41, or somewhere along there. I would not say just what the cost is at this time, for the prices have changed a little bit since the World War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator state where he got the information as to the price of such rifles?

Mr. BROOKHART. I got it from the men who make the rifles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean he got it from the Ordnance Department?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; I got it from the Ordnance Department. I talk with those officers every year. I did so last year at the Camp Perry School, where they send the officers who supervise the manufacture of the rifles. I am sure the National Rifle Association sells them at cost, and from $39 to $41 are the figures for which they have been making those rifles since the World War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the highest figure that I have ever heard mentioned, and the figures which I last heard represented the war-time cost. We have not investigated the cost of the Springfield rifle for the last four years, but the highest cost I have ever heard them quoted at was a trifle over $30. Before the World War their cost was only about from $16 to $19.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then the cost was about $19. That is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And I do not think the price has doubled since that date.

Mr. BROOKHART. The price has not come down as yet.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator whether the rifles to which he is referring and which are used in target practice are different from the ordinary service rifle?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; they are .22 caliber instead of the high-powered .30 caliber. They are intended for use in armories and for gallery practice, but are not intended for outdoor rifle practice. Rifle practice, especially in peace times, is very valuable, and the use of the small-bore rifle involves a great saving in expense, because on a thousand rounds of ammunition the cost of the rifle itself is saved if a .22 caliber is used instead of a .30 caliber.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I recall the testimony before the committee last year, it revealed the fact that we have millions of rifles on hand which are stored and not in use, and yet the Springfield Armory is still making rifles for which we have no use. I suggest to the Senator that instead of authorizing the manufacture of additional rifles it would require nothing but an order from the War Department to have the men in the Springfield Armory make the small-bore rifles.

Mr. BROOKHART. I know all about the million rifles to which the Senator refers; I helped to make some of them myself; but——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What I have stated, however, is a fact, is it not?

Mr. BROOKHART. They are the high-powered Army rifle, and, of course, absolutely can not be used for the purpose of indoor rifle training. Indoor rifle practice is a very important part of military training, especially in peace times, and the use of the small-bore rifle, as I have said, saves a great deal of expense, because the ammunition for it costs about one-tenth of what the ammunition of the other rifle costs; and by the time a thousand rounds of ammunition have been fired in the .22-caliber rifle the price of the rifle has been saved. Of course, a rifle will stand six or seven thousand rounds now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to ask the Senator whether it is necessary for the Springfield Armory to continue manufacturing, at the expense which is being constantly incurred, high-power rifles which are not needed?

Mr. BROOKHART. The rifles I have in mind, I again say to the Senator, are not high-power rifles, but are the .22-caliber rifles.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the services of the same men who are now wasting the money of the Government in the manufacture of high-power rifles can be diverted to the manufacture of the rifles which the Senator thinks are needed for target practice?

Mr. BROOKHART. The amendment proposes to pay the expense of the same men for manufacturing the .22-caliber rifles who are now manufacturing the high-power rifles. The work will be done by the same men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, I think the Senator should modify his amendment so as to provide that an equal number of the high-power rifles should not be manufactured, in order not to impose an additional expense on the Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. They are not making the rifles except as necessity requires; there are only a few of the .30-caliber rifles being made at this time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the Senator from the floor, but I feel impelled to make a point of order against the amendment. The amount was not estimated for; it enlarges the appropriation provided in the bill; the amendment has not been reported favorably by a standing committee of the Senate, and therefore is entirely out of order.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I will say that I myself presented this matter to the committee, to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and others. I think perhaps they did not grasp my explanation of it at that time. In a general way, I then gave the same explanation that I have undertaken to give here, although I do not think I went into the matter of the number of rifles needed or the cost per rifle, as I have on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. But the item was not reported favorably by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BROOKHART. I myself presented it to the committee.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not understand me. The point of order is that the amendment does not come before us by the report of any committee, nor has any committee recommended it; it is not within the estimate of the Budget Bureau; and, furthermore, it increases the amount of the appropriation. Rule XVI, I think, is perfectly plain.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator desires to urge it, I think his point of order is perfectly good.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry with respect to the last amendment. What disposition was made of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A point of order being made against it, the Chair ruled that the point of order was well taken.

Mr. KING. I desired to submit an observation on the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is out of order.

Mr. KING. It is out of order now. It was not until the Chair so held.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals in the bill just passed, and any typographical errors that may have occurred in connection with the totals or punctuation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EMBASSY LAND AT SANTIAGO, CHILE (S. DOC. NO. 300).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I invite the attention of Congress to the inclosed report from the Secretary of State recommending legislation by Congress which will enable him, as agent of the Government of the United States, to convey to the municipality of Santiago, Chile, the title to and interest in a certain portion of that parcel of land on which the American Embassy in the city of Santiago is situated, and to acquire with the proceeds thereof or to receive in exchange therefor title to a parcel of land adjoining another part of the embassy land, in order to enable the city of Santiago to carry out its project for the construction of a new street.

It will be observed that the American ambassador at Santiago is of the opinion that the proposed transaction would be advantageous to the United States and that the Secretary of State holds the view that the exchange should be authorized as an evidence of our friendly desire to gratify the wish of the municipality of Santiago to improve and beautify the city. Agreeing with both, I request favorable consideration by Congress of the draft of proposed legislation submitted by the Secretary of State.

WARREN G. HARDING.

[Inclosure: Report from the Secretary of State.]

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1923.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in accordance with the message which has just been laid before the Senate I introduce a bill which I ask may be read the first and second times and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (S. 4522) authorizing the Secretary of State to convey certain land owned by the United States in Santiago, Chile, to the municipality of that city, and to acquire or receive in exchange therefor other land located in the said city, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Brookhart	Bursum	Cameron
Bayard	Broussard	Calder	Capper

Caraway	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Colt	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Couzens	Johnson	Norbeck	Swanson
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Oddie	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Overman	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Page	Wadsworth
Ernst	Ladd	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lodge	Ransdell	Warren
George	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Weller
Glass	McKinley	Smoot
Gooding	McNary	Spencer
Harris	Moses	Stanley

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks with reference to the shipping bill, which is the unfinished business. In the interest of time, I have reduced to writing what I have to say; but, before proceeding, I want to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. In that connection I will say that I shall be willing to-morrow to have an adjournment taken until 11 o'clock Monday. That will give a morning hour on Monday. After that I expect to press the bill just as urgently as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the request is reasonable, and I make no objection to it so far as I am concerned

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROBERT GUY ROBINSON.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This morning the Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill which passed the House unanimously, and which received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but, at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who wanted to proceed with his speech, I did not ask unanimous consent for its consideration at that time. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill, which is House bill 11389.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that it will take no time, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Michigan what the subject matter of the bill is?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a bill for the retirement of Robert Guy Robinson under the act of July 12, 1921, he not having known of the limitation that he must make his application before October 1, 1921, he having been wounded 21 times in the war abroad, and carrying to-day two bullets in his body, and the Secretary of the Navy having recommended that this action be taken.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This bill permits him to make application to the Veterans' Bureau for such compensation as is provided by law, does it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; it simply entitles him to retirement to the inactive list of the Navy under the act of July 12, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the information of the Senate the bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill (H. R. 11389) for the relief of Robert Guy Robinson, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 6 of the Naval appropriation act approved July 12, 1921, as provided that the application for retirement of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy who have heretofore incurred, or who may hereafter incur, physical disability in line of duty in time of war shall be filed with the Secretary of the Navy not later than October 1, 1921, be, and hereby is, waived in the case of Second Lieut. (provisional) Robert Guy Robinson, Marine Corps Reserve, inactive, and his case is hereby authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of said section if his application for retirement is filed not later than 60 days from the approval of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is not here. Does the Senator know whether any other cases similar to this have come in?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know of one.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know that there are none?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know that. I am satisfied that practically everybody knew of the act of Congress, and took advantage of it. This man did not know of it. He was in a hospital in Michigan, and knew nothing about it until after the 1st of October, when he could not make his application.

Mr. LENROOT. Was he in the hospital during the entire time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Practically all of the time. The Secretary of the Navy recommends the passage of this bill with the amendment which he suggests, and which was adopted by the House.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall not object, Mr. President; but I do not want it said hereafter that here is a precedent for lowering the statute which was deliberately enacted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to ask why there was not some general legislation dealing with this subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know of another case where advantage was not taken of the statute.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I know of four reserve officers in the Navy who have been injured since October 1, between October 1 and July 1, when all reserve officers were put on the inactive list; and it seems to me that this legislation ought to provide the same status for them as for those who were injured prior to October 1.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is my understanding that this matter was discussed before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and that they knew of no other case presented, and there is not a person who is familiar with the case, not excepting the Secretary of the Navy, who does not sympathize with this particular measure.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not want the Senator to think I am opposing the bill now under discussion, but I want to call attention, now that it is under consideration, to the fact that there is general legislation pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs to take care of the reserve officers who have been seriously injured since October 1, and who ought to have the same rights which men have who were injured September 30. I hope there will be some action taken upon that bill before Congress adjourns. I do not mean to object to the bill presented by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The limitation to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, October 1, was the date at or before which they were required to make their application. That was not the time within which the injuries must have been incurred, but the time within which application must have been made. The disability must have been incurred in the service in time of war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But is it not a fact that those reserve officers who met with disability after October 1 are debarred from the general benefits of the law?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Those who met with disability before October 1 are also barred unless the disability occurred during war service and was of service origin.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But if they met with disability on September 30 and made application by October 1, they could take advantage of this law?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No. It depended altogether on whether they were still in the service, and as to whether or not the disability was of service origin in time of war.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am referring only to those in the service. The Senator remembers that reserve officers did in fact remain in the service until July 1 last, but there was no provision made to take care of those who were disabled while in the service after October 1.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true. In the case of temporary officers there was a distinction made between injuries incurred in time of war and those occurring in time of peace.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, complaint has been made on the outside by those who did not understand the situation because the shipping bill has been laid aside so often and so long. We have been twitted on this floor because we have laid the bill aside from time to time by those who do understand the situation and who know why it has been done.

There is a strong desire in Congress for a vacation. Members do need a rest. Mentally and physically many of them are worn out. Working day after day from early morning till late at night, as many of them have been doing, without a vacation for years, it is no wonder that they are worn out. No man will know how many years have been taken from his life, but we are sure that many men have had their lives shortened by their work here. The country will be a little more satisfied if Congress appears to be getting on a more normal basis, and that will be a benefit to everybody and to every business.

The only sure way to avoid an extra session was to pass the appropriation bills. While I knew the situation that confronted us, I would have taken a different course if I could have had my way. I believed, and I still believe, that we could have taken up the shipping bill and passed it and then passed the rural-credits legislation and the appropriation bills. I urged this course, but it was not deemed wise. It was insisted that appropriation bills should be passed as they were reported. I yielded, and for this reason have laid aside the shipping bill from time to time.

These bills have passed the Senate. While much talk could just as well have been left unsaid no one can complain. These bills, taken as a whole, have been passed with unusual speed. We are now ready to proceed with the shipping bill. It will not be laid aside for other measures except by a vote of the Senate. We will pass it or we will reject it as the majority shall determine. There are other important measures that should be passed and that I want to see passed. Among them are the debt adjustment bill, the truth in fabrics bill, the filled milk bill, the flood control bill, the reclassification bill, and others. I am in favor of all of them. There is time to consider and pass all of them in regular order. We may have to give long hours to their consideration for the next three weeks, but if we will use the time wisely they will all be brought to a vote after due consideration.

Every Senator will take the course he deems best. I shall question the honesty and sincerity of no man. I accord to each one what I ask for myself and shall do all I can to bring this bill to a vote, taking such means to meet the opposition as may appear to be proper, wise, and necessary.

This bill is opposed because it is said to embody a policy rejected over and over again by Congress. Grant it. That may have been wise then, it is unwise now. Conditions are wholly different. Never before has Congress been confronted with the problem of doing something to get a substantial sum out of a $3,000,000,000 war investment and to put ships already built into active operation. To my mind there is far more justification for this legislation than there would be if we had no ships. Before the war the failure to provide a subsidy could not affect the value of our ships because we had none. Now it may do so, because we have the ships and we want to sell them. This bill will aid in securing a permanent merchant marine and also help us to sell our ships at a better price than we can otherwise do.

It is said that this aid is not given to build ships but that we propose to give our ships away and then pay men to run them. Not at all. We can not give our ships away now on the condition that they be operated. We hope to make it worth while to buy our ships at a fair price and then to operate them. Its main purpose is to enable those who purchase ships to operate them and to replace them as they wear out with new ships and to build up-to-date ships so as to give us a permanent, well-balanced fleet. If it does this, it will be a great success. If not our ships will waste away and we will soon have no ships, much less a merchant marine.

The able Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] opposes the provision in the bill giving the board the power to sell the ships on the terms it may prescribe because he says it has that power now. I agree that it has this power under the act of 1920, and so no harm is done by this provision. In addition to this the board is allowed to control the use of the ships if it deems it wise to do so through the terms of sale. This is a wise provision. If ships are suitable for a certain trade, it is well to require such ships to be used in that trade if we want it developed.

It is said that our ships can be bought at $30 a ton, and that this puts our capital cost even with that of the ships of other flags. Our ships have been offered at $30 a ton, but they have not been sold. Why? Either that they are not suitable for the routes to be served or that our people do not feel that they can run them under normal conditions in competition with their rivals. This fact alone shows the need of this or some similar aid.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator kindly tell us what character of ships are being offered at $30 a ton?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Our average steel ships have been offered at $30 a ton, taking them generally.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator contemplate that under this bill, if it becomes an act, the general run of them will be sold at about that figure?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope they will be sold at least for that. I hope they will be sold for more, but I do not know.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But what does the Senator expect? I hope they will be sold for $500 a ton.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish they could be, but I do not expect it. I have figures here showing that in England ships are being built, especially adapted for special routes, at $40 a ton. If that is true, we can not hope to sell ships that are 4 or 5 years old for more than $30 a ton, and I doubt if we can sell them for $30 a ton.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What was the average cost per ton?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The average cost was possibly $185 a ton. It was a war proposition. They were built during the war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator says ships are now being built for $40 a ton?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are now being built at $40 a ton in England for special routes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recall the estimate made when the shipping bill of 1915 was under consideration by the Congress, which, by the way, was defeated by a filibuster, it will be remembered, terminating the session of 1915, in which the distinguished President of the United States, then a Senator from Ohio, participated. It was then represented that about $100 was the cost of construction; and I recall that those opposing that particular shipping bill insisted that under the then existing condition, in view of the price of labor and that kind of thing, they could not be built for less than $125, and that $150 was more nearly what they probably would cost.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Even granting that to be true—and I have no recollection about it——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was wondering how it could be possible to construct ships now on a basis of $40 a ton in view of the fact that the then proponents of the bill contended that the ships would cost $100 a ton, and the opponents of the measure were then insisting that they would cost anywhere from $125 to $150 a ton.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to solve or try to solve past problems. I am looking at the present and the future. It is a fact that ships suitable for special trade are now being built in England at $40 a ton. When ships are being built abroad now for as low as $40 a ton good shipping men are not likely to pay $30 a ton for ships 4 or 5 years old that have been laid up when they can get ships new and specially built for $40 a ton.

The skill of our labor in the shipyards during the war is cited as proof that we can compete in the building of ships. We may have done it then. Our yards were crowded with work. Special effort was made to turn out work quickly. Not so now. Our yards are closed. Labor is disbanded, and unless we put our shipping on a permanent basis we will have no shipyards. What more conclusive proof of cheaper construction in alien yards can be had than the fact that our people are having ships built in them? They are doing it as the minority report says. They are not doing it for charity's sake, and they are not throwing their money away. They are no doubt following the Democratic policy of getting their ships in the cheapest market.

I agree with Senators that Americans ought to favor American ships and American shipyards. We ought to ride in American ships without the compulsion of law even if the service may not be so good. We ought to have ships built in American yards even if they cost a little more. But human nature is all the same—we will buy if we may where our money will go the farthest. If we have a permanent merchant marine, our shipyards will become efficient, our labor skilled, and we will be able to build as cheaply as anyone, and we will not need to continue this aid. I join most earnestly in urging cooperation among our people on behalf of a merchant marine. I have urged time and again the will to have an American merchant marine. This is well, but our people need the hope of profit to induce them to put their money in an enterprise of any kind. We seek to give that hope in this bill. If we succeed, cooperation will come; the will to do will animate our people, and we will attain our end.

The fact that we had the ships to carry coal from England to this country when the coal strike was on is cited to prove how emergencies like this can be met with the Government ships. Instead of being an argument against this bill it is an argument for it. It was a fortunate thing that we had the ships. Otherwise the rates would have been much higher, and very likely would have been paid to aliens. What do those opposed to this bill propose to do to guard against such a condition in the future? Nothing. The ships we have will not last forever. Idle, they will be useless in a few years. They propose nothing to replace them. The main purpose of this bill is to cause them to be so used that without additional expense to the Government they will be replaced and a permanent supply of ships made available for just such emergencies as well as for the ordinary demands of trade.

Complaint is made that there is no power to control the rates our ships will charge for carrying our products. Those who framed the shipping act of 1916 did not deem it wise to give any governmental body the power to fix the rates on overseas ships. They felt that the competition of foreign ships would be ample and that it would be dangerous to control the rates of our ships when we could not adequately control the rates of our competitors. This was wise then and it is wise now. No policy could be followed that would so deter our people from going into shipping as this. We do protect the Government in this bill without taking away the incentive to efficient and economical handling of the ships. We let the shipowner have the profits on his ships up to 10 per cent in any one year, but if the profits exceed that he must pay into the Treasury one-half of all above that amount up to the amount of his compensation. This is a reasonable assurance, too, that if the shipping business improves very much, practically all of the $30,000,000 will be paid back. If it be contended that private shipping will make large profits, then it must be granted that the subsidy will be repaid. If the emergency comes and big profits are made, the Government will get its money back, and then there is nothing in this bill to prevent our regulating the rates. We can do that hereafter if we deem it wiser to do so. Let us get our shipping before we begin to regulate it. This is true, however: Our ships can charge no more than their competitors, and the more we have running the lower the rates are likely to be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator referred to the fact that after earning 10 per cent there can be a refund. Of course under the provisions of the bill that only applies to each fiscal year; that is to say, if a shipping company were to earn even 30 per cent on its capitalization during a given year, only one-third of that would be refunded to the Government. The surplus over and above 10 per cent for that year could not be applied toward the repayment of a subsidy which had been paid in a previous year. Am I right about that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is right; but it is also true that if the company earned, say, only 4 per cent, it would get no credit for the amount over 10 per cent that it may have earned the preceding year.

In connection with the matter of rates, the fact was brought out a few days ago by the able junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] that our farmers are now getting a rate of about $2 a ton for the transportation of their wheat. That is true, but how does that compare with the pre-war rates when we had no shipping? It is about one-half what our farmers had to pay then. Why is it that it is $2 now? It is because we have the ships. If we get rid of the ships, if they are not replaced, if they are not kept going by the Government or in some other way, when they are gone the rates will go up; in other words, they would get all the traffic would bear. I think our people sometimes overlook the main purpose of the bill, and that is that it will enable us to maintain our shipping, and when ships wear out it will enable private capital to replace them.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. With reference to the rate proposition, there is no provision in the bill for regulating rates. If we turn over the ships to private parties, any combination after that with reference to rates would stand. As long as we keep the ships with the Government we can have the dominating influence on rates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. After we get the ships in private hands and get an ample supply of shipping, we can regulate the rates on our ships if we then deem it wise to do so. But we would find it a mighty difficult thing to regulate and let the foreign competitors go unregulated. It would be a mighty difficult thing to regulate them. But grant that they need regulation, let us get the shipping first.

Now, of course, the Senator from Iowa is going to urge continued and perpetual Government ownership and operation. That is all right. We will have ships then to lower the rates. But we are not finding that the rates on the Government ships are lower than competitive rates. I did not intend to argue, and I am not going to argue, the proposition of Government ownership; but it is true that that action can drive every private shipowner out of business. There is no question of that. If we put the United States Treasury and the wealth of the people of the country behind ships, we could maintain them, no matter what it would cost, and we could drive every private ship owner and operator out of business. But unless we do that, we will not get lower rates. If we maintain the Government ships at the same rates as private parties, then they will probably compete with the Government ships and cause us to run the ships at a loss. In order to get the business we would have to put the rates down and drive private companies out of business.

In my judgment, if we would put the Treasury of the United States and the wealth of the people behind our shipping, we could drive the merchant marine of England off the sea, but where would we be as to transportation facilities, and what would be the cost? I do not know; but the cost, in my judgment, would be simply staggering. However, I am not going to argue that proposition with the Senator from Iowa. If he believes in Government ownership and Government operation being continued, that is very well. I was rather inclined to that view five or six years ago with reference to our railroads, but the more I have been brought in touch with Government agencies trying to transact commercial business the more I have had those ideas driven out of my system.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator, if he would like to ask me a question.

Mr. BROOKHART. From the Senator's suggestion it would seem that the bill is designed, first, to protect the private shipping of the United States——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not at all. The Senator certainly can not draw that conclusion from my remarks. The purpose of the bill, and I will state it frankly to the Senator, is to get our shipping upon the best possible terms into private ownership and private operation. That is declared to be the policy of the United States and was so declared by Congress in the act of 1920, which has been referred to very often. If the Senator does not agree with that policy, quite well and good.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator injected the question of the railroads and spoke about Government management.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I have not. I do not yield to the Senator to take up that matter. I do not wish to be discourteous, but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate on that question.

Mr. BROOKHART. May I make just one suggestion? The expenses increased over $1,400,000,000 on the railroads the first year after they were turned back to private hands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not going to discuss that matter with the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand, then, the Senator concedes that under Government ownership we are in a better position to compete with the world in shipping than if the vessels were in private ownership?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator stated there was no doubt that under Government ownership we could drive the whole merchant marine of Great Britain off the seas.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator has left out a little of what I said. I said if we put the Treasury of the United States behind those ships and all the wealth of the country behind them, we could do it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be behind under Government ownership, would it not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suppose it would as long as the people would consent, but I do not think they would stand for it very long.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator understand by that that under Government ownership the competition could be made more effective than under private ownership?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it could be made more destructive.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be more effective if more destructive.

Mr. JONES of Washington. To crush private enterprise and private shipping would be the very worst possible condition that could come to the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no need to carry it to that extent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is where it would have to go if we maintained Government ownership and operation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator practically concedes also that as far as regulation of the railroads is concerned, it is hardly feasible under private control and it is feasible entirely under Government control.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, it is not; it is destructive.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator made the statement that there were difficulties in the way of Government regulation of freight rates under private control.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But there is no such danger under Government control.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The danger under Government control is that we do not regulate; we destroy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We can regulate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we can not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We could regulate without the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we give cheaper rates and the proposition our friends urge is that under Government ownership and operation there would be cheaper rates. That would not be the case unless we put the rates lower than private parties had them, and when we did that we would drive them out of business. They can not maintain themselves upon rates that we can force by Government ownership and operation.

Now, I am not going to discuss Government ownership and operation. If the Senator believes in that, I have no quarrel with him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But that is the issue.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I am not going to argue it. I have had that knocked out of me by actual experience and observation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not that the issue in this contest?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It looks like that is where it comes to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is absolutely the issue.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. I am glad to have the Senator say that those who oppose the bill favor Government ownership and operation as a permanent policy. The minority in the House of Representatives were very careful to declare in their report that they do not favor Government ownership and operation. I am glad to have the Senator openly avow that that is the policy and the position of the Senators in this body who oppose the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that without that policy we would not have had a merchant marine, and without that policy we would not have been able to put the freight rates down so that the farmers would get some benefit from them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We did not do what we have done because we were in favor of it. We did it because we had to do it under the pressure of war needs and war requirements. Of course, every Senator knows that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does my colleague have in mind what it has cost the United States to conduct this experiment of Government construction and Government ownership and operation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, something over three billion of dollars, but that seems to be considered a very small sum.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Having suffered that loss as a war proposition, is there any reason why we should throw it away and turn it over to private interests and give them a subsidy besides?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator think that it is throwing it away if we can sell our ships to private interests and get them to operate the ships in such a way as to replace them and carry out the replacement?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the bill is practically throwing away this great merchant marine and paying those to whom we give it to operate the ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator can find nothing in the bill which warrants any assertion of that sort unless he believes that the commission which we have will simply throw the ships away. The Senator, as I said awhile ago, could not give these ships away to-day upon the condition that they must be run and operated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And yet this time is selected in which to offer them to the public, at a time when they will sell for the very least, perhaps.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not because of the time; it is because of the conditions that confront our people for the future. It is because the people of the country who are acquainted with shipping know that even if they had these ships given to them upon the condition that they must run them and operate them they could not do it in competition with the ships of the world under the conditions which our laws impose upon them for the operation of the ships.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But our Government can do exactly that thing and is doing it now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to allow the Senator to argue that matter in his own time. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question, but the Senator would have the same opinion when we got through that he has now, and I would have the same opinion, and we would probably be a little stronger in it when we got through.

It is urged that trade is quiet, that ships are tied up all over the world, that what we want is cargoes, and that this aid will not bring cargoes to the ships. It may not, but it will take American ships to the cargoes, and that is what we want to do. Our trade to-day is being carried more and more in alien ships, while our ships lie idle. It may be said that this ought not to be, but that does not alter the fact. This must be because of inequality of some kind, and that is what we seek to overcome in this bill. If we can get our people to use our ships to carry our cargoes, it will not be long until they can hold their own with the world. Ten or fifteen years is not long in the life of the Nation; it is not a long time to establish and put in operation a merchant marine, but we believe it will do it.

It is said that the board is not taking care of the tramp ship and that this bill favors the liner. The board is taking care of routes established under section 7 of the act of 1920, a section considered of special importance to our smaller ports. Under that section concentration of shipping lines at a few ports is prevented. Our southern friends have always been most zealous in behalf of those lines and make no complaint against the subsidy of $50,000,000 we are now paying to keep them going. They want it continued by the Government. We who support this bill want those routes kept going, but we want it done by private enterprise at far less cost and in a way to insure their permanency. Those who oppose the bill propose no way to keep those routes going when the ships are worn out, as they soon will be.

Of course, that statement is hardly correct in view of the declared attitude of the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Nebraska would propose, I have no doubt, that we appropriate $50,000,000, $75,000,000, or $100,000,000 a year for the building of new ships to take the place of those which become worn out or to supply the needs that may develop with reference to our commerce; but Congress has specifically declared against and prohibited the building of any new ships, and we shall have to overturn that policy before we can accomplish much along that line.

We do care for the tramp service under this bill, and proportionately we give such ships greater compensation than we give the liners. While the tramp ship is an important part of a merchant marine, commerce and trade are expanded more in these modern days by fleet ships and regular sailings on definite routes. Shipping men tell me that is the case.

I was very much surprised at this—the statement—for I recalled when we were considering shipping measures before the World War it was stated that tramp ships carried from 60 to 75 per cent of the world's trade, and I had supposed that that condition had continued, but in talking with shipping men was informed otherwise. I wish to say that one of those men was the man of whom the minority speaks so highly and to whom they propose to turn over our shipping. I refer to Mr. Rossbottom. His judgment in this matter ought to be accepted, I should say.

Shipping men tell me—and Mr. Rossbottom was one of them—that conditions are entirely different now from what they were before the war. Then from 60 to 75 per cent of the world's commerce was done by the tramp, while now it is done by the liner.

It is said that a ship subsidy never built up a permanent merchant marine. True enough; but it is also true—and this must not be forgotten—that no extensive merchant marine has ever been created or maintained without government aid, direct or indirect.

The MO–4 contracts are denounced. Chairman Lasker's denunciation is quoted with glee, but no one is fair enough to tell why Mr. Lasker did not do away with them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator makes a pretty broad statement when he says that no merchant marine was ever maintained without government aid. Does the Senator, when he uses that expression, mean aid out of the treasury of the government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I said "direct or indirect."

Mr. POMERENE. Beginning with the law of 1781, when our Government adopted the policy of preferential tariff rates for goods which came in American bottoms——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had that in mind. That was indirect aid.

Mr. POMERENE. That was not indirect aid out of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not mention the Treasury. The Senator from Ohio will not have any controversy with me over discriminating duties.

Mr. POMERENE. No; because I think the Senator and I are practically in agreement as to what ought to be done in this matter. I think we should have found more satisfaction if the Government had followed out the policy contained in the merchant marine act of 1920 upon which the Senator from Washington devoted so much very efficient work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I feel that way, but, of course, I may be mistaken. I have studied over that proposition a great deal, and I sometimes think that probably I studied over it so long that I may have gotten into a rut and that I may be mistaken.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite willing to join hands with the Senator from Washington along the line of that legislation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Lasker denounced the MO–4 contracts in unmeasured terms, but when he came to deal with the problem in actual practice he found he could not get our ships run any other way. No one would take them on any other contract. He had to run them in that way or not at all. The board deems it for the best interest of the people to keep about 400 ships running on 80 or more routes even under those contracts than to close the routes and turn the trade over to foreigners. I believe they have acted wisely; others may not think so. This bill will aid in getting rid of those contracts, avoid much of the $50,000,000 we are paying out, and will maintain the service. How would our friends get rid of those contracts? By tying up the ships and losing the trade. Perhaps that might be wise but it would not create a merchant marine, establish trade, or expand commerce. It is also true that much of the graft and viciousness of the MO–4 contracts have been eliminated by the efficient methods of accounting and supervision of the board.

What do my friend from Florida and my friend from Wisconsin propose to do with our ships? They would tie them up with all the attendant loss of business and damage by deterioration or turn them over to the Panama Steamship Co. and Mr. Rossbottom. Then we would have real Government operation that would be a success, so they say. Why? Because they say those are Government agencies that have operated ships successfully. I do not want to disparage those agencies, but there are some facts the people should be told that they probably do not know. One is that the great reason for whatever success has attended the Panama Steamship Co.'s operation is that it has a monopoly of the Government business to and from the Panama Canal, and, above all, it has been run in conjunction with and as a feeder to the Panama Railroad and wholly without Government interference; in other words, as and like a private enterprise.

For the year ending June 30, 1921, the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. had a deficit or loss of $700,810.27, and for the year ending June 30, 1922, the deficit or loss was $587,332.45. These facts appear in the annual report of the company itself, so there can be no controversy over them.

What of the United States Lines? Much is attempted to be made of the testimony of Mr. Rossbottom and of the profits made by certain individual ships. Mr. Rossbottom stated the real situation of the United States Lines in a letter to Mr. Lasker in which he said:

> It must be borne in mind that the results of the present operation of the United States Lines would show a loss if items of insurance, depreciation, and interest were charged against operating income. This situation would be aggravated if the anticipated reduction in passenger rates takes place.
>
> We can not impress upon you too forcibly the necessity for the enactment of the "alien" provision in the shipping bill in order to accomplish the purpose of the Shipping Board to have a privately owned, permanent merchant marine established and in successful operation upon the north Atlantic.
>
> Unless that or some equivalent method is adopted the steamers at present being operated by the United States Lines must continue to be run by the Shipping Board, with a probable drain on the Treasury until the vessels become obsolete, when the United States Lines will automatically retire from the north Atlantic passenger trade, leaving that service to be maintained by the steamships of foreign registry.

That will happen unless we adopt a permanent Government ownership and operation policy under which we will proceed with Government construction of ships.

Mr. Rossbottom says he has two of the 535 ships, and that they will not last in the North Atlantic service more than 10 years. Why? Because they are not physically fitted for that route, but that they are much better fitted for the Pacific trade. This is one illustration of the inefficiency of Government operation. If privately owned, those ships would be used where they would be most suitable and where they would last the longest. He has two slow German ships which are not suitable for that route, but there are no suitable ships to take their place. There are two large German ships that can be reconditioned, but it will cost from $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 to recondition each one. With about $1,000,000 more a new, up-to-date ship could be built. The Shipping Board, under the law, can spend $4,000,000 to recondition each of these ships, but it can not take $5,000,000 and build a new ship. That is Government efficiency, Government operation. If we were to put $8,000,000 in reconditioning those two ships they would probably be worn out before we got our money back, while if the board could expend $10,000,000 we could secure two good, first-class ships that would last 20 or 30 years. We could probably take $10,000,000 and build four high-class, up-to-date combination freight and passenger ships that would last from 20 to 30 years.

This is another illustration of Government waste and inefficiency. Mr. Rossbottom tells me that if he had five ships like the George Washington they would all pay. It would cost $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 to get them. If we are to continue Government ownership and operation, are we going to appropriate the money to build the ships? If we do not, the very thing Mr. Rossbottom says will happen will come to pass—the vessels of the United States Lines will become obsolete and that line "will automatically retire from the North Atlantic passenger trade, leaving that service to be continued by steamships of foreign registry." He tells me that ships of superior speed and of about 25,000 tons capacity are now being built to go into this trade by Great Britain. I have no doubt that they are so certain of our division and lack of support of our merchant marine that they feel confident they will have no trouble in getting this trade.

Suppose we turn our ships over to these agencies. What would they do with them? They do not need them on the routes they are operating. They would have to tie them up or find or create some agency to run them somewhere else. That would mean a new organization, more demoralization, and we would be right where we are now, only probably worse off.

Grant that we decide that our ships shall be run by the Government, even though the people make good a deficit of $50,000,000 or more each year and get no lower rates than private ships give; there is a very serious phase that must be cared for, but those who oppose this bill offer nothing to meet it. With the ships running, they will be good only for 10 or 15 years; tied up they will be useless in much less time. What do you propose to do to meet this situation? There is only one of two courses to take; either we will do nothing to replace them or the Government will have to tax the people hundreds of millions of dollars to carry out a building program. Do you dare propose that now?

The Senator from Nebraska has very frankly told the people by his declaration here this afternoon, which is the first straightout, square, unequivocal declaration I have heard, that those who oppose this bill propose that the Government shall again go into the building of ships in order to maintain permanently Government ownership and operation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption, I can not allow the Senator to make that declaration applicable to me. I am against Government ownership, and that attitude can not be expressed too strongly, but I am of the opinion that if the plan which was evidently in the mind of the committee when the act of 1920 was adopted had been carried into effect we could have gotten rid of Government ownership in that way just as well as under the present proposed plan.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Much better, I think, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. And we would have done it with very much less expense to the Government than it can be done under the proposed plan now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. POMERENE. And if we can judge by the history of the shipping in the early part of the last century and the latter part of the eighteenth century, that plan would be a success; but it has not been shown, I submit, in the course of debate, that the present plan, if put into effect, will be a success.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, right there let me say that I do not suppose anybody can actually demonstrate that this plan will be a success. It may be and it may not be; but I want to call the Senator's attention to this fact, which it seems to me can not be controverted:

If this plan fails to build up an American merchant marine we do not lose anything, because we will not pay out this $30,000,000 unless we have ships purchased or built and operated. According to the testimony of the experts—I can not say myself—the way they figure it out, they say that if this plan costs us $30,000,000 a year we will have 7,500,000 tons of shipping under the American flag, and they estimate that that amount of shipping is sufficient to carry at least 50 per cent of our foreign commerce. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that there can be no question but that if this bill does what we think it will do—we can not demonstrate it except by trial—it is well worth the $30,000,000 that we will expend. I will say frankly that the experts estimate that about $4,000,000 of this money will go to private shipping now running. That is true; but the balance will have to go to new ships or new ownerships.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, was not the Senator of opinion when the act of 1920 was passed that if that act was passed we would have at least 7,500,000 tons of American shipping?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will get into no controversy with me over the act of 1920. The trouble is that I see no chance of getting that—none at all—and so, if I can not get that, I am willing to take the next best thing. I want an American merchant marine so badly that if I can not get what I think we ought to have, or what I want, I will take the next best thing that offers any promise of getting it. I know the Senator's views.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator is appealing to the Senate now to adopt this plan because the experts say that if we have this plan we will have at least 7,500,000 tons of American shipping.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is not exactly the reason why I appeal to the Senate to vote for it.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, that is one of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is one of the justifications.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and I do not lose sight of the fact that many of the men who are now urging this plan have insisted all the while that the plan which the Senator had in mind when the act of 1920 was before the Senate was the more feasible plan of the two.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that many of the men who are urging this plan were opposed to the plan of 1920.

Mr. POMERENE. That is possibly true; but the fact nevertheless remains that some of the men who are on the Shipping Board now and are insisting upon this plan are on record as having said that the other was the better plan.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes. I want to say to the Senator, and I think the Senate ought to know it, that Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board, I think with all the Shipping Board behind him, urged President Harding to put into force section 34; but President Wilson did not do so, and President Harding has not done so.

Mr. POMERENE. Then it resolves itself into this: President Wilson, who approved the act of 1920 under which he was directed by the Congress of the United States to serve notice upon the governments of the other countries that we were about to rescind the different treaties and conventions which interfered with preferential freight rates, failed to act, no doubt for reasons that were sufficient to him, and President Harding felt like following in the footsteps of President Wilson; and because the two Executives differ from the Congress of the United States it is now suggested that the Congress of the United States shall surrender without an attempt being made to carry out the plan that the Congress had in mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will my colleague allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; although I must say that I do not want to get up an argument on matters that I am not touching on. I will yield to the Senator to ask the question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one question. I am in entire accord with the Senator from Ohio as to the desirability of putting into effect the provisions in regard to preferential tariffs in behalf of American shipping that were contained in both the Republican and the Democratic tariff bills; but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what is the difference in principle between remitting 10 cents on the dollar of tariff dues upon goods imported in American ships as one plan, and, on the other hand, collecting the 10 cents, putting it into the Treasury, and then taking it out again and giving it back to the owners of the ships?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is all the difference in the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then there is just one further aspect of the same question. I urged, with all of the force that I was capable of bringing to bear upon the question, that American ships should have the preference and privilege and benefit of going through the Panama Canal without paying toll, because I regarded it as an American canal, built for American benefit; and I believe that if the two provisions—preferential duties and free use of the Panama Canal—had been given to American shipping it is very likely that we would not have needed any other aid to American shipping. I must say, however, that I am not convinced as to the difference in principle fundamentally between giving such privileges and preferences as those and the plan of paying a so-called subsidy.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will wait just a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have an answer to the question of my colleague.

I want to say, Mr. President, that the plan that I had in mind would not have cost the Treasury of the United States a single penny, because what I proposed was to put a higher duty than the normal, regular duty upon goods brought into this country in foreign ships. If they came in American ships they would bear the ordinary, basic duty and it would not cost the Government a penny. If they came in foreign ships, then the duty would be 10 per cent higher, and, instead of costing the Treasury anything, it would put money into the Treasury. That plan was not followed, however, and there is no hope of getting it now, and I do not desire, at this time at any rate, to go into a discussion of that matter. I have very clear views on the subject. They are just in accord with those of my friend from Ohio. I have no doubt he is going to make a speech on that proposition, and I want to hear it, too; but I hope he will not take the time to discuss that matter now.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator pardon me? A question was asked of me. I am not going to answer it now if the senior Senator from Washington objects to my taking the time to do it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will not take the Senator long to answer it; will it?

Mr. POMERENE. No; it will not take me very long to do it.

The junior Senator from Washington asks, What is the difference in principle between paying money out of the Treasury and a reduction of tariff rates for goods which come in American bottoms? The difference is this: When we pay money out of the Treasury of the United States in the form of a subsidy, we are paying that money to individual companies. We can understand better what "subsidy" means if we call it a pension, a hand-out, and all of it at the expense of the public.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will get into a controversy with the Senator over that. We will touch on that a little bit later.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator and I can reconcile our differences if I can just get him to do what he thinks ought to be done here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, if I had the doing of it, it would soon be done.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite sure the Senator and I would join hands on that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I found out about 24 years ago that there was somebody else in Congress besides myself.

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize that, and I recognize the fact that more than a majority of the Congress in 1920 agreed with the Senator. He was not alone by any means.

As to the other proposition, when we provide for preferential freight rates we are not taking money out of the Treasury. It is true we are benefiting shipping indirectly, but the effect of that policy is this: We are saying to the world that we have a foreign commerce, partly imports, partly exports; and when we say as to those imports which are on the dutiable list that we will allow American bottoms to carry them and admit them at a lower duty, and say on the other hand as to those goods which are on the free list that we will place a slight duty on them if they come in in foreign bottoms, we are in effect simply building a wall around our own ships, which are our property, our commerce, and we are saying to American shippers, "This is your shipping, and the men who have American bottoms can compete for it, and we will protect you as against the foreign shippers." That is all there is to it.

The Senator refers to the treaty with Great Britain in regard to shipping through the Panama Canal. That is a different proposition. Those of us who believe that all shipping should be treated alike were of the opinion that a formal contract had been entered into between the British Government and the American Government, and that certain rights had been surrendered by the British Government; and under that treaty as we construed it we felt that we were bound to carry out our contract agreement, and hence we provided that there should be no difference. I may have been wrong about that; I do not think I was; but that indicates what is in my mind as to the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope we will not go into that subject now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator just one question, to see if I misunderstood something he said. As I understand the Senator, he thinks the act of 1920 is better and more effective than this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it would be if it were carried out.

Mr. SWANSON. If it were put into operation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it were put into operation.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, as I understand, the Senator now offers a measure that is less effective because the President will not execute one that is still existing as law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the other is not self-executing. Section 34 of the act that is referred to does not impose any discriminating duties at all.

Section 34 of the act of 1920 simply directs the President to abrogate the treaties which prevent us from doing it. After that is done then we will have to pass legislation, and the Senator knows what it is to pass tariff legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. But we directed the President to do it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; we directed the President to do it.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the act of 1920 it would be effective if the President would do that, would it not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not unless the provision in the Underwood tariff law would automatically go into effect, and there is a difference of opinion as to that.

Mr. SWANSON. A difference of opinion as to whether it would go into effect automatically?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. I want to say, frankly, that it was not my idea in framing section 34 of the act of 1920 that that in itself would put into effect discriminating duties, and we declared on the floor of the Senate that it simply unshackled our hands and made us free to inaugurate the discriminating duty policy if we deemed it wise to do so. That was declared on the floor of the Senate, and that was my idea about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the act of 1913 we adopted that policy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but, of course, we did not abrogate the treaties in that act.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We simply made it applicable where we did not have any treaty, and it amounted to nothing; but it did embody the principle, we might say.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to ask a question for information. The Senator has just said that if notice had been served, it would have simply unshackled our hands, and then we could have provided for the preferential duties. Am I not right in this, that the act is still on the statute books, in full force and effect, so far as the preferential duties are concerned, except as it has been modified by special conventions entered into by and between this Government and other governments?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My understanding is that if as a matter of fact the discriminating duty policy had gone into effect automatically, it would have been by virtue of the Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act or the act of 1853, under which we provided really by statute for reciprocity between this and other countries.

Mr. SWANSON. Has the Senator discussed with the President his plan as embodied in the act of 1920, as outlined by the Senator, and this plan and discussed with him and the administration leaders which of the two is preferable?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The President, for reasons satisfactory to himself, took the same position that President Wilson took, that section 34 should not be put into effect. Chairman Lasker and the Shipping Board urged their view upon the President and presented a printed brief, I think, as to their reasons for it, but still did not convince him.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the Committee on Commerce in the preparation of this bill did not consider the plan the Senator had in contemplation in 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What was the use? We put that into effect in 1920.

Mr. SWANSON. Would it not have been a wise course, if the Senator and the committee thought that was the wiser and better plan, to consider it in connection with this plan and reach a conclusion in Congress, after considering it fully and completely, and then send it to the President, with our conclusions, and give him an opportunity to act?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that would be a wise course to pursue now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; that was not deemed wise, and I do not think it is deemed wise now, under the conditions in which our shipping is at the present time. This is rather an emergency proposition, and my opinion is that unless we do something of this kind now it will not be possible for us to do anything before December, at the next session, and we will suffer tremendous losses. But that is only an opinion of mine.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator there to bring him back to where he was when he was interrupted?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to get back there.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator said we would have 7,500,000 tons of shipping in operation if we would expend the $30,000,000 provided for in the bill; in other words, that by expending that sum, we could put in private ownership 7,500,000 tons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think we ought to put it just the other way, that we would not expend it unless that occurred.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I want to ask the Senator if he believes that anything approaching that quantity of shipping could be sold now, even if the bill should pass and become a law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The experts themselves do not think so. They frankly say that they think it will probably be three or four years before that is accomplished. In other words, they think that the expenditures under this bill will be only ten or twelve or fifteen million a year, instead of $30,000,000 during the next three or four years.

Mr. FLETCHER. They hold, I believe, that they could not expect to sell over 300 or 400 ships in the first year. That being true, they will proceed with the operation of some of the other ships, will they not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope so, and I am willing to have the Government make good the losses.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Lasker has also testified before the committee that the overhead cost—which I think is the principal cost—will be about as much when they operate 100 vessels as when they operate 400 vessels; so that in continuing operations they will continue the overhead, and it will be a loss, if it is a loss now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me ask the Senator a question. I ask the Senator from Florida whether or not he is in favor of the permanent Government ownership and operation of ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to have an answer without an argument, and the Senator can argue it in his own time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not going to argue it. The more I have studied this situation, the more I have gone into the activities of the Shipping Board and the results that have been obtained and accomplished, the more I have observed the lack of public spirit and patriotism and enterprise on the part of individuals in undertaking to supply the country with an adequate merchant marine, the more I am satisfied that we will never have and maintain a merchant marine to serve our commercial needs overseas until the Government owns and operates it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, as I understand it, the Senator is in favor of the permanent ownership and operation of ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. Supplemental to private ownership and private operation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is good. Coming back to the proposition, this argument does not apply very well now, in view of the position of the Senator from Florida and the position of the Senator from Nebraska, but I hope we will get a declaration from various other Senators before the session is through.

What I have to say here does not apply to the Senator from Florida now or to the Senator from Nebraska. You ought to tell the people what this building program involves. You ought to deal with them fairly. The Senator from Florida is dealing with them fairly. Let them know that what you propose is to run these ships till they wear out or tie them up till they rot. Are you going to embark on a program of shipbuilding as well as ship operation that will mean an annual expenditure of seventy-five or one hundred million dollars a year for 15 or 20 years with a personnel of Government employees that will run into hundreds of thousands? How long do you suppose the people will stand for anything of the kind? By the time such a policy is abandoned, as it will be, you will have driven every dollar of private capital out of the shipping business and our entire commerce will be at the mercy of foreign shipping. Then, in order to protect the American people from exorbitant rates, you are going to have to drive foreign shipping out of business. The people may condemn those who support this measure now, but it will not be long before those who oppose it will be calling upon the rocks and hills to save them from the wrath of those they have so woefully deceived.

Now, I want to refer to Mr. Rossbottom again. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Rossbottom a short time ago here in Washington. I hope the Senator from Florida met him also, and that other Senators met him. It has been said we ought to turn this over to him. They cite him as the proper agency to run these ships. I talked with Mr. Rossbottom about that, and about the success of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, and he tells why it was a success. I am going to ask Senators whether or not they are willing to follow what Mr. Rossbottom says is necessary in order to make Government operation a success.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print in the RECORD this entire letter without reading it all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix A.)

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Rossbottom gives the history of his connection with the Panama Canal and of the origin of the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. He was connected with the railroad during the French days, and so on. Here is what he states as to why the Panama Steamship Co. was a success:

> The successful operation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line is due in a great measure to the fact that it is operated strictly as a commercial proposition, just as if its stockholders were private individuals and corporations, such as own the stock of the important railroads in this country.

Listen to this:

> There has never been any interference on the part of the Government of the United States with the operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line by the directors, who are in fact selected by the Government.

Listen:

> Those directors have been able to use their best judgment, without direction from anyone, as to the policy that that company should pursue, the salaries these officers and employees should receive, and the manner in which the accounts should be audited. In fact, did not the stock records of the Panama Railroad Co. indicate that the Government of the United States is the chief and sole stockholder of record, there would be practically no evidence of Government ownership.

Oh, Mr. President, if you let the Shipping Board handle the property in its care as the Panama Steamship Co. has been able to handle its property, then I grant you that there is hope of success of Government ownership and operation, but you will not let that be done. Hardly a day passes but that the Senate or the House passes a resolution asking why this is done and why that is done, and for this information and that information with reference to the Shipping Board. The only thing I am afraid of now is that when some of the facts I have called to the attention of the Senate are brought before the Senate, in a day or two, somebody will be offering a resolution for an investigation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Co., trying to find out why it is paying certain salaries, trying to find out why it is employing certain men. Then will be the end of the Panama Railroad Steamship Co.

Oh, Mr. President, the bane of Government ownership and operation is the interference of Congress in the administration of the affairs of any governmentally owned proposition. What is one of the great criticisms of this bill? It is that it gives too much power and too much discretion to the Shipping Board, and yet the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. has had absolute and unlimited discretion, and has fixed the salaries of all of its employees; yet we haggle here in the Senate over the salaries of men in the Shipping Board, making provision that no more than so many shall get more than so much, no matter what the needs and requirements may be, and, as I have said, passing resolutions every day disrupting the organization, passing resolutions which mean an expense of thousands of dollars in the preparation of data which comes here printed, and which nobody ever looks at. Talk about running Government business in that kind of way! It can not be done. But if we would give them the power and the discretion which has been given and allowed to the Panama Canal Railroad Steamship Co. there would be some hope of success, I admit.

Mr. DIAL. I thought the Shipping Board had all the power, and if they had operated like the Panama Co. operated there would have been no trouble. The trouble is they interfered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We interfere with them all the time.

Mr. DIAL. I mean the Shipping Board itself interfered with the operators of the ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Shipping Board did not exercise any control over the people whom it allows to operate its ships, Congress would rise up and remove them. That is what we would do. They would not last a day. They would be denounced, and the President would be impeached if he did not remove them.

Now I am going to read the other statement from Mr. Rossbottom's letter:

> In the operation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line its directors and officers are able to exercise their own judgment as to the salaries that should be paid to its officials and employees, settlements of claims for damage to cargo, accidents, etc., which they would not be allowed to exercise if the corporation were operated, as is the United States Lines, as a direct branch of the Government. The business judgment of its directors and officers is used on all occasions, having regard solely to the best interests of the corporation, and without being affected in the slightest degree by fear as to whether or not that judgment may run counter to special Government laws or regulations, as is required of the Shipping Board and its subsidiaries.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will grant to the junior Senator from Iowa, I will grant to the Senator from Florida, I will grant to the Senator from Nebraska that if we would intrust this unrestricted power to the Shipping Board and assume that they are honest, patriotic men, trying to do the right thing for the Government and the people, there would be hope of success. Nevertheless, it would drive private enterprise and private capital out of the business. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator if the salaries paid in the Panama Co. are comparable to those paid in the Shipping Board?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad the Senator asked that question. I was just coming to that point. I have another letter from Mr. Rossbottom, and I am going to read it. I asked him these very questions. Remember now the $3,000,000,000 of capital investment which was intrusted to the Shipping Board. I wrote a letter to Mr. Rossbottom and this is his reply:

> MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 11th instant, and reply to your several inquiries as follows——

Mr. BROOKHART. That $3,000,000,000 of capital has been reduced to some $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, has it not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is just like the cantonments we built during the war. Of course, it is not worth that much now. It cost more during the war than it should have cost, and yet I criticize nobody for it.

Mr. BROOKHART. But it is unfair to speak of it as $3,000,000,000 of capital now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not intend to be unfair. I do not think it is unfair. It was a frank statement with reference to the expenditure of the people's money and that we desire to get as much as possible out of it. At any rate, they have a great many more ships to handle than the Panama people have.

I read now from Mr. Rossbottom's reply:

> Question 1. What, in my opinion, should be the type, speed, and tonnage of vessels required for the satisfactory Government operation of the United States lines?

I am going to read the answer to this, because it gives some idea of what Mr. Rossbottom thinks we ought to do if we carry out the building program that is absolutely essential for the Government to continue.

> Answer. The North Atlantic passenger service is the "top notch" of all passenger steamship operation. The Germans, in my opinion, have the best ideas as to the type of steamer to be operated, and that is 30,000 tons, 20–21 knot speed, capable of carrying between 500 and 600 first class, approximately the same number of second class, and up to 1,200 third class in closed rooms, with freight accommodations for between 3,500 and 4,000 tons. Vessels of this type will in the long run give more satisfactory results.

I ask leave to print the entire letter in the RECORD, and I shall not read it all at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Without objection it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

Mr. JONES of Washington. I read further:

Question 2. What is the number of vessels operating by the Panama Railroad Steamship Line?

Keep in mind when I read the answer that the Shipping Board is operating in round numbers 400 ships and that they have in their charge 1,000 more which they hope to operate, and remember that the Panama line is operating practically on one route, just one way from the United States down to Panama with a few feeders in different directions, while the Shipping Board people operate their ships all over the world.

Mr. CALDER. May I suggest to the Senator that only 10 or 12 vessels are operated by the Panama Co.?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to read that just now. I have the answer of Mr. Rossbottom with respect to it. I am calling the attention of Senators to the situation, and I want them to compare it with the answer.

Mr. CALDER. They are operating not 1,500 ships, but about 15.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here is Mr. Rossbottom's answer:

Answer. Up to within a year ago the Panama Railroad Steamship Line operated a total of 15 vessels, as follows: Ten passenger and cargo steamers, one cattle steamer, two 15,000-ton colliers, and two 7,500-ton coal barges towed by the colliers. It is now operating on regular schedule seven steamers, the remainder of its fleet being tied up because of the depression in trade.

Now, for those 12 ships there are three salaries in excess of $10,000, two being $15,000 and one $12,000. I hope that there will not be any action taken by Congress now to interfere with the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. in the payment of those salaries.

Mr. FLETCHER. But on the Shipping Board they are paying a lot of people over $20,000 a year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator thinks it is fine to have two salaries paid to two employees of $15,000 each for running 12 ships—I do not know how many $10,000 men they may have—and then try to denounce what is being done here by the Shipping Board when they have claims presented against them of $300,000,000, which have to be looked after by lawyers, and we have not given them discretion like the Panama Railroad Steamship Line has. I think the comparison is mighty favorable to the Shipping Board.

Mr. President, it may be true that there are too many men employed on the Shipping Board. I expect there are. My recollection is that since the present board got in it has cut off 4,000 or 5,000 of the employees. They may have too many there now. It is again one of the inefficiencies of Government operation. What is the procedure? I will tell Senators what the procedure is, although every Senator knows it. The Shipping Board goes to cut off a man down there, and a Senator hikes himself down to the Shipping Board to protest against it, and tells them, "If you turn this man off, I will jump onto you people in the Senate; I will not support your measure," or something of that sort. That is what is done under Government ownership and operation. We all know that to be true. It is regrettable that it is true. It ought not to be true, but, nevertheless, the fact exists.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to inquire if the Senator is in favor of correcting those evils in the Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am.

Mr. BROOKHART. Would it not be a good idea to do that instead of condemning Government operation all the time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that it is one of the inevitable consequences of our system of Government with Government operation. I want to say to the Senator—and I do not say it boastingly or assuming to myself any better attitude than anybody else—that I had not done it. I have not asked the Shipping Board to put in a man. I have not urged the Shipping Board to keep a man. I have been called on as chairman of the Commerce Committee by people outside my State and away from my State simply because I was chairman of that committee. I have refused to use my position as chairman of the committee to aid men to retain their positions there. I have told the chairman of the Shipping Board that I wanted him to run that board as nearly as possibly as a business and have no politics in it, but to run it as efficiently as possible.

In my speech opening the debate on this bill I stated that pride is taken in the minority report presented by the able Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] for the upbuilding of the merchant marine during the last few years. The Senator took me to task and said there was no such statement in the report. He is right. There is not. I do not know how I got that impression, which was a very clear one. I must have read his mind unconsciously, however. He did take pride in this fact in the able speech which he delivered. Toward the close of that speech he presents certain tables showing the condition and growth of our merchant marine, and he said:

I submit that these data contradict any sort of inference that the United States is in a bad way regarding the American merchant marine, and all this has been built without any subsidy, if we may for the moment disregard the mail contract subvention which we have heretofore referred to. These figures will show what our shipping was in 1914 and what it is to-day. They will show the development in a really marvelous way of American shipping interests.

Then he said that the private overseas shipping has been doing "fairly well, thank you." Yes; we had but 15 ships of over 1,000 tons each in the overseas trade in 1914, and since then our merchant marine has increased several million tons without what we call a subsidy. Would he have us think this increase has come about by normal means and under ordinary conditions? He knows and the people know that when war broke out our private shipping began to develop with feverish activity under the impetus and the demands of war. The war gave them far more aid than any subsidy could possibly do. It stimulated shipbuilding and ship operation, just as it developed and encouraged other industries in this country. It is true that our merchant marine has increased many millions of tons since 1914, but the Senator knows and the people know that this was done at a cost of nearly $3,000,000,000 of the people's money. If this increase is an argument for anything, it is an argument showing the necessity of some kind of aid to take the place of war stimulus, which has been taken away.

There can not be any doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that if the war had not come on, if we had not done anything more in shipping than we have been doing in the last 50 years, our shipping would have been to-day in just as bad condition as it was in 1914, if not worse.

Yes; private shipping interests made money during the war, just as all other interests did; but the facts and figures show that shipping did not make so much as other enterprises, and many, if not all, of the ships that were building for private account when we entered the war were taken over by the Government and their owners did not get the profits and build up the reserves they otherwise would, and which those who are their competitors now did get.

But, Mr. President, our competitors are running their ships to-day, under the conditions of world trade, largely upon the reserves which they built up during the war. Private ships not taken over did make good profits during the war, but they are not making profits now. That is clearly shown by the fact that the Government lines, so much talked of, have been running at a loss for the last year or two, and it is also shown by the books of private shipping companies.

The able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has told the people of the country that this measure would cost them $77,000,000 a year. He would have them believe that they would be taxed that much if the bill passes. I know that he does not seek to deceive them, but I fear that he has not looked into the matter carefully. How does he get the sum of $77,000,000? He estimated 10 per cent of the import revenues at $35,000,000. I find no fault with that. It may be more. It may be less. Then he said that there are $10,000,000 of income-tax exemptions. These are all eliminated from the bill by the Commerce Committee, and I have no doubt the Senate will approve this action and the House will accept it. Then there are $4,000,000 tonnage dues. Those dues are to be paid by shipping and are not to be a tax on the people. They will be paid largely by foreign shipping, too, because foreign shipping is doing most of our business.

Then the Senator included $15,000,000 for the transportation of Government employees. I do not know if it is that much, but whatever it is it is paid now. It is not new nor is it an added cost to the people. Is it fair to charge it up to this bill? All the bill does in this regard is to require Government officials to travel on American ships instead of foreign ships. It adds not one penny to the taxes of the people. Then, he included $5,000,000 for the Government mail. That is no new expense. We pay that out for mail carriage now, and a large part goes to foreign shipping. We seek to stop payment to foreign ships, but we do not add to the expense of carrying the mail. In fact, the bill as it passed the House simply provides for carrying the mail at pound rates and added nothing to the marine fund.

Then, the Senator from Tennessee included $8,000,000 for the carrying of immigrants to this country. Surely the Senator knows that the Government does not pay the traveling expenses of immigrants to this country. All the bill does is to require one-half of the immigrants to come in our ships, but they must pay their own way as heretofore.

Then, to show more clearly the fallacy of the Senator's contention, so often made in the press as well as here, as to the tax on the people under the bill, I call attention to the fact that the Commerce Committee prepared an amendment limiting the amount that may be expended from the marine fund in any one year to not more than $30,000,000 a year, instead of $77,000,000. I am sure the Senate will approve this limitation, and I am confident that the House will accept it. And so, instead of $77,000,000, no more than $30,000,000 will be paid out under the bill in any one year.

This constant assertion that the people will be taxed thirty, fifty, or seventy millions a year by this bill is a more confident assertion of its success than its proponents dare to make. I wish I could feel sure that $30,000,000 would be paid out under it the first year of its passage and every year thereafter. That would show it to be an unqualified success. The fact must not be lost sight of, and it is a fact that no one can dispute, that $30,000,000 will not be paid out until about 7,500,000 tons of shipping are operating in the foreign trade in private hands under the American flag. When that time comes the Government will have sold at least 5,000,000 tons of its shipping. The amount of this fund that may go to ships now in private ownership will be only about $4,000,000, and the remainder will go to new or newly bought ships. The object of the bill will be attained and we will have a merchant marine sufficient to carry half our commerce. I do not hope for such a result for three or four years at the best, but if we pay out anything like the money the opponents of the bill say we will pay out, this bill will do all its friends expect.

It is charged that some of the men placed in most responsible positions in operating our ships were in the employ of the British companies before they came into the employ of the Shipping Board. That is true. If these men are genuinely patriotic Americans—and I believe they are—then their experience with and knowledge of the business methods of our greatest competitor should better fit them to handle our ships and meet that competition. If they are not, then the sooner they are removed the better. No proof is presented to show that they are not true to their trust. I think they are giving fine patriotic service.

Senators argue for the continuance of Government operation, and even seem to take the position that the Government should operate ships in competition with private shipping lines. If there has been one complaint more than another against the Shipping Board it has been that it has done this very thing. It has not been its policy to do so where private shipping was furnishing reasonably good and adequate service. The board has felt that the Government is to get out of the shipping business as soon as possible, and that Government ships should not be operated in competition with private ships.

The only purchasers of the Government ships would be private shipping interests or those who want to go into shipping. No one will want to go into the shipping business if they think they must compete with Government ships. They know they can not do it. If the Government operates its ships in competition with private lines it will run them out of business. Such ships backed by the National Treasury supplied by the taxes taken from the people will crush any private competition and so destroy the only purchaser there may be for our ships.

The minority in the House report, so often quoted, says:

> We are opposed to permanent Government ownership or operaton of our merchant ships; we favor the sale of them to private owners as soon as practicable, but at such time and in such manner as will protect the public interest and insure the establishment and maintenance of a real American merchant marine for the interest of the whole American people, and so as to prevent our ships from falling into the hands of a large syndicate or merchant marine being controlled by a few large companies which would drive out of business the smaller companies and numerous valuable trade routes.

The minority in this body propose nothing, but all their argument leads to permanent Government ownership and operation. I do not believe there are any more Democrats who believe in such a policy than there are Republicans, but to defeat this bill they seem to be willing to take this position.

Criticism is made because certain information was not disclosed to the joint committee. The reason for this refusal was clearly stated, and was that it would furnish information of great value to rival shipping. I believe that reason will appeal to the good judgment of the people and to every business man. The information if it had been disclosed would have been of the greatest possible benefit to our foreign competitors. It would have been of little if any use in the consideration of this bill, but it would have injured our shipping interests and aided our competitors.

This incident illustrates one of the difficulties of the Government engaging in business. There are business methods which are perfectly honorable but which must be kept from business rivals if success would be attained. There must be more or less secrecy in the conduct of private business. The Shipping Board has never refused to give the fullest possible information to the committee. Resolutions to investigate its operations were pending some time ago. It asked the Commerce Committee to be permitted to meet with it in executive session. We did so, Democrats and Republicans alike being present. Those who had introduced the resolutions were invited to be present, but they did not appear. The operations of the board were gone into in the greatest detail. All questions were answered fully and freely. Every Senator was at full liberty to give to the public anything that he felt could properly be given out, and I think I can say that the committee were unanimous that it would be very unwise to have a public investigation because of the aid it would give to our foreign competitors. The board had nothing to conceal from the public, but it would not be wise to give all the facts to the world.

If words would build a merchant marine and maintain it, we would have a fine one. If loud professions of friendship would bring prosperity to the farmer, he would be rolling in wealth. Words, words, words! Beating upon the breast and fervent thanksgiving that one is better than his colleagues harass this Chamber from day to day. And then when a genuine, sincere attempt is made to aid the farmer by bringing in a bill that will aid in meeting the problems that face our people we again hear nothing but words, words, words; and those of loudest professions are most opposed to doing anything. "You can not serve God and mammon." "You are for the Shipping Trust or you are for the farmer." These words are thundered at us across the aisle as conclusive against the bill. It may be fine declamation, but there is not any argument to it and it should fool no one.

When Senators who ought to know better say this bill simply means more money for the Shipping Trust, it is no wonder that the plain man of the street and the farm repeats it. It appeals to a public sentiment founded on prejudice and false assumptions. There is no shipping trust in American ships, and certainly none that will benefit from this bill. Even if there were, it would not be a very large one. There are 60,000,000 tons of shipping in the world in foreign trade, and only a little over 2,000,000 of it is under the American flag.

If we have any shipping trusts they are the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and the United Fruit Co. They are the largest owners of ships under the American flag, but they get but little aid from this bill. Why? Because the bill expressly prohibits the payment of subsidies to ships carrying the products of the company by which the ships are owned.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. BROOKHART. In reference to prohibiting the payment of any subsidy to a ship carrying the products of the company by which it is owned, if a subsidiary carrying company were organized, that would avoid the prohibition, and such a ship would be enabled to secure the subsidy, would it not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will suggest an amendment that will cover that situation it will be put in the bill, because the prohibition now in the bill is not intended to be evaded at all. I repeat, if the Senator will propose an amendment that will protect that phase of the situation, so far as I am concerned it will be accepted.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would be helping the Senator out in drafting his bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would be helping the Senator out.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand there is no question now, however, between the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Washington that a subsidiary company operating a ship could under the terms of the bill participate in its benefits, notwithstanding the parent company was engaged in the production of the freight that is carried?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it the purpose of this bill to prevent the payment of subsidy to the owner of a vessel for carrying his own products whether that vessel is operated by him directly or by some subsidiary company?

Mr. STANLEY. But the United States Steel Corporation does not operate any ships, and I think it highly probable that the Standard Oil Co. does not. I do not know with certainty as to that; but I know that the company operating the ships on the Great Lakes which carry the ore of the steel corporation entirely is not the United States Steel Corporation itself, but a shipping company whose stock is owned by the steel corporation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Kentucky need not take my time nor his in reference to that phase of the matter, because I am willing to accept any amendment that will eliminate that possibility so far as ownership is concerned. We do not intend to give a subsidy to the owner of a ship, whether it is operated by him directly or through a subsidiary company, for carrying his own products.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will pardon me, my question is not directed to what the committee or the Senator from Washington intend, but what the bill now authorizes. When the white slave act was under consideration in Congress, Senator after Senator said it meant one thing, but it was not in the act, and the Supreme Court said it meant another. The same thing occurred with reference to the pure food law; one thing was intended, according to the statement of the proponents of the bill, but another thing was in the bill.

I should like to ask one other question because I am very much interested in this matter. Is there anything in this bill to cover the case of a common directorate or common stockholding in carrying companies and industrial companies by which indirectly the shipping company may profit by the carrying of its own freight?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we have gone into the matter of stock ownership, and so on. I want to call attention now to some facts as to our ships which are engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. STANLEY. One other question. I am sure if the question of stock ownership is not gone into and if the bill is not fortified by providing, as the Senator from Iowa has suggested, against joint directorates and common ownership of stock, and against an actual common interest, the fruit companies, the Standard Oil Co., the steel company, and every other company that is both an industrial and a carrying company will go through the meshes of the net. What I wanted to know was whether the safeguard provided in the bill is anything more than mere words?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The experts who framed the bill have gone into detail; they have studied it from every angle, and they have tried in the best possible way to meet every condition of that kind which the Senator suggests.

They may not have met every condition, but they have tried to do so. If the Senator will study the terms of the bill, he will find that they have gone into what might be called minute details in order to prevent the evasion of the purpose of the bill. However, if the Senator can suggest any such provision that he thinks is not made I do not think there would be any hesitation about accepting it.

Mr. STANLEY. I am like the Senator from Iowa; I think it is very wise to put in such a provision in case the bill should pass.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator will find that the provisions of the bill are adequate.

Mr. STANLEY. I have read the bill fairly carefully; that is, I have read it in a casual way as a Senator would who is not a member of the committee, and I do not mean to quote it verbatim; but I do not recall anything more than a mere statement that a company which carries its own products shall not participate in the benefits of the bonus, or whatever you may choose to call it—the subsidy—provided in this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator will find the definitions and details to prevent payment being made in such cases.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not recall any details that afford sufficient protection, and I wish to get the Senator's opinion. Does the Senator believe that the bill as now written will prevent either a subsidiary company or a company which is owned through a joint-stock ownership or other device from participating in the benefits of this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do think so. I am going to say frankly that personally I doubt the wisdom of it, and I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, just wait; let me answer this question in my own way. The Standard Oil Co., as I will point out here in a moment, owns a large number of tankers. They are flying the American flag. They carry the oil of the Standard Oil Co. They will get no subsidy. Those ships are not going to last forever. What is going to happen? When one of those ships wears out and they want another one, they are going to build it under the British flag and put it under the British flag; and when another one wears out and they have to replace it, they are not going to build it and put it under our flag. They are going to build it and put it under a foreign flag, and so on; and it will not be very many years until these ships that are absolutely essential in time of war will be under a foreign flag, and if we get into trouble and need these ships we can not take them. In deference, however, to the sentiment that there seems to be against giving a subsidy to these ships, we have put this provision in the bill and excluded them from it. If it has not gone far enough, I hope the Senators will suggest some provision to go further, because as the bill is framed it is the intention not to give subsidy to those vessels.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will pardon me, I thoroughly understand that that is the intention.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, let us not take any further time on it to-night.

Mr. STANLEY. I want to understand the Senator clearly. Does the Senator mean to state that the language in this bill will prevent a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co., of the United Fruit Co., or of the Steel Corporation, operating ships, from participating in this benefit?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do think so. I do so understand it.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to ask whether, under the terms of this measure, the Standard Oil Co., for instance, could take advantage of this cheap money in building its ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. The Senate committee also reported an amendment prohibiting the loan of any of this money for the building of ships to carry the products of the owners of the vessel. We have met a good many of these suspicious things, or tried to, at any rate.

Here is the situation regarding our ships in the foreign trade: There are 452 ships, of 2,518,206 tons, privately owned in the foreign trade. Of these there are 268, of 1,664,750 tons, carrying oil in bulk or otherwise devoted exclusively to carrying cargoes owned by the owners of the ships. Under the shipping bill there would be no compensation paid on these ships. This leaves 184 vessels, of 853,456 tons, operating in the foreign trade. Of these, 65 are passenger ships, of 338,014 tons, and 119 are cargo vessels, of 515,442 tons; 44 of these passenger ships, of 1,833,031 tons, and 61 cargo ships, of 180,568 tons, are engaged in the West Indian and Caribbean trades, leaving 21 passenger ships, of 154,983 tons, and 58 cargo ships, of 334,874 tons, engaged in the ocean overseas trade. But this is not all of these 65 passenger ships. Twenty-one, of 99,383 tons, and, of the 119 cargo ships, 31, of 162,538 tons, are vessels owned by persons who use them largely for carrying products of their own. Assuming that these ships would be used to the extent of one-half of their capacity for carrying the products of their owners, we have a total of 288,322 tons of passenger ships and 434,173 tons of cargo ships eligible to a subsidy under this bill, or 722,495 tons in all. This would take, in round numbers, $3,500,000 a year.

Of the 17 overseas passenger ships, 5 belong to the International Mercantile Marine Co., on the north trans-Atlantic route; 2 belong to the Oceanic Steamship Co., now running between San Francisco and Australia and receiving a special postal pay or subsidy nearly three times what they would receive under this bill; 2 belong to the China Mail, running between San Francisco and the Orient; 1 belongs to Stephenidis, and runs between New York and Constantinople; and the other 4 run between the Atlantic and Pacific ports for the Pacific Mail, but are considered foreign going because they touch at Mexican ports. From this it will be seen that our privately owned shipping in the foreign trade is small in amount.

The United Fruit Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and W. R. Grace & Co. are large owners of these ships, it is true. They may be more or less connected with each other. They can maintain their ships and do maintain them in competition with foreign ships largely because they carry the products of their other businesses. This bill is not for the aid of these large companies, but it is intended to promote the establishment of new companies that will compete with these companies as well as with foreign companies. This bill is in the interest of smaller capital units in the shipping business. It is intended to give those who may want to go into shipping a fighting chance to compete in foreign trade.

How, then, can anyone who regards the facts say that this bill aids the shipping trusts? I can not understand it. I do not like to think that it is said to deceive the people. If there are any shipping trusts they are under the British flag, and they will be aided by our failure to pass this bill. In any event, I would rather pay a little something to wealthy American shipping interests and keep the freight money at home, employ American seamen, and have American ships to help pay our taxes and bear the burdens of our Government than to pay out all the freight money to rich foreign companies that pay none of our taxes and share none of our burdens.

Agriculture needs this bill more than any other industry in the country. This is my honest opinion; but I will state why I think so, and I should like some one to point out where I am wrong and wherein the farmer will be injured by this legislation.

The farmer must have cars to get his products to the home market. He must have ships to get his surplus products to world markets. Why? If we have no American merchant marine, he is dependent upon a foreign merchant marine. If that merchant marine is diverted to war needs, the American farmer suffers. This was true in the Boer War, to which we were not a party. English ships were withdrawn from our trade, and rates went up, and farmers' prices went down. When the World War began the farmer suffered most. Rates for transporting his products went up from 100 to 1,100 per cent, and were reflected in lower prices for his products, both at home and abroad. The farmer who must depend upon his neighbor for the plowing of his land or the reaping of his crop is in a bad way. If anyone must suffer from delay, he is the one. The same is true of shipping. The British ship will favor British trade and commerce.

Right here let me give a striking instance that occurred before the war, showing how that is done.

Before the war Argentina wanted to buy 50 locomotives. Bids were called for. British and American bidders made proposals. The American proposal was the lowest. The only way to get these locomotives to Argentina was over a British line running from this country to Argentina or over a British line running from London to Argentina. What was done? The British line from this country to Argentina asked the American bidder $3 a ton more freight than the line from London asked of the British bidder. What was the result? The result was, of course, that the Americans could not furnish the locomotives for Argentina. That trade, which ought to have come to this country, went to England. How the laboring men of the country can oppose legislation of this kind, looking toward the building up of industries here, I do not know; I can not understand.

Take that one instance: Those engines are largely labor—labor in the mine, labor in the factory, labor in the manufacturing and building of the locomotives. If those engines had been furnished by this country, if we had had American shipping so that we could have carried those engines to Argentina at a lower rate and helped the American manufacturers make good their bid, then not only would our ships have had that business, but the American laborer would have built these engines, and mined the mineral necessary for making the iron, and all that sort of thing.

That just illustrates what happens in manufacturing lines. The same thing would be true of the farmer. Take it out in our country: We raise a lot of apples out there. British Columbia raises apples. Suppose we want to ship apples from our section over to London, and there are two British lines, and we have no American shipping. Who will be favored? Why, of course the British Columbia apple raiser will be favored in lower rates and in quicker service. If any delay must occur, our people will have to suffer it. If we have no ships, our farmer must get to market when and as he can, and if British ships can better serve themselves and their people by carrying the products of other farms, our farmers will be without transportation.

An American merchant marine is of more benefit to agriculture than to any other industry because of the character of the products of the farm. A couple of months ago the apple farmers of our State faced almost total loss of their crops. Why? Because they could not get cars to carry apples to market.

The coal man and the lumberman were suffering, but their coal and lumber were not rotting. They would keep for months until cars could be had. Not so with the apples. So, if there are no ships at the seaboard to take our surplus products to the markets of the world, not only do we get nothing for the surplus but the entire production is badly affected; and here, again, the farmer suffers more than anyone else. If his products are blocked at the seaboard from a lack of ships, not only does the price go down but the product itself rots and wastes away.

The products of the manufacturer can be stored indefinitely. Not so with the products of the farm. This was clearly shown when the World War broke out. Millions of tons of farm products were piled on the docks in the ports of the country, waiting for ships to take them to markets that were crying out for them. The few ships that were available demanded exorbitant freight rates, and the cheap shipping that the farmer had had under a foreign flag became the dearest transportation in his hour of need and brought upon him hundreds of millions of loss. These are facts within the knowledge of all.

Can there be any doubt but that the farmer is more vitally affected by the lack of ocean transportation than anyone else? Is it best for him to be wholly dependent upon foreign shipping, even if it should be a little cheaper for the time being? Surely not. If there is but one great foreign shipping fleet—and there will be but one if we fail to build up our merchant marine—its rates will not be cheap in the end. Trusts and combines will flourish over which we will have no control. If the farm products of another country whose flag the ships fly compete with the products of our farmers in the markets of the world, our farmers will be at their mercy. If any products are to be delayed in getting to the markets, ours will be the ones to suffer. Surely no one will question that fact. It is simply the working of human nature and the law of self-preservation. If we will shut our eyes against prejudice, overlook the fact that some one else may make a little money, weigh the situation and the needs of the farmer, and measure the benefits that will come to him by having a full and adequate supply of ships under a friendly flag to take his surplus products to market when they ought to get there and to aid in opening up new markets for him, I am sure the farmer will not only favor but he will urge and insist upon such steps as may be necessary to attain this great thing. I have two small orchards. They produce all I have to sell; and so I am looking at this matter not only as a citizen of our country but from the standpoint of the actual farmer and from the standpoint of selfish interests.

The House inserted a provision that the amount of compensation to be paid out must be appropriated each year. The Commerce Committee has stricken this provision. Senators throw up their hands in horror at this amendment, and cry out that Congress is abdicating its functions and losing its control over this fund. This is said to be a terrible thing; and yet those who do this proposed to displace the shipping bill and take up a bill that appropriated outright $100,000,000 and put it in the hands of a board of three, to be spent from time to time as this board deems best. Of course this is no argument one way or the other, but it throws a flood of light upon the motives of the opposition.

This provision is a good one or a bad one. If we hope to make a market for our ships by inducing men to go into the shipping business, we must make it certain that they will get the compensation promised. Capital is timid. It must be sure of its ground. Men will not invest in shipping if they must await the uncertain action of Congress, and we can not compel them to do so. Men will not loan money to others to invest in ships if there is any doubt about the Government keeping its contract. We are sure Congress will carry out a contract made according to the law, and yet I do not know; if the attitude of those who oppose the striking out of this provision means anything, it means that they would not favor carrying out such a contract.

I meant what I said in the report on this bill, and this debate shows that I was right. This amendment is vital to the bill. The President considers it so, and justly so. He proposes to deal honestly with the people. He could accept this provision, remove much opposition to the bill, and have the people still think they have something substantial. He knows they would not have. He does not propose to fool them in this way. He is going to be honest with them. If this amendment is defeated, the bill amounts to nothing. No investments will be made under it. It would better not be passed. If there is no doubt of Congress carrying out any contract made, what is gained by leaving the matter to uncertainty? It will cost no more to make the matter certain. No money will be paid out except under contract, and for the service rendered.

We are told that we do not need any aid, and to let our shipping go on and it will grow and prosper. We did this for 50 years, with the result that we had only 15 ships in the overseas trade when the war broke out in 1914. If our shipping did not grow then what is there to lead us to think it will grow now? There is every indication to the contrary. Our shipping is being laid up now, and more and more the foreign ship is taking our commerce. Ships are being built abroad not only for the home trade but for us also.

I have here a quotation from Fair Play, an English journal, the issue of January 25, 1923, which calls attention to the large amount of building which has been done this last year. I ask that this may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Fair Play, January 25, 1923.]

During the year 1922 there have been launched in Great Britain and Ireland 235 merchant vessels of 1,031,081 tons, namely, 208 steamers of 950,516 tons, 17 motor vessels of 78,341 tons, and 10 barges of 2,224 tons. These vessels have been built of steel. The output represents 41.8 per cent of the world's output for 1922, as compared with 35.5 per cent in 1921 and 58 per cent in 1913.

Of the tonnage launched during the year 762,769 tons are for registration in Great Britain and Ireland, and 268,312 tons, 26 per cent of the total tonnage, are for owners residing abroad. This percentage, although much lower than that for the previous year, is still higher than the pre-war figures, which, for the five years 1909–1913, gave an average of 22½ per cent. Of the tonnage launched in 1922, 97,600 tons are for Dutch owners, 43,757 tons for French owners, 33,092 tons for owners in the British Dominions overseas, and 26,715 tons for Spanish owners.

The returns for 1922 show that 91 vessels of between 5,000 and 10,000 tons each and 17 vessels of 10,000 tons and upward were launched. The following are the largest:

	Tons.
Franconia	20,000
Conte Verde	18,000
Doric	16,300
Mongolia	15,550
Veendam	15,434
Volendam	15,434

It will be noticed that while in the last two years English shipping men have been crying out for the United States to scrap its ships because there was such a terrible surplus of tonnage in the world, the same British shipping men have continued to build, as the above figures show; and it will be noticed that the tonnage built for registration in Great Britain and Ireland alone last year, 762,769 tons, is greater than the total amount which Great Britain built for herself and all her customers in 1908.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we must aid our shipping to get its place in the world trade or we will have none at all. We would better face that fact squarely and manfully. Our great rival used heroic measures to bring her shipping to its strong position. We must do so, too. Our task is far more difficult because of the long training and strong position of our competitors. They have their business agencies and connections, banking facilities, trained personnel, and the cooperation of their Government, which is trying to build it up instead of tear it down. We must have a personnel, make trade connections, establish agencies, create banking facilities, and build up our shipping in the face of the competition of this grown-up marine and with the opposition of many of our people and public officials and the spur of party advantage.

They say sell our ships now. We can not do it unless we sell abroad or to a few strong companies at home. We do not want to favor a few companies. We want to encourage the formation of many companies. We want to multiply the number of owners of ships rather than to diminish them. To defeat this bill is to play into the hands of any trusts there are and to enlarge the profits of the rich and strong. Those who inveigh most against the rich and the trusts, in my judgment, would aid them most by defeating this bill.

The man who fights this bill fights the battle of British shipping. He may not intend it so, but the only fear British shipping has that we will build up a large merchant marine to share with them the carrying trade of the world grows out of the possibility of our doing something to aid shipping. That British interests are doing everything they can to defeat this legislation I have no doubt, even if I can not prove it. Through their interlocking interests and connections with our financial, business, and transportation institutions they exert an unconscious, if not a direct, influence upon individual and public sentiment. Many of the arguments advanced here were first advanced in British journals. I do not blame them for what they do. They are fighting for their own interests, and I need no proof that they are doing so. The fact that they think this bill will injure them is conclusive proof to me that it will help us.

I may not be able to show to the satisfaction of anyone that it costs more to construct and operate our ships than it does foreign ships. Hundreds of pages of testimony have been taken, from which anyone seeking evidence to support any particular conclusion can find it. I believe it does cost more to operate our ships. I believe we do pay higher wages. Here are some facts:

I asked an expert of the Shipping Board to prepare a statement with reference to wages paid on British ships and the wages paid on American ships, and he has furnished it to me. I ask to have this inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of British and American ships' wages by similar types of ships, showing total crew cost and relationship between officer and crew wages.

[Taken from recent pay rolls conversion of British pound at $4.65.]

Flag.	Dead-weight.	Fuel.	Crew.	Annual officer wages.	Annual crew wages.	Annual total wages.
American	10,600	Coal...	40	$16,710	$22,494	$39,204
British	10,800	...do...	45	9,796	17,074	26,870
				6,914	5,420	12,334
American	8,800	...do..	39	16,680	21,564	38,244
British	9,850	...do..	44	9,696	16,579	26,275
				6,984	4,985	11,969
American	8,800	Oil....	34	16,680	16,824	33,504
British	8,800	...do..	34	9,672	15,438	25,110
				7,008	1,386	8,394
American	7,800	Coal...	39	16,680	21,564	38,244
British	7,800	...do..	42	9,548	16,380	25,928
				7,132	5,184	12,316
American	5,495	...do..	34	16,140	15,930	32,106
British	5,000	...do..	34	9,287	15,537	24,824
				6,853	423	7,276
American	3,390	Oil....	27	15,480	13,284	28,764
British	3,400	...do..	27	8,990	11,482	20,472
				6,490	1,802	8,292
American	2,875	Coal...	34	15,420	17,160	32,580
British	3,200	...do..	23	6,944	9,486	16,430
				8,476	7,674	16,150

Mr. JONES of Washington. This does not give the details, the number of men, and all that sort of thing, but I have here several statements, data taken from the pay rolls of the various ships, British and American, which give the number of men and the amount paid to each one. It is rather long, yet it furnishes facts which, it seems to me, can not be controverted and which establish beyond controversy the difference in the wages paid American seamen operating American ships and those paid seamen operating British ships. The date of these statements is the date of the paper showing the wages paid. I ask that these may be printed as appendices to my remarks, not inserted here, but at the end of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix C to Appendix G.)

Mr. HEFLIN. May I ask the Senator how much longer we are to stay in session and whether we are to have an executive session?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are going to have an executive session and I shall be through in just a little while.

I believe it does cost more to build ships in our yards. I think the facts clearly prove all this, but I am not going to try to point out the proof. There are some facts no one can deny which to my mind are conclusive of this question. We did not build ships and we did not operate ships in the foreign trade for 50 years before the World War. Since that war closed our foreign trade is more and more being carried in foreign ships, our own people are building ships in foreign shipyards, and our ships are being laid up in a greater proportion than any other ships. We do not, under present conditions, hold our own with our competitors. This convinces me that our shipping must have help to survive.

You can wander in the field of theory, speculation, suspicion, fear, doubt, prejudice, and envy all you please, and you will always confront the fact that it took the need and stimulus of war to start us to building and operating ships, and that, with the war closed, our rivals are taking the overseas transportation away from us. We are drifting back to our position before the war, and these plain questions face each of us: Do you want an adequate merchant marine privately owned and operated? Nearly all will answer "yes." Are you willing to do what may be necessary to have it? To that there must be an answer of "yes" or "no." If "no," that ends it; but if "yes," then you will hesitate long before voting against this bill, which is the only practical, concrete proposal presented. As I have said before, it does not suit me in many particulars, but if it does not succeed it will not cost us much, and if it costs us the limit we will have our merchant marine running as we desire, and I want a merchant marine so hard that I will gladly vote for any measure that holds out a reasonable hope of securing it. Every man who earnestly desires a merchant marine, it seems to me, can well do likewise.

I do not know that this bill, if passed, will build up an American merchant marine and put it upon a permanent basis. No one can tell until it is tried. I think it will do it. If we do not pass it, I think I know what will happen. The organization created to deal with the chaotic problem turned over to this administration by the last one will disintegrate. Its efficiency will be destroyed.

The Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation will become the haven of discredited and impecunious politicians and of persons scheming to defraud the Government by getting its property for a song or securing the allowance of stuffed and fraudulent claims. Our ships will rot at the wharves or be run at a great loss to the Treasury, and within 5 or 10 years the hundreds of millions of value we now have in our ships will be dissipated, our merchant marine will be gone, and our farmers, merchants, and industries will be at the mercy of foreign shipping. Of course there will be an honest difference of opinion as to whether or not this will be the condition, but from what I know of the situation there is no doubt about it in my mind. Whatever others may do, I can find no justification for my not supporting anything that offers a hope of avoiding such calamitous results.

Mr. President, I desire to ask that certain matter may be printed at the close of my remarks. I have here an address delivered by Mr. Plummer, of the Shipping Board, to the National Merchant Marine Association last evening, which I ask may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix H.)

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here an extract from a speech by ex-President Taft, delivered on September 30, 1909, at Seattle, Wash., which, it seems to me, is very appropriate at the present time. It presents arguments in favor of an American merchant marine and of our doing something to aid it, very clearly and very concisely. I ask that that may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix I.)

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have two other articles which I want printed as a part of my remarks. One is from the Manufacturers' Record of February 1, 1923, entitled "Why the South should favor subsidy for an American merchant marine." The other is an article which struck me as a very clear and cogent argument in favor of the merchant marine, sent me by Hon. Winthrop L. Marvin. I ask that these may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix J and Appendix K.)

APPENDIX A.

UNITED STATES LINES,
New York, January 9, 1923.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your verbal request, I take pleasure in submitting the following information relative to the activities of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line:

I became connected with the Panama Railroad Co. in 1887. At that time the company operated a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama. It afforded the only means by which cargo and passengers were carried from Europe and from the United States to the west coast of Central and South America, other than the route via Cape Horn and that via the Straits of Magellan. The bulk of the cargo moving from Europe and from the United States to Central and South America and in the opposite direction was carried over the Panama Railroad, with the exception possibly of that cargo originating at, or destined to, ports so close to the Magellan route as to permit of it being carried with equal speed via Magellan or via Panama.

The railroad was "fed" by steamship lines that operated on both sides of its terminals, and the "feeder" from the United States was the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., which operated between New York and Colon on the Atlantic, and between Panama, Central America, Mexico, and San Francisco on the Pacific.

In 1894 the contract between the Panama Railroad Co. and the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. expired by limitation, and, as the directors of the Panama Railroad Co. and of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. could not agree upon a new form of contract, the Panama Railroad Co. established its own steamship line, operating between New York and Colon, its Altantic terminals; and also later established another steamship line, operating between Panama and San Francisco. Its line on the Atlantic was first named the "Columbia Line," and later the "Panama Railroad Steamship Line."

The stock control of the Panama Railroad Co. passed to the Government of the United States some time during 1904, when the Government purchased the assets of the French Panama Canal Co., among which were included all but approximately 3,000 shares of the capital stock of the Panama Railroad Co.

From the inauguration of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line in 1894 until the Government of the United States purchased control of the railroad company in 1904, the steamship line was operated solely as a feeder for the Panama Railroad. Its "bookkeeping" proportion of the through rate for the haul on the Atlantic Ocean was purposely made low, so as to yield just a slight return over operating expenses, the idea being to increase the revenue of the railroad itself, which was the important factor in the through traffic between Europe and the United States and the West coast of Central and South America.

Up to 1904 the rates between Europe and Central and South America, although involving a greater Atlantic Ocean haul of 2,000 miles, were always considerably lower than the rates between New York and Central and South America, and some of the European steamship companies that carried traffic from Europe to Central and South America via Colon also operated steamships of foreign registry between New York and Colon, charging for the latter service much higher than they were charging for the haul on their steamers from Europe. This was due, first, to the fact that there was greater competition for the European traffic, a larger number of steamship lines being involved; and, second, to the policy of charging all that the traffic would stand.

In 1904 when the Government of the United States purchased the assets of the French Panama Canal Co., among which was included the majority of the shares of the Panama Railroad Co., a change was necessitated in the policy of the steamship line—no longer could that line be a party to an arrangement by which American shippers were charged more than foreign shippers for a service involving a lesser ocean haul of over 2,000 miles; and by direction of Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, no rate could be increased except when justified by operating conditions, and no rate, when decreased, could be later increased unless justified by operating expenses.

From 1894 up to the completion of the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, which had, with one or two exceptions, always operated at a slight profit, continued to operate at a profit, notwithstanding the fact that it was obliged to carry all employees of the Government between New York and the Canal Zone for a subsistence rate ranging from $20 to $30—in most instances $20—and the bulk of the supplies and equipment needed in the construction of the canal at rates that always involved a reduction from the regular tariff, and in a number of instances resulted in actual loss. It was able to do this and operate at a profit, because of the large quantity of commercial cargo that it handled at regular rates. It did not have sufficient facilities to enable it to handle all the commercial cargo that was offered, and it was obliged to give preference on its steamers to all shipments for account of the Government, with the result that not only was considerable commercial cargo diverted to its competitors but it in many instances was obliged to turn over to its competitors cargo that had been tendered by shippers but which had been shut out for poor-paying Government cargo.

During the period of the war all the facilities of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line were devoted to the transportation of "war-essential" cargo, in cooperation with the war industries and other boards; and even during that period, and subsequently, when rates throughout the world were increased by 200 per cent and 300 per cent, merely because the traffic could stand it, no rate was ever increased by the Panama Railroad Steamship Line except it was justified by increased operating expenses. Subsequent to the termination of the war the large through business that had been previously carried over the Panama Railroad was naturally diverted to the steamships operating through the Panama Canal, because of the reduced cost of transportation and the lesser number of handlings, and of the local business that has not been affected by that competition the Panama Railroad Steamship Line has been obliged to fight for its share with other steamship lines operating on the Atlantic, some of which are of foreign registry.

The loss of this good-paying through traffic is the principal cause of the deficit from which the Panama Railroad Steamship Line has suffered within the past two years and the substitution in its place of local traffic that is carried at ruinous rates in competition with other lines.

The successful operation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line is due in a great measure to the fact that it is operated strictly as a commercial proposition, just as if its stockholders were private individuals and corporations, such as own the stock of the important railroads in this country. There has never been any interference on the part of the Government of the United States with the operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line by the directors, who are in fact selected by the Government. Those directors have been able to use their best judgment, without direction from anyone, as to the policy that the company should pursue, the salaries these officers and employees should receive, the manner in which the accounts should be audited. In fact, did not the stock records of the Panama Railroad Co. indicate that the Government of the United States is the chief and sole stockholder of record, there would be practically no evidence of Government ownership.

The operation of the United States Lines, to which I was transferred a little over a year ago with the approval of the Secretary of War, is an entirely different proposition. In its efforts to secure business the Panama Railroad Steamship Line competed with other lines that had approximately the same kind of tonnage and facilities to offer to shippers. In the United States Lines we are in exactly the reverse position, in that we are not able to offer to shippers anything like the facilities that our competitors, most of whom operate steamers of foreign registry, are able to offer. We have but one real steamer, the steamship George Washington, and even that steamer is not to be compared with many of the large steamers of our competitors. The rest of our fleet can not be compared in size, speed, or capacity with even the second-class steamers of our foreign competitors; and even should it be determined to continue the Government operation of the United States Lines, success can not reasonably be expected until a building program is inaugurated that will place in its service steamers of as high and satisfactory a type as are being operated by our foreign competitors in this strictly American traffic.

If the Panama Railroad Steamship Line had been obliged to meet with such severe competition as the United States Lines meets every day and with the same kind of inadequate facilities as are possessed by the United States Lines, the Panama Railroad Steamship Line could never have been operated at a profit, except possibly during the few months of the war, when American steamships had a monopoly of all traffic from the United States because of foreign steamships being commandeered by foreign admiralties.

In the operation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line its directors and officers are able to exercise their own judgment as to the salaries that should be paid to its officials and employees, settlements of claims for damage to cargo, accidents, etc., which they would not be allowed to exercise if the corporation were operated, as is the United States Lines, as a direct branch of the Government.

The business judgment of its directors and officers is used on all occasions, having regard solely to the best interests of the corporation, and without being affected in the slightest degree by fear as to whether or not that judgment may run counter to special Government laws or regulations, as is required of the Shipping Board and its subsidiaries.

Very respectfully yours,

T. H. ROSSBOTTOM.

APPENDIX B.

UNITED STATES LINES,
New York, January 12, 1923.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 11th instant, and reply to your several inquiries as follows:

Question 1. What, in my opinion, should be the type, speed, and tonnage of vessels required for the satisfactory Government operation of the United States Lines?

Answer. The North Atlantic passenger service is the "top notch" of all passenger steamship operation. The Germans, in my opinion, have the best ideas as to the type of steamer to be operated, and that is 30,000 tons, 20–21 knots speed, capable of carrying between 500 and 600 first class, approximately the same number of second class, and up to 1,200 third class in closed rooms, with freight accommodations for between 3,500 and 4,000 tons. Vessels of this type will in the long run give more satisfactory results not only from a passenger and cargo but also from a financial viewpoint than larger steamers of the type of the steamship Majestic and steamship Leviathan. The German idea is an improved George Washington, somewhat larger, and of from 3 to 4 knots greater speed. This is my ideal of a first-class trans-Atlantic liner.

Europeans will travel second class; Americans do not care to do so because they don't want to travel on a steamer in which there is a class of passengers apparently superior to them. For that reason we are changing the steamship America, which is now a first-second-third class steamer, to a cabin type steamer, carrying one type of cabin passengers and third class. The cabin passengers will pay approximately the same rate as is now charged to second-class passengers. The steamship America, with a speed of from 16 to 17 knots, is a most satisfactory cabin ship, and in my judgment is the ideal type of steamer for the cabin trade.

Our London service is an entirely different proposition. We are now operating with 5 steamers of the 502-foot type that are capable of 14 knots speed. They are about 100 feet too short and 3 knots too slow. They can carry a little in excess of 100 cabin passengers; they should have good accommodations for not less than 200. Three of them have no third-class accommodations; they should have accommodations for not less than 100, and preferably 150, third class in rooms. With the latter type in the London trade, four steamers could operate on a weekly schedule where it now takes five; the increased speed would result in our securing the mail from the New York post office; and the additional passenger capacity could be expected to sufficiently increase the passenger revenue to make the line a profitable one.

Question 2. What is the number of vessels operated by the Panama Railroad Steamship Line?

Answer. Up to within a year ago the Panama Railroad Steamship Line operated a total of 15 vessels, as follows: Ten passenger and cargo steamers, one cattle steamer, two 15,000-ton colliers, and two 7,500-ton coal barges towed by the colliers. It is now operating on regular schedule seven steamers, the remainder of its fleet being tied up because of the depression in trade.

Question 3. State the number of salaries of $10,000 and up, giving the amount of each.

Answer. There are three salaries in excess of $10,000, two being $15,000 and one $12,000.

Question 4. What is my opinion of the suggestion that the ships of the Emergency Fleet Corporation be turned over to me or to some other individual or single operating agency?

Answer. I do not take much stock in this. The present officials of the Emergency Fleet Corporation are among the most experienced of steamship operators. No one individual could do as well as these officials are doing, and I can not see how any single operating agency could accomplish any more than those officials are now accomplishing.

Question 5. What, in my opinion, should be done if we are to continue Government ownership of our steamers and operate them by the Government or through operating agencies?

Answer. There are three kinds of service that must be considered—(1) the tramp-steamer service, (2) the cargo-liner service, (3) the combined passenger and cargo service.

I do not see why the Government should go into the tramping business. It would be difficult to compete with the foreign tramps because of their very low operating costs, and nothing would be gained in the direction of establishing trade routes or regular service. Let the foreign shippers hunt for and take care of the tramp trade.

The establishment and maintenance of regular trade routes by the operation of cargo and passenger liners is well worth while.

The real question is, what do you mean by "Government operation"? Is it merely operating the steamers, making the necessary repairs, and letting them wear themselves out? Or is it a question of operating what we have and planning new construction, just the same as all privately owned steamship companies are obliged to do? If the first is to be considered "Government operation," and no building is contemplated, the best thing to do, in my judgment, is to continue the operation of steamers for Government account by private operators, but tie up the operators in some way, so that they will have a financial risk of some kind. The present method results in the operator being certain of his expenses for commissions, etc., and he is merely an "agent," sure of his compensation—he can not be expected to take the same interest in the business as if he were financially concerned. A better plan would be to charter the steamers to him—even if the Government pays him for chartering them, instead of the charterer paying for the use of them; or agree upon some plan whereby the operator runs more of a risk—financial, legal, and business—than he does under the present arrangement.

If "Government operation" involves a construction policy, my idea is that the Government should get out of the steamship business as soon as it has established a balanced fleet and has something that it can sell to private steamship operators, and which those operators can afford to purchase. When the time for sale arrives, it should not be a question of "jacking up" private operators to make high bids for the steamers; it should be a question of accepting reasonable bids from responsible concerns, but tying up those concerns with the obligation to operate that particular trade route with American steamers for a definite number of years. I am rather hopeful that at the end of that period the trade will be so firmly intrenched that the operators will stick to American tonnage.

Regardless as to which of these two plans is adopted, I can not see anything but confusion and heavier financial loss if steamship lines now operating Shipping Board steamers on regular trade routes are replaced by direct Government operating agencies. It would, of course, be possible to establish the Government agencies to operate; but the building up of a business takes considerable time, and the agency and other arrangements that the present operators now have abroad and the facilities they have acquired in the handling of steamers can not be taken from them at short notice and acquired by any direct Government operating agency.

It all takes time and should not be attempted except it be definitely determined that the Government is to run American shipping as it operates, for instance, the Post Office, War, Navy, and other departments of the Government.

There are several other questions that could be handled with advantage to American steamship interests, if you gentlemen of Congress would look into them carefully. They are as follows:

(1) Reciprocity in the matter of licenses to steamship lines. Foreign steamship lines operate to the United States and are admitted here without any restriction whatever. Foreign governments require steamship lines to secure licenses before they can engage in the passenger traffic. Unheard of difficulties are encountered when applications are made on behalf of American lines. All sorts of obstacles are placed in the way, and in many instances licenses are never granted.

(2) The booking of passage on steamships of foreign registry by Government officials and employees traveling at the expense of the Government of the United States instead of on American steamships—a condition practically unheard of with citizens of foreign countries.

(3) The adoption of the policy of foreign governments in requiring that their mail matter be forwarded by steamers flying the flag of their country—rigidly adhered to, regardless as to the extent to which the mail might be delayed. The mail revenue, in many instances, with American steamship lines changes a deficit into a profit.

(4) Allowing immigrants to enter the United States at the rate of 20 per cent per month for 5 months, instead of at the rate of 10 per cent per month for 10 months, results in the control of this traffic by steamship lines of foreign registry. The adoption of a 10 per cent per month plan would correct this condition.

(5) A tendency on the part of Government officials to construe navigation, tariff, and similar laws in a reasonable way, as Congress undoubtedly intended, instead of compelling American steamship operators to comply strictly with various interpretations of the law, all tending to increase operating expenses, would be a step in the right direction.

I trust this letter will give you the information that you desire. If it does not, I shall be glad to be of any further assistance to you.

Very sincerely yours,

T. H. ROSSBOTTOM, General Manager.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

APPENDIX C.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 29, 1923.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing two copies of additional comparisons of American and British and American and Norwegian steamers engaged in similar trades—the figures being taken directly off the pay rolls as the ships arrived at the port of New York. The date stated on these memoranda is the date of paying off.

You will observe that one of the American-British statements compares the wages of an American with a British white crew—the other of an American with a British crew composed chiefly of Lascars—East Indians. It is significant that 34 members of the American white crew in this case received a total pay of $2,742.50 a month, while the partly British but chiefly Lascar crew of 69 of the British steamer received only $1,707.05—or more than $1,000 less for one ship per month. It is the practice of British shipowners in the East India and other trades wherever possible to match Lascar crews against American crews—the more effectively to drive our ships off the ocean.

Other comparisons are being made from day to day and will be forwarded to you as completed.

Sincerely yours,

WINTHROP L. MARVIN,
Vice President and General Manager.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 14, 1923.

Comparison of pay rolls, American and British cargo ships.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "WINONA," OF PHILADELPHIA.

(4,964 gross tons, 3,034 net tons, oil burner.)

	Pay per month.
1 first mate	$160.00
1 second mate	140.00
1 third mate	125.00
1 radio operator	90.00
1 boatswain	65.00
5 able seamen, at $55	275.00

		Pay per month.
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	$80.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
2	water tenders, at $65	130.00
3	firemen, at $57	172.50
1	steward	105.00
1	chief cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	mess boys, at $35	105.00
1	purser	100.00
31	Total pay per month	2,557.50

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "TREGENNA," OF ST. IVES.

(5,241 gross tons, 3,200 net tons, coal burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$105.08
1	second mate	81.73
1	third mate	60.71
1	carpenter	58.38
1	boatswain	53.71
7	able seamen, at $46.70	326.90
1	chief engineer	142.44
1	first assistant engineer	102.74
1	second assistant engineer	79.39
1	third assistant engineer	60.71
2	donkey men, at $53.71	107.42
1	oiler and fireman	51.37
12	firemen and coal passers, at $49.04	588.48
1	steward	67.72
1	cook	63.05
3	boys, at $26.15	78.45
36	Total pay per month	2,028.28

On basis of pound sterling=$4.67.

—

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, September 8, 1922.

Comparison of pay rolls, American and British cargo ships, New York-East India trade.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "THE LAMBS," OF NEWARK.

(Shipping Board; 6,629 gross tons; 4,122 net tons; oil burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$165.00
1	second mate	145.00
1	third mate	130.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	carpenter	70.00
1	boatswain	65.00
6	able seamen, at $55	330.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	240.00
1	first assistant engineer	165.00
1	second assistant engineer	145.00
1	third assistant engineer	130.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	chief steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
32	Total pay per month	2,592.50

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "LORENZO," OF LONDON.

"Ellerman," Wilson Line (Ltd.), 6,008 gross tons, 3,753 net tons; coal burner.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$118.46
1	second mate	96.11
1	third mate	78.23
1	radio operator	49.17
1	carpenter	64.82
5	apprentices (receive no wages).
1	chief engineer	158.69
1	second engineer	118.46
1	third engineer	96.11
1	fourth engineer	78.23
1	fifth engineer	73.76
1	chief steward	78.23
16		1,010.27

LASCARS—DECK DEPARTMENT.

1	boatswain (serang)	18.00
1	boatswain's mate	17.11
5	quartermasters (seacanny), at $16.50	82.50
23	able seamen, at $7.50	172.50
1	cleaner (lapas)	6.60
31		296.71

LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

1	first oiler (tindal)	11.10
1	second oiler (tindal)	9.00
1	No. 1 fireman	22.50
1	No. 2 fireman	13.20
1	No. 3 fireman	11.10
1	No. 4 fireman	10.50
1	donkey man	10.50
32	firemen, at $9	288.00
11	coal passers, at $7.20	79.20
50		455.10

LASCARS—STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

1	cook	25.50
1	second cook	22.50
1	third cook	13.50
4	boys, at $10.50	42.00
7		103.50
104	Total pay per month	1,865.58

On basis of pound sterling=$4.47.
On basis of rupee=30 cents.

—

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, September 7, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Sabotawan," cargo ship, of New York (Shipping Board), 4,834 gross tons, 3,045 net tons, oil burner.

MEDITERRANEAN TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$160.00
1	second mate	140.00
1	third mate	125.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	carpenter-boatswain	65.00
6	able seamen, at $55	330.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $45	90.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
31	Total pay per month	2,492.50

—

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, August 14, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Rotarian," cargo ship, of Tacoma (Shipping Board), 4,747 gross tons, 2,925 net tons, oil burner.

WEST COAST OF SOUTH AMERICA TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$160.00
1	second mate	140.00
1	third mate	125.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	boatswain and carpenter	65.00
6	able seamen, at $55	330.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	purser	90.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
32	Total pay per month	2,572.50

—

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, August 19, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Norlina," cargo ship, of New York, 4,596 gross tons, 2,840 net tons, oil burner.

EUROPEAN TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$135.00
1	second mate	115.00
1	third mate	95.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	carpenter	55.00
1	boatswain	50.00
6	able seamen, at $45	270.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	185.00
1	first assistant engineer	135.00
1	second assistant engineer	115.00
1	third assistant engineer	95.00
3	oilers, at $50	150.00
3	firemen, at $47.50	142.50
2	wipers, at $40	80.00
1	steward	95.00
1	cook	80.00
1	galley boy	45.00
3	messmen, at $40	120.00
32	Total pay per month	2,132.50

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, September 2, 1922.

BRITISH SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Kazembe," cargo ship, of North Shields (Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.).

(4,676 gross tons, 2,938 net tons; coal burner.)

EAST INDIA TRADE.

		British money per month.	American money per month.
		£. s.
1	First mate	21 10	$95.99
1	Second mate	18 0	80.28
1	Third mate	14 10	64.67
[1]1	Radio operator	1 0	4.46
1	Chief engineer	30 10	136.03
1	First assistant engineer	23 10	104.81
1	Second assistant engineer	18 0	80.28
1	Third assistant engineer	14 10	64.67
1	Fourth assistant engineer	13 10	60.21
1	Carpenter	13 0	57.98
1	Chief steward	15 0	66.90
[2]4	Apprentices	.. ..	.....
15	Total	183 0	816.18
	LASCARS—DECK DEPARTMENT.	Rupees per month.
4	Quartermasters (seacanny), at 55 rupees	220	@$15.95=63.80
1	Boatswain (serang)	60	17.40
1	First mate (tindal)	37	10.73
1	Second mate (tindal)	30	8.70
1	Cassab	30	8.70
1	Winchman	28	8.12
4	Seamen, at 25 rupees	100	@7.25=29.00
2	Seamen, at 23 rupees	46	@6.67=13.34
1	Seaman	22	6.38
3	Seamen, at 20 rupees	60	@5.80=17.40
2	Seamen, at 18 rupees	36	@5.22=10.44
1	Tapass (cleaner)	22	6.38
22		691	200.39
37	Carried forward (American money)	.....	1,016.57
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
1	Serang	60	17.40
1	First tindal	35	10.15
1	Second tindal	30	8.70
1	Third tindal	28	8.12
1	Cassab	28	8.12
3	Donkey men and oilers, at 28 rupees	84	@8.12=24.36
12	Firemen, at 23 rupees	276	@6.67=80.04
6	Trimmers, at 18 rupees	108	@5.22=31.32
26	Total	649	188.21
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.	Hongkong dollars per month.
1	Fireman	25	13.50
1	Storekeeper	25	13.50
2	Total	50	27.00
	LASCARS—STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.	Rupees per month.
1	Cook	75	21.75
1	Second cook	40	11.60
1	Pantryman	34	9.86
5	Boys, at 34 rupees	170	@9.86=49.30
8	Total	319	92.51
73	Total pay per month	.....	1,324.29

[1] Balance paid by Marconi Co. [2] Stand wireless watches.

Pound sterling=$4.46.
Rupee=29 cents.
Hongkong dollar=54 cents.

APPENDIX D.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, July 26, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Independence Hall," cargo ship, of Philadelphia (Shipping Board), 5,050 gross tons, 3,076 net tons, oil burner.

EUROPEAN TRADE.

	Pay per month.
1 first mate	$165.00
1 second mate	145.00
1 third mate	120.00
1 radio operator	90.00
1 boatswain	65.00
6 able seamen, at $55	330.00
2 ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1 chief engineer	240.00
1 first assistant engineer	165.00
1 second assistant engineer	145.00
1 third assistant engineer	130.00
3 oilers, at $65	195.00
3 water tenders, at $65	195.00
3 firemen, at $57.50	$172.50
2 wipers, at $50	100.00
1 steward	105.00
1 cook	90.00
1 baker	70.00
3 mess boys, at $35	105.00
34 Total pay per month	2,707.50

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, August 17, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship, steel, "Seafarer," cargo ship, of New York, 5,685 gross tons, 3,450 net tons, oil burner.

ATLANTIC-PACIFIC TRADE.

	Pay per month.
1 first mate	$165.00
1 second mate	140.00
1 third mate	125.00
1 junior third mate	100.00
1 radio operator	90.00
1 carpenter	70.00
1 boatswain	65.00
7 able seamen, at $47.50	332.50
2 ordinary seamen, at $35	70.00
1 chief engineer	285.00
1 first assistant engineer	165.00
1 second assistant engineer	140.00
1 third assistant engineer	125.00
1 junior third assistant engineer	70.00
1 storekeeper	55.00
3 oilers, at $55	165.00
3 firemen, at $50	150.00
3 wipers, at $40	120.00
1 steward	105.00
1 cook	90.00
1 second cook and baker	70.00
2 messmen, at $40	80.00
2 mess boys, at $30	60.00
38 Total pay per month	2,837.50

25 Americans.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, September 11, 1922.

BRITISH SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Matoppo," cargo ship, of London (Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.).

(5,280 gross tons, 3,420 net tons; coal burner.)

SOUTH AFRICAN TRADE.

		British money per month.	American money per month.
		£ s.
1	First mate	24 10	$109.27
1	Second mate	21 0	93.66
1	Third mate	17 10	78.05
[1]1	Radio operator	0 1	.22
[1]1	Second radio operator	0 1	.22
1	Carpenter	14 10	64.67
1	Boatswain	13 10	60.21
7	Able seamen, at £12 6s	86 2	@$54.84=383.88
1	Able seaman	12 0	53.52
1	.....do	10 4	45.48
2	Able seamen, at £10	20 0	@44.60= 89.20
1	Ordinary seaman	5 10	24.53
1	Chief engineer	35 10	158.33
1	First assistant engineer	26 10	118.19
1	Second assistant engineer	21 10	95.89
1	Third assistant engineer	17 10	78.05
1	Fourth assistant engineer	16 10	73.59
1	Chief steward	16 10	73.59
25	Total	358 18	1,600.55
	LASCARS—DECK DEPARTMENT.	Rupees per month.
4	Quartermasters (seacanny), at 55 rupees	220	@15.95=63.89
1	Serang (boatswain)	60	17.40
1	Tindal (second boatswain)	37	10.73
1	Cassab	30	8.70
4	Sailors, at 25 rupees	100	@7.25=29.00
4	Sailors, at 22 rupees	88	@6.38=25.52
4	Sailors, at 21 rupees	84	@6.09=24.36
1	Sailor	20	5.80
1	Bhandary	25	7.25
1	Tapass	22	6.38
22	Total	686	198.94
47	Carried forward (American money)	.....	1,799.49
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
1	Serang	60	17.40
1	Tindal	35	10.15
1	Second Tindal	30	8.70
2	Donkey men, at 28 rupees	56	@8.12=16.24
3	Greasers, at 26 rupees	78	@7.54=22.62

[1] Balance paid by Marconi Co.

Steamship "Matoppo," cargo ship, of London, etc.—Continued.

SOUTH AFRICAN TRADE—continued.

		British money per month.	American money per month.
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT—continued.	Rupees per month.
12	Firemen, at 23 rupees	276	@$6.67=$80.04
9	Coal passers, at 18 rupees	162	@ 5.22= 46.98
1	Bhandary	25	7.25
30	Total	722	209.38
	LASCARS—STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.
1	Cook	75	21.75
1	Second cook	40	11.60
4	Waiters, at 35 rupees	140	@10.15=40.60
1	Pantryman	35	10.15
1	Mess boy	34	9.86
1	Cassab	28	8.12
9	Total	352	102.08
86	Total pay per month		2,110.95

Pound sterling=$4.46.
Rupee=29 cents.

APPENDIX E.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, July 28, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Luxpalile," cargo ship, of Philadelphia (Shipping Board), 4,929 gross tons, 3,051 net tons, oil burner.

EUROPEAN TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$165.00
1	second mate	145.00
1	third mate	130.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	boatswain	70.00
5	able seamen, at $55	275.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	240.00
1	first assistant engineer	165.00
1	second assistant engineer	145.00
1	third assistant engineer	130.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
2	water tenders, at $65	130.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook and baker	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
32	Total pay per month	2,602.50

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, August 18, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Satartia," cargo ship, of Philadelphia (Shipping Board), 4,994 gross tons, 3,021 net tons, oil burner.

EAST INDIA TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$160.00
1	second mate	140.00
1	third mate	125.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	boatswain	65.00
7	able seamen, at $55	385.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	water tenders, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	45.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
35	Total pay per month	2,707.50

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, July 30, 1922.

AMERICAN SHIP WAGES.

Steamship "Winona," cargo ship, of Philadelphia (Shipping Board), 4,964 gross tons, 3,034 net tons, oil burner.

MEDITERRANEAN TRADE.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$160.00
1	second mate	140.00
1	third mate	125.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	boatswain	65.00
5	able seamen, at $55	275.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
2	water tenders, at $65	130.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
1	steward	105.00
1	chief cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
1	purser	100.00
31	Total pay per month	2,557.50

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, August 27, 1922.

BRITISH SHIP WAGES.

Ssteamship "Swazi," cargo ship, of London (Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.)

(4,940 gross tons, 3,174 net tons; coal burner.)

EAST INDIA TRADE.

		British money per month.	American money per month.
		£. s.
1	First mate	20 10	$91.23
1	Second mate	16 10	73.43
1	Third mate	13 0	57.85
[1] 2	Radio operators, at £1	2 0	@$4.45=8.90
1	Chief engineer	28 10	126.83
1	Second engineer	22 10	100.13
1	Third engineer	16 10	73.43
1	Fourth engineer	13 0	57.85
1	Fifth engineer	12 0	53.40
1	Steward	14 10	64.53
11	Total	159 0	707.58
	LASCARS—DECK DEPARTMENT.	Rupees per month.
1	Fourth mate (serang)	75	22.50
1	Boatswain (tindal)	46	13.80
1	Second boatswain	37	11.10
1	Winchman	36	10.80
1	Carpenter	120	36.00
4	Quartermasters (seacanny), at 69 rupees	276	@20.70=82.80
4	Seamen, at 31 rupees	124	@9.30=37.20
4	Seamen, at 28 rupees	112	@8.40=33.60
2	Seamen, at 25 rupees	50	@7.50=15.00
3	Seamen, at 22 rupees	66	@6.60=19.80
1	Storekeeper	36	10.80
23	Total	978	293.40
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
1	Serang	75	22.50
1	Tindal	44	13.20
1	Second tindal	37	11.10
2	Donkey men, at 35 rupees	70	@10.50=21.00
3	Oilers, at 32 rupees	96	@9.60=28.80
13	Firemen, at 30 rupees	390	@9.00=117.00
15	Trimmers, at 24 rupees	360	@7.20=108.00
1	Casab	35	10.50
37	Total	1,107	332.10
71	Carried forward (American money)		1,333.08
	LASCARS—STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.
1	Steward	90	27.00
1	Chief cook	85	25.50
1	Second cook	45	13.50
1	Pantryman	45	13.50
1	Messroom boy	35	10.50
3	Galleymen, at 30 rupees	90	@ 9.00=27.00
1	Messman	35	10.50
1	Tapass	29	8.70
10	Total	454	136.20
81	Total pay per month		1,469.28

[1] Balance paid by Marconi Co.

Pound sterling=$4.45.
Rupee=30 cents.

APPENDIX F.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 1½, 1923.

Comparison of pay rolls, American and British cargo ships, Far East trade.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "STANLEY," OF SEATTLE.

(6,463 gross tons, 4,712 net tons; oil burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$165.00
1	second mate	145.00
1	third mate	130.00
1	radio operator	90.00

		Pay per month.
1	carpenter	$70.00
1	boatswain	65.00
6	able seamen, at $55	330.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	240.00
1	first assistant engineer	165.00
1	second assistant engineer	145.00
1	third assistant engineer	130.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
2	wipers, at $50	100.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
32	Total pay per month	2,592.50

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "KENTUCKY," OF NORTH SHIELDS.

(6,601 gross tons, 4,250 net tons; coal burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$123.76
1	second mate	98.07
1	third mate	63.05
1	chief engineer	165.79
1	first assistant engineer	114.42
1	second assistant engineer	98.07
1	third assistant engineer	81.73
1	fourth assistant engineer	77.06
1	steward	81.73
9		903.68
	LASCARS—DECK DEPARTMENT.
1	serang	11.66
1	tindal	8.82
1	cassab	8.19
4	quartermasters, at $9.45	37.80
9	sailors, at $7.25	65.25
1	bhandary	7.88
1	tapass	5.67
18		145.27
	LASCARS—ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
1	serang	18.90
1	tindal	11.03
1	second tindal	9.45
1	cassab	8.82
3	donkey men, at $8.82	26.46
16	firemen, at $7.25	116.00
6	trimmers, at $5.67	34.02
1	bhandary	7.88
30		232.56
	LASCARS—STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.
1	cook	23.63
1	second cook	12.60
1	pantryman	10.71
2	galley servants, at $10.71	21.42
1	mess boy	10.71
6		79.07
63	Total pay per month	1,360.58

On basis of pound sterling=$4.67.
On basis of rupee=31½ cents.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 20, 1923.

Comparison of pay rolls, American and British cargo ships, European trade.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "EASTERN PILOT," OF SEATTLE.

(3,162 gross tons, 1,924 net tons; coal burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$160.00
1	second mate	140.00
1	third mate	125.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	boatswain	65.00
4	able seamen, at $55	220.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	230.00
1	first assistant engineer	160.00
1	second assistant engineer	140.00
1	third assistant engineer	125.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
6	firemen, at $57.50	345.00
3	coal passers, at $50	150.00
1	steward and cook	105.00
1	second steward and cook	70.00
3	messboys, at $35	105.00
32	Total pay per month	2,505.00

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "WOLDINGHAM," OF LONDON.

(3,043 gross tons, 1,938 net tons; coal burner.)

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$109.75
1	second mate	93.40
1	carpenter	67.72
1	boatswain	63.05
8	able seamen, at $56.04	448.32
1	chief engineer	170.46
1	first assistant engineer	109.75
1	second assistant engineer	95.74
1	donkeyman	$63.05
8	firemen and trimmers, at $58.38	467.04
1	steward	77.06
1	cook	72.39
1	engineer's boy	23.35
8	boys, at $0.23	.69
30	Total pay per month	1,861.77

On basis of pound sterling=$4.67.

APPENDIX G.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 12, 1923.

Comparison of pay rolls, American and British cargo ships, Far East trade.

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "ENDICOTT," OF SEATTLE.

6,319 gross tons, 4,720 net tons, oil burner.

AMERICAN SHIP, ALL-WHITE CREW.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$165.00
1	second mate	145.00
1	third mate	130.00
1	radio operator	90.00
1	carpenter	70.00
1	boatswain	65.00
6	able seamen, at $55	330.00
2	ordinary seamen, at $40	80.00
1	chief engineer	240.00
1	first assistant engineer	165.00
1	second assistant engineer	145.00
1	third assistant engineer	130.00
3	oilers, at $65	195.00
3	firemen, at $57.50	172.50
3	wipers, at $50	150.00
1	steward	105.00
1	cook	90.00
1	second cook	70.00
3	mess boys, at $35	105.00
1	purser	100.00
34	Total pay per month	2,742.50

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "CITY OF MELBOURNE," OF LIVERPOOL.

(6,630 gross tons, 4,125 net tons; coal burner.)

BRITISH SHIP PART WHITE, CHIEFLY LASCAR CREW.

		Pay per month.
1	first mate	$121.42
1	second mate	102.74
1	third mate	86.40
1	chief engineer	165.79
1	first assistant engineer	119.09
1	second assistant engineer	102.74
1	third assistant engineer	86.40
1	fourth assistant engineer	81.73
4	quartermasters, at $58.38	233.52
1	steward	81.73
1	storekeeper	63.05
14		1,244.61
	LASCARS, DECK DEPARTMENT.
1	serang	11.97
1	tindal	8.82
1	cassab	6.30
14	sailors, at $7.25	101.50
1	cook	7.88
1	pantry boy	.95
1	pantry boy	1.26
1	carpenter	37.36
21		176.04
	LASCARS, ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
1	serang	18.90
1	tindal	11.03
1	second tindal	9.45
1	third tindal	8.82
1	cassab	8.82
1	donkeyman	8.82
3	greasers, at $8.19	24.57
10	firemen, at $7.25	72.50
9	trimmers, at $5.67	51.03
1	bhandary	7.88
1	topass	6.93
1	mess boy	10.71
1	cook and baker	23.63
1	second cook and baker	12.60
1	galley boy	10.71
34		286.40
68	Total pay per month	1,707.05

On basis of pound sterling=$4.67.
On basis of rupee=31½ cents.

APPENDIX H.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
DIVISION OF INFORMATION,
Washington.

[Release Thursday morning papers, February 8, 1923.]

ADDRESS OF EDWARD C. PLUMMER, COMMISSIONER, UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD, AT THE EVENING SESSION OF THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL MERCHANT MARINE ASSOCIATION, AT THE WASHINGTON HOTEL, WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 7, 1923.

Mr. President, members of the National Merchant Marine Association, and friends, it is a special pleasure to address you at this time, not only because I know and have for years followed with increasing admiration the work of President RANSDELL, who is a statesman ever keeping in mind the interests of all the people in all the States of this Union instead of local fragments, but also because this National Merchant Marine Association is doing an educational work of measureless value to our country.

For years propaganda in the interest of foreign ships, which had found such a treasure house in the foreign commerce of the United States, pursued a devious course among our people with little difficulty. Now and then there was a partial exposure of this influence; but it was when the National Merchant Marine Association began its work of presenting actual facts to the whole American public—began to reveal the nature and sources of insidious attacks upon American shipping—that the citizens of the United States were given an opportunity to know the whole truth, were awakened to the vast national interests which this question of an American merchant marine involves, and to the fact that the commercial independence of this country, to say nothing of our national security, demands an adequate fleet of merchant ships under the Stars and Stripes.

It is an honor—a great honor—to address men who are performing such notably patriotic services as these. You are men who deal with facts. Therefore I shall not indulge in argument; I shall not discuss theories; I shall not attempt to impose personal views; I shall do exactly what the title to my address indicates that I propose to do here—I shall discuss "Shipping facts."

In doing this it is important for us constantly to keep in mind the controlling truth that we must deal with our shipping and our shipping conditions as they are, not as they might be. This is a fact which too many would-be illuminators of maritime problems overlook. There is no sense in discussing what we might do if we were permitted by law to man our ships with Chinese or other inexpensive labor; to ignore food and sanitary regulations; to have our vessels foreign in everything except the name—and have even the name painted abroad. We must take things as they are. We must recognize American standards. We must talk as Americans. Foreigners know this, and therefore we find those competitors agreeing that only by Government aid can American ships be enabled to exist in the foreign trade of this country.

This is the distinct statement of the great British authority—Lloyd's. This is the declaration to be found in the British Fairplay's summary of shipping views with which it opened the New Year. This is a fact which every practical shipping man knows. And therefore the only practical question left for discussion is whether or not it is of importance to have American ships engaged in our foreign trade. If this question be answered in the affirmative, Government aid becomes mandatory. There is absolutely no escape from it. Anyone who denies this conclusion willfully ignores the truth.

Now, is it of national importance to have American ships engage in the foreign trade of this country? It happens that the answer to this question can be taken in abundance from foreign sources and therefore from sources which opponents of American shipping, who generally—consciously or unconsciously—reflect and accept the foreign view, can hardly fail to recognize.

The recent report of Sir John E. Thornycroft, appearing in the British Lloyd's, reviewing the situation as he found it in Brazil during a recent visit there, speaks volumes. To use his own words:

"The Americans are pushing everywhere and taking control. Large orders for locomotives, for coal-plant grabs, etc., have recently gone to the United States, and a new steel factory is equipped with American plant, while it is probable that large orders for electrifying the street railways will also go to America. Germany, of course, has always had a watchful eye on Brazil and is pushing her wares there. There is still room for British enterprise, and we trust this will not be lacking even to the extent of giving the long credit which the present low exchange makes necessary.

"It would be apparent to British exporters that in Brazil there is a market capable of great development if they will set about exploiting it with energy and resourcefulness, as they have now every inducement to do."

This growth of American business in South America, which has given such employment to Americans, is wholly—mark, I say wholly—due to the fact that since the war we have put American ships into the service between those countries and the United States. There had been ships plying between Brazil and the United States for 50 years, but they were foreign ships, and the foreigners got the business which is now coming to us. That is the statement of Sir John, and surely no opponent of American shipping would think of questioning the word of a titled Englishman!

Take the case of our services from the Pacific States to the east coast of South America. Before our vessels were put on that route business there was negligible. We started with freighters and small cargoes. The business sought by the Shipping Board has so developed that already we have supplemented those freighters with combination freight and passenger ships, and the growth of this business, constant and healthy, is of great benefit not only to the people of the United States but to the people of South America whom we serve.

Adequate water services between two countries are always beneficial to both countries, and what both of our South American lines have accomplished is a benefit to the South American countries served as well as to the United States.

Now, it is a common, and suspiciously consistent, statement made by opponents of American shipping (and among the opponents of American shipping I, of course, include those who profess to favor American shipping but whose actions invariably contradict their words) that foreigners always have supplied us with adequate shipping in international trade, and therefore that there is no need of adding American ships to the fleets in international service.

Of course, the statement is false. Of course, any man who looks into the facts knows the statement is false. Of course, this falsity has been exposed repeatedly. But a characteristic of both the conscious as well as the unconscious opponents of American shipping is that a mere truth never interferes with the continuance of their false declarations. However, once more I will call attention, as so many others have done, to the lie which this statement of adequate service to this country by foreign ships carries.

Only recently Senator BROOKHART of Iowa put into the RECORD the fact that American farmers have this year been securing lower freight rates on their grain than those enjoyed prior to the World War. Now, when it is remembered that the cost of operating all ships, foreign as well as domestic, has been greatly increased since the World War; that, logically, the grain rates across the Atlantic would this year have been far higher than they were before the war, just as other transportation costs are higher; that if these Atlantic grain rates now were 50 per cent higher than they were before the war, they would then be nothing more than on an equality with rates which foreigners charged us before the war, it will be understood what a tremendous saving this low freight rate, to which the Senator has so properly called attention, has meant to the American farmer, and what vast sums of money foreign shipping men took away from Americans while they controlled our ocean transportation.

For the only reason assigned by anyone, and the one reason which the foreign shipping men unanimously give, for these "excessively low rates"—as they choose to term them—is the surpluses of ocean tonnage, which surpluses are charged directly to that vast increase in the amount of American merchant shipping created by the war.

Lloyd's List has repeatedly discussed this feature and shown that the increase in American shipping is almost identical with the amount of world surplus tonnage now afloat. Now, it is obvious that since the farmer this year has been getting his grain carried at figures which, in effect, are 50 per cent less than the figures charged by the foreign shipping men prior to the World War, that the foreign shipping men then were not giving the American shipper the cheap rates and the cheap service which they could have given him if they had had to—that it was only when American ships forced foreign ships to reduce their rates that they made these reductions, therefore facts clearly give the lie to the foreign claim that foreign ships always gave Americans adequate services at low rates.

Smoke screeners may attempt to divert attention from this "knock-down" fact by arguing the problem of whether or not such low rates are profitable to the shipowners; but as long as foreign ships continue to congest our harbors seeking this business at these low figures, and the principal foreign lines engaged in it continue somehow to pay 10 per cent dividends, most real Americans will be willing to let the American farmer get the benefit of these low rates which American ships have made possible and let the foreigner and his friends in the United States do the arguing.

Since the price of export grain is made in Liverpool, the American farmer does get the benefit of low Atlantic freight rates; and it's more important for Americans to guard the interests of the American farmer than it is to guard the interests of the foreign shipowner.

This is not theory; this is a fact, and a fact brought before the public by an eminent Senator who is not to be charged with being an advocate of subsidies to American vessels.

Now take a specific case that happened only a few years before the World War and which shows the kind of service Americans received and will receive from foreign ships when there are no American ships to insure us fair treatment. The Government of Argentina was in the market for 50 locomotives. Americans and Englishmen were the close bidders on that great contract. On the actual price of these locomotives the Americans were the lowest bidders. But we had no American steamship service to South America then. Both the British and the American locomotive builders had to depend on British steamers to carry those locomotives to South America, and it happened that the same British company operated the line from the United States and the line from England by which these locomotives must be transported.

Although the distance that the British locomotives must be carried was some 500 miles greater than the distance the American locomotives must be carried, those British steamship people named the American builders a rate $3 a ton higher than what they offered to these British locomotive builders. That extra charge of $3 a ton defeated the American manufacturers and gave this contract to their competitors. If American ships had been in the service then, as they are now, we would have had that contract.

Now, when it is recalled that a locomotive is practically all labor, it can be seen what the lack of American shipping in that single instance cost the workmen of this country. And that is only one of many cases.

The four-volume report of evidence and findings resulting from the investigation conducted by the Merchant Marine Committee, of which former Secretary of Commerce Alexander was chairman in 1914, gives a very good picture of shipping conditions as they were before the war. "Fighting ships"—and that is what the owners of those craft themselves called them—which crushed all would-be competitors in ocean areas which the English, German, and French combination had reserved to itself, are not the best evidences of an undying love and affection for the merchant marine of this country or of a desire to give our merchants and our exporters a fair chance in the commercial marts of the world.

But now comes a proposition, based on alleged unprofitable freight rates of which American citizens have been receiving the benefit, which has far-reaching possibilities and deserves immediate attention.

Foreign shipping authorities are busily preparing the public for an increase in freight rates. They apparently consider the American competition as temporary; they repeatedly refer to the time when the people of the United States will "weary of taxing themselves for the benefit of a special class" and they—the foreigners—will be able to secure "remunerative rates" for shipping.

Of course, the proper solution of the problem, even taking it as they present it, is in an enlarged employment of the more economical ships, rather than in charging increased rates so that uneconomical ships may be made profitable. That uneconomical ships are in the service is admitted. While attempting to propose a solution of the problem which will confront foreign ships if Government aid shall make it possible for American ships to engage in the foreign trade of the United States, English statisticians analyzed the merchant fleet of England and classified fully one-quarter of the fleet as really obsolete. They also admit the great economies which are already demonstrated as practicable both in type and operation of the modern ship.

American competition on the ocean will compel the giving of those transportation benefits to Americans. The question then will be not "How much will the traffic bear?" but "How low a rate of transportation is it possible for us to make?" Compelling the foreign shipping man constantly to face this latter question is worth more in actual cash to the people of the United States than any amount which any form of Government aid to United States vessels could cost.

Proof of this statement is right at hand. Already those Shipping Board steamers running to South America have compelled our British competitors to build for that service three 10,000-ton Diesel-engined ships. They know they must make the lowest possible rates if they are to share in this great ocean business of the United States, and these new ships can be operated on those long runs at less than two-thirds of the cost of corresponding steamships. That is what we have compelled them to do, to the mutual benefit of the people of those South American countries and of the United States.

But this is only the beginning. Ocean service is on the threshold of as great a change as that which followed the advent of steam. Just as steam, and the consequent development of economical water transportation, developed an international business which raised the merchant fleet of England from 3,000,000 to 21,000,000 tons, so those coming economies in ocean transportation by making possible exchange of commodities which heretofore have not been able to stand the traffic charge will create employment for a far greater fleet than the world ever has known, and in that fleet the American ships must have their proper place.

Fortunately we have hundreds of ships whose hulls are perfect and which, through Government aid, can be put into the trade as needed. Temporarily it means taking some business from our competitors. Ultimately it means more business for all the ships of the world.

Shipping is a means, not an end. It means foreign markets for the people who have ships. Merchant shipping is what enabled England to build up such a tremendous world trade; made her commercial empire possible. Merchant shipping is what gave England and Germany their dominating commercial influence in South America before the war, to the practical exclusion from that continent, so logically associated with us, of Americans, who then had no ships of their own. The changed conditions there, brought about by the services which the Shipping Board has established, have demonstrated anew, and in a most striking manner, how national ships develop national trade. Now, it is for Americans to act on the knowledge they possess and not be misled in a matter of such vast commercial importance to our country by deluding utterances from those who either have omitted to examine facts or who prefer to accept foreign theories regardless of their effect upon the people of the United States.

This truth the National Merchant Marine Association is doing much to bring home to the people of the United States. May it never falter in this great patriotic work!

APPENDIX I.

[Extract from speech of President William Howard Taft, made in Seattle, Saturday, September 30, 1909.]

MERCHANT MARINE NEEDS AID.

China is waking up. She is approaching a period of development that can not but increase her trade and augment her importance as a customer and as a trader with this country, while Japan and all other oriental countries are moving onward with giant steps in the commercial competition of the world. The many prophecies that have been made that in the next half century the commercial progress of the world is to be seen more decidedly in the Pacific than anywhere else are certainly well founded; and under those conditions it behooves us Americans interested in pushing our trade into every quarter of the globe to take steps to repair a condition that exists in respect to our merchant marine that is humiliating to our national pride and most burdensome to us in competition with other nations in obtaining international trade.

We maintain a protective tariff to encourage our manufacturing, farming, and mining industries at home and within our jurisdiction, but when we assume to enter into competition on the high seas in trade between international ports, our jurisdiction to control that trade, so far as the vessels of other nations are concerned, of course ceases, and the question which we have to meet is how with the greater wages that we pay, with the more stringent laws that we enact for the protection of our sailors, and with the protective system making a difference in the price between the necessaries to be used in the maintenance of a merchant marine, we shall enable that merchant marine to compete with the marine of the rest of the world.

$35,000,000 PAID IN SUBSIDY.

This is not the only question, either, for it will be found on an examination of the methods pursued in other countries with respect to their merchant marine, that there is now extended by way of subsidies by the various governments to their respective ships upward of $35,000,000, and this offers another means by which in the competition the American merchant ship is driven out of business and finds itself utterly unable to bid against its foreign competitors.

Not only this, but so inadequate is the American merchant marine to-day that in seeking auxiliary ships with which to make our Navy an instrument of offense or defense, or, indeed, in sending it around the world as a fleet, we have to call on vessels sailing under a foreign flag to carry our coal and to supply the other needs of such a journey. Were we compelled to go into a war to-day, our merchant marine lacks altogether a sufficient tonnage of auxiliary unarmed ships absolutely necessary to the proper operation of the Navy, and were a war to come on we should have to purchase such vessels from a foreign country, and this might, under the laws governing neutrals, be most difficult.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

The trade between the eastern ports of the United States and South America is a most valuable trade, and now equals something like $250,000,000; but European nations, appreciating the growing character of this trade, have, by subsidies and other means of encouragement, so increased the sailings of large and well-equipped vessels from Europe to the ports of South America as visibly to affect the proportion of trade which is coming to the United States by the very limited service of a direct character between New York and South American ports.

I need not tell you of the inadequacy of the American shipping marine on the Pacific coast and the growing power for commercial purposes in this regard of the Empire of Japan. Japan is one of the most active and generous countries in the matter of subsidies to its merchant marine that we have, and the effect is only too visible in an examination of the statistics. For this reason it seems to me that there is no subject to which Congress can better devote its attention in the coming session than the passage of a bill which shall encourage our merchant marine in such a way as to establish American lines directly between New York and other eastern ports and South American ports, and between our Pacific coast ports and the Orient and the Philippines. We earn a profit from our foreign mails of from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 a year. The application of that amount would be quite sufficient to put on a satisfactory basis two or three oriental lines and several lines from the east to South America. Of course, we are familiar with the argument that this would be contributing to private companies out of the Treasury of the United States; but we are thus contributing in various ways on similar principles in effect, both by our protective tariff law, by our river and harbor bills, and by our Reclamation Service. We are not putting money into the pockets of the shipowners, but we are giving them money with which they can compete for a reasonable profit only with the merchant marine of the world.

THINKS COUNTRY IS READY FOR SUBSIDY.

From my observation I think the country is ready now to try such a law and to witness its effect in a comparatively small way upon the foreign trade of the United States. If it is successful, experience will show how the policy can best be expanded and enlarged and the American commercial flag be made to wave upon the seas as it did before our Civil War. It is true that our foreign trade is great and increasing, and this without the merchant marine, but it is also true that the ownership of a merchant marine greatly enhances the opportunities for extending trade for the merchants of the country having such a merchant marine.

There is no part of the country more interested in the development of this policy than Seattle, Wash., and the whole Pacific coast. With the enormous energy and potential force that you have developed in your community here for trade and business expansion, it can not have escaped the foresight of your business captains that the development of a merchant marine means the growth of Seattle into a port of such importance that hardly the lively imagination of her ambitious citizens can compass it.

APPENDIX J.

WHY THE SOUTH SHOULD FAVOR SUBSIDY FOR AN AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Of all sections of this country the South preeminently should be active and aggressive in favor of the development of an American merchant marine, and this can only be brought about by an adequate subvention or subsidy to American ships. The South has three-fifths of the coast line of the United States; it has vast potentialities for the development of foreign commerce. For the fiscal year 1921 the total exports through southern ports amounted to $2,294,000,000, which largely exceeded the total value of exports from the United States for any year prior to 1913, and were nearly double the total value of foreign exports for the entire country as late as 1900. For the same year the value of imports at southern ports amounted to $391,489,000, giving a total commerce in and out of over $2,800,000,000. The exports from five leading southern customs districts for that year amounted to $1,867,000,000, as compared with a total of $356,000,000 from the entire Pacific coast. The exports, for instance, from Galveston for that year were $550,000,000, or nearly $200,000,000 more than the total exports for the entire Pacific coast. The exports from New Orleans that year were $614,000,000, or nearly four times the total exports from San Francisco, or $240,000,000 more than the combined exports from San Francisco, Los Angeles, and San Diego. These figures, startling as they are, as indicative of the enormous expansion at southern ports, are merely suggestive of the possibilities of foreign commerce through these ports. They do not, of course, include the enormous coastwise commerce to and from all of the southern ports. They merely serve to show what the South is beginning to do in the way of exporting its own products through its own ports, and how the West is also seeking an outlet through the South. Every dollar of foreign trade through southern ports is an argument in favor of the development of our own merchant marine.

It seems scarcely conceivable that the people of this country, with its resources so boundless as to stagger the mind, with a growth already great enough to give us one-half of the world's railroad mileage, one-half of the world's coal and iron and steel output, with other things in proportion, should for one moment be satisfied to permit our flag to be driven from the high seas.

"Commerce follows the flag," is an old saying as true to-day as when uttered. Unless our flag floats in all the ports of the world the respect for it will be lessened on the part of other nations and our power to command the trade of other countries will be greatly decreased. The ships of every other nation give first attention to the trade of their own people, regardless of all denials which may be made by foreign shipowners. As a German steamship line some years ago, in fighting the effort of this country to develop a merchant marine, was found by congressional investigation to be carrying on its pay roll a Washington agent of one of the leading press associations, in order to mislead the public as to the need of an American merchant marine, so influences of many kinds are at work to-day to mislead the people of the country and to fill many newspapers with propaganda, the origin of which some of them do not themselves understand, against the necessity of a subvention for the upbuilding of a merchant marine. Without a merchant marine this Nation would lose many of its commercial potentialities and would be, in time of peace and in time of war, at the mercy of other countries, and its flag would be despised by the peoples of many nations because it did not have the courage to see that the Stars and Stripes floated in every port and on every sea.

The South, of all sections, should unite in favor of legislation for the maintenance of American shipping against the foreign shipping interests which are vigorous and aggressive in trying to prevent the passage of such a measure.

APPENDIX K.

The real problem of the American merchant marine is very simple. This is overwhelmingly a protectionist country. It is not a free-trade country. When the Democratic Party comes into power it carefully reduces tariff rates. It does not efface them. Its revenue duties leave substantial protection to every American industry exposed to foreign competition. The Republican Party systematically places high duties on foreign products that come into competition with our own products. This has been the policy of the United States for more than a hundred years.

In the first 60 years of our national existence overseas shipping was protected exactly as were all other American industries—by preferential tariff rates, and in addition by preferential tonnage rates. During these 60 years the United States was one of the greatest and undoubtedly the most efficient and successful maritime country in the world.

Gradually these discriminating duties, initiated in 1789, were given up under so-called treaties of reciprocity with other Governments. But these other Governments, and notably Great Britain, then proceeded to subsidize a part or all of their new steamship lines. The United States, except for a brief period from 1847 to 1856, has not in a general way subsidized any steamship services. That is to say, our overseas shipping, unlike all other internationally competitive industries, has for 60 years been without any actual protection by the Government. It is significant that our overseas shipping business under these conditions is the only American industry that has declined.

Our American shipowners and operators, though regarded as the most expert in the world, have been unable in these past 60 years to compete with the lower wages, aided by the subsidies and bounties of foreign Governments. Thus our sea shipping has been gradually driven from the ocean. In 1914, when the World War began, there were only six American ships in regular trans-Atlantic service, and only six American ships in trans-Pacific service to the Orient, under the American flag.

This condition had its inevitable result on American shipbuilding. For several years before the World War not one large steamer had been built in this country exclusively for the overseas trade.

The sole cause of the loss of our overseas shipping was that alone of all American competitive industries it was an absolutely unprotected industry.

The Republican national platforms had repeatedly declared for protection to American overseas shipping. Bills to carry out this solemn pledge had been repeatedly offered in Congress. They have all been defeated by narrow majorities because a certain number of Middle Western Senators and Representatives voted with virtually the solid body of the Democrats against any aid to the overseas merchant marine. This, in brief, is the history of our ocean shipping since the Civil War.

The World War, as you know, found the United States helpless to transport any appreciable part of its own export products in its own ships, when the ships of foreign governments that had been monopolizing our overseas carrying trade were largely withdrawn or interned, as was the case in the summer of 1914.

As a consequence freight rates were advanced to unheard-of figures by the few foreign ships that remained available for our ocean carrying. Secretary McAdoo, then the head of the Treasury Department, estimated that these arbitrarily advanced freight rates were costing the farmers of this country in particular at the rate of several hundred million dollars a year in the year 1915. Indeed, as you remember, some of our products could find no ships at all, and a severe blockade ensued on American railroads.

All this was one price which the American people were forced to pay for the incomprehensible neglect of the merchant marine by the national lawmakers.

Another price, and a very great and staggering one, was the $3,500,000,000 which we expended for the emergency construction of ships at a cost as high as $200 per dead-weight ton—ships which could have been built in this country before the war for from $50 to $65 a ton. All but a small part of this cost of war emergency ship construction could have been saved if the United States had given moderate, systematic aid to its merchant marine beforehand.

Now, the question that confronts the country is what to do in order that such an enormous penalty for the lack of a merchant shipping may never be incurred again. As we understand your suggestion, it is that the Government should continue the operation of the ships it now has and should continue to own and operate their own merchant marine.

May we submit that if this policy were adopted, to continue to own and operate the Government-owned merchant marine, it would fail to solve the question, because of the fact, which we fear you overlook, that a great part of our merchant marine engaged not only in coastwise commerce but in overseas trade is owned and operated at the present time by private American citizens and corporations.

On January 1, 1923, out of our total seagoing merchant marine of a total of 13,193,935 gross tons, the Government, through the Shipping Board, owned 7,350,643 tons, while 5,843,292 tons were held in private ownership. If from the Government-owned total of 7,350,643 tons there were stricken out, as there logically should be, the amount of war-built tonnage gravely defective in character and of no possible commercial use, it would be found that the Government-owned tonnage and the privately owned tonnage in our ocean-going fleet were practically equal. Therefore continued Government ownership and operation would solve the shipping problem only so far as a part of our ocean-going shipping is concerned.

Of the privately owned tonnage, the greater part is now engaged in the coastwise trade, where there is not and never has been foreign competition. But a very substantial part of the privately owned tonnage is struggling against heavy odds to live against the double competition of foreign ships, with their lower wages and, in some cases, their bounties and subsidies, and also against the competition of the Government-owned ships, whose deficits are made up out of the Public Treasury.

Permanent ownership and operation of Government-owned ships would in all probability finally destroy the private American investments in overseas shipping enterprises.

As the Government would presumably scarcely undertake to build any more ships, the result would be the extinction of American shipbuilding for overseas commerce and its dependence entirely on the modest demands of the coastwise trade. Such a condition as this would gravely menace our resources for national defense in time of a national emergency.

We do not believe that those Senators who urge continued private Government ownership and operation realize its disastrous effect upon those private American shipping companies which have been making a very earnest struggle to survive. Governmental competition imposed upon foreign competition would most certainly put an end to them and to all of our shipyards except those required for the purposes of domestic commerce.

In this connection we would like to emphasize the fact that it is the privately owned ships that are making relatively the best headway today against foreign competition, for the reason that it is the private lines that are operated with the greater economy and enterprise and show the better results from operation. It is estimated that $30,000,000 a year in shipping subsidies to privately owned ships and to the additional ships purchased by private owners from the Shipping Board would enable our merchant marine to increase and prosper in the foreign trade, while, on the other hand, the operation of that part of our merchant marine now Government owned is costing the country $50,000,000 a year.

There are two main methods by which the American merchant marine may be aided and protected in overseas trade. One is the former national policy of discriminating customs duties and tonnage dues, which was unquestionably effective in the first decades of our national history. But unfortunately, in order to apply these policies, it is necessary to ask for the amendment of all of our principal commercial treaties with foreign governments, which President Wilson and President Harding have successively refused to undertake.

The shipping subsidy policy, on the other hand, is the modern method of aid and encouragement to the merchant marines of the world as practiced in one form or degree or another by all foreign maritime governments. Great Britain subsidizes her principal lines of steamers through mail and admiralty payments. She has been doing this since 1839, when she began with the Cunard Line. Her total expenditures on mail, admiralty, and other forms of imperial encouragement are now stated to be nearly $10,000,000 a year. She is not paying an excessive sum, because she is realizing on her immense previous expenditures for this purpose. France has been paying as high as $13,000,000 a year; Italy is now proposing to pay about $10,000,000 a year; Japan has been paying from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 a year. All nations giving subsidy grant these payments under careful terms of law and contract, as it is proposed to do in the pending shipping bill. All of them continue the policy, with the conviction that it is wise and advantageous.

Some governments pay direct bounties of so much per ton or per horsepower as direct encouragement to shipbuilding. Others pay subsidies or bounties only for purposes of navigation. But the great fundamental fact may be stated that all maritime nations in the world, our own excepted, do follow a policy of frank protectionism by subsidy either to all of their steamship lines or to those of them that are regarded as of the greatest national value.

How can the United States, paying generally higher wages, offering more liberal subsistence to its officers and seamen, hope to prevail under a policy of free trade on the sea against the world-wide policy of subsidies or subvention? Our national experience in the past 60 years has absolutely proved that such an effort is impossible.

In the course of the present debate assertions have been made regarding provisions of the present shipping bill that are based on a grave misapprehension. It has been stated, for example, that the bill confers its benefits chiefly on the larger and faster passenger liners and discriminates against the purely cargo ships. It is true that a higher rate of subsidy or compensation is provided for fast steamers carrying the mails than for "tramp" ships which convey no mails or passengers. But this is based on the fact that the "tramp" steamers, with their relatively low capital costs and small crews, do not need so high a compensation as the faster and more costly liners, with greatly larger crews, to place them on a basis of equality in competition with foreigners.

We would urge that you read carefully the statement recently presented by Senator JONES, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

"Mr. President, it is true that the rate specified for the cargo ships is not as great in figures as that specified for the liners, and yet the experts before the committee testified that proportionately and relatively a greater benefit goes to the cargo ships than to the liners, because they are less expensive to operate, have smaller crews, and take less coal or oil, and so forth; so the fact that there is a higher rate of cents per ton for the liners than for the cargo ships does not show that more favors are rendered to the liner than to the cargo ship. As I said, the experts say that there is less favor to the liner proportionately and relatively than to the cargo ship; but the purpose of the subsidy payment to cargo ships is entirely to meet the difference in wages between the American ship and her foreign, particularly her British, competitor of like type and tonnage, because that is the main difference.

"The following is an exact comparison of wages paid on the American steamer Hog Island and the British steamer Cornish Point, of nearly equal dead-weight tonnage, the American ship being an economical oil burner and the British ship a coal burner, the American ship having a speed of 10 knots and the British ship a speed of 13 knots.

"Mr. President, I ask permission to print this table here. It shows the specific charges and rates. It shows that the difference in cost of American wages over the English wages per month is $735, or per year $8,820. In other words, it costs that much more to operate that American ship than it does to operate that corresponding British ship.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of American and British ship wages.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

[Pound sterling equals $4.50.]

United States, Hog Island, 7,800 dead-weight tons, oil burner, 10 knots.				England, Cornish Point, cargo, 8,200 dead-weight tons, coal burner, 12½–13 knots.
Rate.	Number.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Number.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
						£ s.	£ s.
Master	1	$270	$270	Master	1	48 10	48 10
First officer	1	165	165	Chief officer	1	23 10	23 10
Second officer	1	145	145	Second officer	1	17 0	17 0
Third officer	1	130	130	Third officer	1	13 0	13 0
Carpenter and boatswain	1	65	65	Carpenter	1	12 10	12 10
				Boatswain	1	11 10	11 10
Able-bodied seamen	6	55	330	Able-bodied seamen	8	10 0	80 0
Ordinary seamen	2	40	80	Apprentices	2	0 0	0 0
Total	13	.....	1,185	Total	16	.....	157 10
ENGINE DEPARTMENT.
Chief engineer	1	$240	$240	Chief engineer	1	30 10	30 10
Assistant engineer	1	165	165	Second engineer	1	23 10	23 10
				Third engineer	1	17 0	17 0
Second assistant engineer	1	145	145	Fourth engineer	1	13 0	13 0
				Donkeyman	1	11 10	11 10
Third assistant engineer	1	130	130	Greasers	2	11 0	22 0
Oilers	3	65	195	Firemen	12	10 10	126 0
Firemen	3	57½	172½
Wipers	2	50	100
Total	12	.....	1,147½	Total	19	.....	243 10

Comparison of American and British ship wages—Continued.

STEWARD'S DEPARTMENT.

United States, Hog Island, 7,800 dead-weight tons, oil burner, 10 knots.				England, Cornish Point, cargo, 8,200 dead-weight tons, coal burner, 12½–13 knots.
Rate.	Number.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.	Rate.	Number.	Pay per man.	Pay per month.
						£ s.	£ s.
Chief steward	1	$105	$105	Chief steward	1	14 10	14 10
Chief cook	1	90	90	Assistant steward	1	9 5	9 5
Second cook and baker	1	70	70	Mess room steward	1	9 0	9 0
Mess boys	3	35	105	Chief cook	1	13 10	13 10
				Second cook	1	10 0	10 0
Total	6	.....	370	Total	5	.....	56 5
Wireless operator	1	90	90
Grand total	32	.....	2,792½	Grand total	40	.....	457 5

RECAPITULATION.

Deck department	13	.....	$1,185	Deck department	16	157 10	$708½
Engine department	12	.....	1,147½	Engine department	19	243 10	1,095¼
Steward's department	6	.....	370	Steward's department	5	56 5	253
Wireless operator	1	.....	90
Total	32	.....	2,792½	Total	40	.....	2,057½

Difference in cost American wages over English:

Per month	$735
Per year	8,820

"Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, what about the subsidy?

"If, as is stated in the minority report, the Hog Island under this bill were to receive a subsidy of $11,000 a year, this would adequately cover the annual difference in the pay of the crew, which would be $8,820, and a further difference that exists in the cost of feeding the officers and seamen. This is all that would be required, for American and British cargo ships purchase their fuel and general stores and supplies on the world's level of markets. The higher wage and subsistence cost of the American crew is, therefore, the only factor that needs to be covered by a subsidy or compensation. There would be hundreds of American cargo steamers, like the Hog Island, afloat and in active service in the hands of American owners if they were given a rate of compensation of $11,000 a year; that would virtually equalize their wage-operating costs with the costs of their British competitors. This $11,000, it is true, is not a large subsidy, but it is all that the distinctive cargo steamer needs. It covers the difference in the cost of operation and a little bit more; but that is all that we ask for. That is all that anybody could expect.

"The minority report emphasizes the fact that the great, fast ships will receive a higher rate of subsidy because of their superior size and speed combined. The truth is that because of their size and speed and, therefore, of the larger crews which they demand, especially for the proper care of passengers, they actually require a very much larger compensation from the Government in order to be able to meet their foreign competitors on anything like equal terms. In other words, the differential is greater, and, of course, a larger subsidy in amount must be raised to cover that differential.

"The minority report cites the steamers George Washington and America, of the United States lines, declaring that the America would receive a 'gift of $300,000 under this bill.' But, again, it is easy to demonstrate from official facts that the higher compensation for the large, swift American passenger ships is necessary and justifiable. In a comparison of the wage roll of the America and of a similar British steamer, the Baltic, both well-known mail, passenger, and cargo carriers in the trans-Atlantic trade—the America, of 21,114 gross tons, 17 knots, burning coal, and the Baltic, of 23,884 gross tons, 17 knots, also burning coal—the differential in the American pay roll over the British pay roll for each month is $19,451.50, or, for the entire year, $233,468.

"As in the case of the Hog Island and the Cornish Point, there must be also an allowance for the difference in the cost of subsistence of the American and British crews. Allowing for this subsistence of the 300 or 400 men usually carried on the America and Baltic, it is manifest that a compensation of the $300,000 a year mentioned in the minority report will approximately put the American liner on an equality with the British liner, exactly as the $11,000 a year would place the American freight ship on approximately even conditions with the British freight ship. Therefore, in proportion to the requirements of the case, the American cargo ship is just as well protected by a subsidy of $11,000 a year as the American mail, passenger, and freight lines is protected by a subsidy of $300,000.

"The shipping bill does not discriminate against the cargo ship. It gives that ship exactly the same good, fair American chance that it gives the liner. As a matter of fact, it gives it a little bit better chance, and we can well afford to give more to the liners as a measure of national defense. We will be fully justified in doing that."

The assertion has repeatedly been made that the cost of the shipping subsidy bill would be $75,000,000 a year. You will find that in the present bill the expenditures for compensation or subsidy are strictly limited to $30,000,000.

All ships receiving subsidy must be built, as a general policy, in the United States, thus affording very direct, powerful encouragement to our shipbuilding industry, so valuable for national defense. Moreover, two-thirds of the crews of compensated ships below the rank of officers must be American citizens, thus assuring the Government of a large body of citizen seamen.

All the compensated ships must be turned over to the Government in war at a price not enhanced by any emergency that requires their transfer. American ownership of the compensated ships must be preponderant.

Not to go further into detail, the shipping bill, in our judgment, honestly represents an effort to secure a greatly prosperous merchant marine and at the same time to protect the vital interests of the Government. We would reemphasize the fact that if the Government continues to own and operate its ocean tonnage, such a course will fail to solve the problem of the merchant marine and will enhance the difficulties of and effectually destroy American private initiative and enterprise in overseas commerce. We are very sure that you do not desire such a result. Under continued Government ownership and operation, that one-half of our merchant marine that is Government owned would be in fact subsidized from the National Treasury against the other half, privately owned, that would remain absolutely unprotected as at present.

It would be exactly as if the United States were to take over, own, and operate, at the expense of the Public Treasury, one-half of the railroads of the United States, to the certain destruction of the remainder. We believe that such a course could not possibly be advocated by Senators in possession of the full knowledge of the facts. It should be remembered that American ships in overseas trade as a rule are now making no money and are maintaining themselves by the utmost exertions. They could not possibly survive against Government-owned American ships whose deficits were made up, as they are now, by appropriations of Congress.

Finally, we submit that the total cost of the proposed subsidy is set in the act at $300,000,000 a year. This is about one-tenth of the annual expenditure for the maintenance of the United States Navy. Rear Admiral William S. Sims, who speaks with the utmost knowledge and authority, has lately said, "The Navy of the United States would be of very little value as a defense of the United States and our possessions if it were not for the merchant marine."

OIL AND GAS WELLS ON PUBLIC LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STANFIELD. From the committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4197) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to certain persons and certain corporations permits to explore, or leases of, certain lands that lie south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1127) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is not a bill which will require any explanation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I dislike to object to this kind of a request, but, of course, as the Senator knows, there are very few now here and there may be some Senators absent who will be interested in this kind of a measure.

Mr. STANFIELD. I should like to say to the Senator from Florida that the bill has been very carefully considered by the Public Lands Committee and has the unanimous approval of the committee, and also the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. It is important that the bill should be acted upon immediately in order that the Secretary of the Interior may be empowered to act.

Mr. ROBINSON. To what does the bill relate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill by title.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the bill may be passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know anything about the bill but I have no objection to its passage. I only believe that it is a bad practice at the close of a day's session to call up bills for passage when there may be those interested who are not here. I believe it is a bad practice to give unanimous consent for the passage of a measure of any importance under such circumstances; but I do not in this case insist on my objection to the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "citizens," to insert "of the United States";

On page 1, line 5, after the word "deposits," to insert "belonging to the United States and";

On page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "prior to October 1, 1919," and insert ", prior to January 1, 1920";

On page 1, line 10, after the word "faith," to insert the words "and with reasonable diligence";

On page 2, line 17, after the word "interest," to strike out the period and insert a comma, followed by the words "which the lessee or permittee assumes and agrees to observe";

On page 2, line 24, after the word "otherwise," to strike out the period and insert a comma, followed by the words "having made expenditures thereon as in section 1 required";

On page 3, line 5, to change the word "four" to "six";

On page 3, line 6, to change the word "eighty" to "forty";

On page 3, line 20, after the word "deducting," to strike out the word "the" and insert the words "one-half";

On page 3, line 21, to strike out the words "proper proportionate part";

On page 3, line 22, to strike out the words "and the cost of administration and production" and insert in lieu thereof the words "but not including the cost of drilling and operating the wells";

On page 4, line 2, to change the period to a colon and add the following provisos: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to take such legal steps as may be necessary and proper to collect from any person or persons who shall not be awarded a permit or lease under this act an amount equal to the value of all oil and gas produced by him or them from any of said lands prior to the inclusion of said property in the receivership, except oil or gas used on the property for production purposes or unavoidably lost and except other reasonable and proper allowances for the expenses of production: Provided further, That of the amount so collected, 12½ per cent shall be reserved to the United States as royalty and the balance after deducting the expense of collection shall be paid over to the person or persons awarded permits or leases under this act, as their interests may appear"; and

On page 6, line 6, after the word "ship," to insert the words, "which the Attorney General is hereby directed to apply for and secure at the earliest practicable date";

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to adjust and determine the equitable claims of citizens of the United States and domestic corporations to lands and oil and gas deposits belonging to the United States and situated south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, Okla., which lands were claimed and possessed in good faith by such citizens or corporations, or their predecessors in interest, prior to January 1, 1920, and upon which lands expenditures were made in good faith and with reasonable diligence in an effort to discover or develop oil or gas. And the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to issue to those persons or corporations that may be found equitably entitled thereto permits to explore, or leases of, said lands so claimed by them.

SEC. 2. That applications for permits and leases under this act shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be made within and not after 30 days from and after the date that this act becomes a law. Leases and permits under this act shall be granted to the assignees or successors in interest of the original locators or the original claimants in all cases where the original locators or original claimants have assigned or transferred their rights, but when leases or permits are granted to the assignees or successors in interest of the original locators or original claimants the said leases and permits shall be subject to all contracts, not contrary to law or public policy, between the original locators or original claimants and their successors in interest, which the lessee or permittee assumes and agrees to observe. In every case where there shall be any conflict or contest on account of overlapping claims the said conflict or contest shall be determined upon competent evidence, and in every such case the land in conflict shall be granted to the person or corporation that in good faith first possessed and claimed the land and maintained such possession until dispossessed by judicial process or otherwise, having made expenditures thereon as in section 1 required.

SEC. 3. That not more than 160 acres shall be granted by leases or permits to any one person or corporation, except in those cases where two or more locations or claims have been assigned to one person or corporation, and in such cases not more than 640 acres shall be granted by leases or permits to any one person or corporation.

SEC. 4. That each lessee shall be required to pay to the United States an amount equal to the value at the time of production of 12½ per cent of all oil and gas produced by him prior to the issuance of the lease, except oil or gas used on the property for production purposes or unavoidably lost; and shall be required to pay to the United States a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent of all oil and gas produced by him after the issuance of the lease, except oil and gas used on the property for production purposes or unavoidably lost. Of the proceeds of the oil and gas that have been produced or that may hereafter be produced by the receiver of said property, who was appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States, after deducting one-half of the cost of the said receivership but not including the cost of drilling and operating the wells, 12½ per cent shall be paid to the United States, and the residue shall be paid to the person or corporation to whom may be granted a lease of the land on which said oil and gas were produced: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to take such legal steps as may be necessary and proper to collect from any person or persons who shall not be awarded a permit or lease under this act an amount equal to the value of all oil and gas produced by him or them from any of said lands prior to the inclusion of said property in the receivership, except oil or gas used on the property for production purposes or unavoidably lost, and except other reasonable and proper allowances for the expenses of production: Provided further, That of the amount so collected 12½ per cent shall be reserved to the United States as royalty and the balance, after deducting the expense of collection, shall be paid over to the person or persons awarded permits or leases under this act as their interests may appear.

SEC. 5. That except as otherwise provided herein the applicable provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to permit the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," shall apply to the leases and permits granted hereunder, including the provisions of sections 35 and 36 of said act relating to the disposition of royalties: Provided, That after the adjudication and disposition of all applications under this act, any lands and deposits remaining unappropriated and undisposed of shall, after date fixed by order of the Secretary of the Interior, be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of said act of February 25, 1920: Provided further, That upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to take over and operate existing wells on any of such lands pending the final disposition of applications for leases and permits, and to utilize and expend in connection with such administration and operation so much as may be necessary of moneys heretofore impounded from past production or hereafter produced, and upon final disposition of applications for and the issuance of leases and permits, after deducting the expenses of administration and operation and payment to the United States of the royalty herein provided, to pay the balance remaining to the person or company entitled thereto: And provided further, That out of the 10 per cent of money hereafter received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act and paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts, as provided by section 35 of the said act of February 25, 1920, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use and expend such portion as may be required to pay the expense of administration and supervision over leases and permits and the products thereof.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the possession by the Supreme Court of the United States, through its receiver or receivers, of any part of the lands described in section 1 of this act, nor to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of any of said lands or oil or gas deposits involved in litigation now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States until the final disposition of said proceeding. The authority herein granted to the Secretary of the Interior to take over and operate oil wells on said lands shall not become effective until the said lands shall be, by the Supreme Court of the United States, discharged from its possession. And nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the jurisdiction, power, and authority of the Supreme Court of the United States to adjudicate claims against its said receiver, to direct the payment of such claims against the said receiver as may be allowed by the said court, to settle the said receiver's accounts, and to continue the receivership until, in due and orderly course, the same may be brought to an end. The Supreme Court of the United States is hereby authorized, upon the termination of the said receivership, which the Attorney General is hereby directed to apply for and secure at the earliest practicable date, to direct its receiver to pay to the Secretary of the Interior all funds that may at that time remain in the hands of the said receiver; and when said funds shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, the same shall be administered as in this act provided.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 10, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 9 (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder to be ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Charles William Leng, jr., Cavalry, from January 7, 1923.

Second Lieut. Edward Ward Hendrick, Coast Artillery Corps, from January 7, 1923.

Second Lieut. Frederick Pearson, Infantry, from January 8, 1923.

Second Lieut. Charles Frederick Colson, Infantry, from January 11, 1923.

Second Lieut. Albert Walker Johnson, Cavalry, from January 11, 1923.

Second Lieut. Donald Frederic Carroll, Infantry, from January 13, 1923.

Second Lieut. Bernard Wellington Slifer, Coast Artillery Corps, from January 16, 1923.

Second Lieut. Willard Ames Holbrook, jr., Cavalry, from January 17, 1923.

Second Lieut. Auston Monroe Wilson, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, from January 18, 1923.

Second Lieut. Samuel Powell Walker, jr., Cavalry, from January 24, 1923.

Second Lieut. Robert Alwin Schow, Infantry, from January 27, 1923.

Second Lieut. John Harrison Stokes, jr., Infantry, from January 30, 1923.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Maj. Donald Armstrong, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

Capt. Douglas Lee Crane, Quartermaster Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

AIR SERVICE.

Second Lieut. Louis Meline Merrick, Cavalry.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 9 (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Charles L. McKeehan to be district judge, eastern district of Pennsylvania.

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTOR.

Acel C. Alexander to be collector of internal revenue for district of Oklahoma.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD.

Wilfred N. Derby to be lieutenant.
Herman H. Curry to be ensign (engineering).

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

Edward S. Miller, Bentonville.
James W. Oglesby, jr., Gravette.

CALIFORNIA.

James R. Willoughby, Corcoran.
George L. Clare, Guerneville.
William E. Hunt, Kelseyville.

GEORGIA.

Charles H. Crumbly, Greensboro.
Pleasant N. Little, Madison.

IDAHO.

Clyde Hanson, Malad City.

MINNESOTA.

Anna W. Isaacson, Palisade.
Samuel A. Nystrom, Watertown.

MONTANA.

Fred N. Weed, Terry.

NEBRASKA.

William R. Brooks, Campbell.
Edward T. Best, jr., Neligh.
Ray L. Mallory, Pierce.
John Becker, Stanton.

NEW YORK.

Sumter L. Happy, Mount Vernon.

OHIO.

Henry A. Taylor, Cleveland.
John T. Daniels, Greenfield.

OKLAHOMA.

Dory E. McKenney, Custer.
Ada Bartels, Denoya.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Frank H. Cratsley, Imperial.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Truman C. Knott, Bristol.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1923.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, hear us and come to our help. We entreat Thee that all that is deepest and all that is truest in our own natures may be inspired by Thy Holy Spirit. Meet us to-day and work in us the blessing that falls like an angel's spirit from the upper places. Again hearts are wounded and stricken, and O how they know their own anguish. Come to them with the comfort that heals and with the faith that recovers. Help us to hold on for the few years that remain. In all good things may our constancy and fidelity be without flaw or hesitation. When our arms are empty, our hands idle, and our home desolate may we incarnate in our lives the sublime truth of the cross and live under its light that never grows dim. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REFUNDING OF FOREIGN DEBT.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent it is in order to-day to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 14254) to refund the foreign debt.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922. Pending that motion, I desire to come to some agreement with gentlemen on the other side respecting the time for general debate. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] suggested that there be four hours of general debate. That is satisfactory to this side.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I think that is satisfactory.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I make that request, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14254, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] are both in favor of the resolution.

Mr. COLLIER. I will say right now that the gentleman's understanding is not correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well; then I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether it would be agreeable to the gentleman to have general debate confined to the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, by all means.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman not incorporate that in his request?

Mr. FORDNEY. And that general debate be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the subject is so broad that it is almost impossible to confine it to the bill. Intelligent discussion of it would involve the entire situation. I favor the bill, but I think there should be no such limitation.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, the limitation is only that the debate shall be confined to the general subject before us.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It merely means that those having the floor will not discuss matters not related in any way to the general subject.

Mr. LONDON. Such as the protective tariff?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 78, noes 6.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 278, nays 2, not voting 146, as follows:

YEAS—278.

Abernethy	Box	Cole, Iowa	Driver
Ackerman	Brand	Cole, Ohio	Dunbar
Andrew, Mass.	Briggs	Collier	Dupré
Andrews, Nebr.	Brooks, Ill.	Collins	Echols
Appleby	Brown, Tenn.	Colton	Edmonds
Arentz	Browne, Wis.	Connally, Tex.	Elliott
Aswell	Burtness	Cooper, Ohio	Ellis
Atkeson	Burton	Cooper, Wis.	Evans
Bacharach	Butler	Copley	Fairchild
Bankhead	Byrnes, S. C.	Coughlin	Fairfield
Barbour	Byrns, Tenn.	Crago	Favrot
Barkley	Campbell, Kans.	Cramton	Fenn
Beck	Campbell, Pa.	Crisp	Fess
Beedy	Cannon	Curry	Fisher
Begg	Cantrill	Dale	Fitzgerald
Benham	Carter	Dallinger	Fordney
Bird	Chalmers	Darrow	Foster
Bixler	Chandler, Okla.	Deal	Frear
Black	Chindblom	Dempsey	Free
Bland, Ind.	Christopherson	Denison	Freeman
Bland, Va.	Clague	Dickinson	Frothingham
Blanton	Clark, Fla.	Dominick	Fuller
Boies	Clarke, N. Y.	Dowell	Fulmer
Bowling	Cockran	Drewry	Gallivan

Garrett, Tenn.	Knutson	Newton, Minn.	Steagall
Garrett, Tex.	Kopp	Norton	Stedman
Gensman	Kraus	Ogden	Stevenson
Gernerd	Lampert	Oldfield	Strong, Kans.
Gifford	Langley	Oliver	Summers, Wash.
Glynn	Lanham	Olpp	Sumners, Tex.
Goodykoontz	Lankford	Parker, N. Y.	Swank
Graham, Ill.	Larsen, Ga.	Parks, Ark.	Sweet
Green, Iowa	Larson, Minn.	Patterson, Mo.	Swing
Greene, Mass.	Lawrence	Paul	Taylor, Colo.
Griest	Layton	Perkins	Taylor, Tenn.
Griffin	Lazaro	Porter	Thompson
Hadley	Lea, Calif.	Pou	Thorpe
Hammer	Leatherwood	Pringey	Tillman
Hardy, Colo.	Lee, Ga.	Purnell	Tilson
Hardy, Tex.	Lineberger	Quin	Timberlake
Haugen	Little	Radcliffe	Towner
Hawley	Logan	Rainey, Ill.	Turner
Hayden	London	Raker	Tyson
Henry	Longworth	Rankin	Underhill
Hersey	Lowrey	Rayburn	Vaile
Hickey	Luce	Reece	Vestal
Hicks	Luhring	Rhodes	Vinson
Hill	Lyon	Ricketts	Voigt
Himes	McClintic	Riordan	Volstead
Hooker	McDuffie	Roach	Walters
Huddleston	McLaughlin, Mich.	Robertson	Ward, N. Y.
Hudspeth	McPherson	Robsion	Ward, N. C.
Hull	McSwain	Rodenberg	Watson
Humphrey, Nebr.	MacGregor	Rogers	Weaver
Husted	MacLafferty	Rouse	White, Kans.
Ireland	Madden	Sabath	White, Me.
Jacoway	Maloney	Sanders, Ind.	Williams, Ill.
Jefferis, Nebr.	Mansfield	Sanders, Tex.	Williams, Tex.
Jeffers, Ala.	Mapes	Sandlin	Williamson
Johnson, Ky.	Martin	Schall	Wilson
Johnson, Miss.	Mead	Shelton	Wingo
Johnson, Wash.	Michener	Sinclair	Winslow
Jones, Tex.	Mondell	Sinnott	Wood, Ind.
Kearns	Montague	Slemp	Woodruff
Kelly, Pa.	Moore, Ohio	Smith, Idaho	Woods, Va.
Ketcham	Moore, Va.	Snell	Wright
Kiess	Moores, Ind.	Snyder	Wyant
Kincheloe	Morgan	Speaks	Young
Kissel	Murphy	Sproul
Kline, Pa.	Nelson, A. P.	Stafford

NAYS—2.

Carew	Cullen

NOT VOTING—146.

Almon	Goldsborough	McKenzie	Scott, Mich.
Anderson	Gorman	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Scott, Tenn.
Ansorge	Gould	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sears
Anthony	Graham, Pa.	Magee	Shaw
Bell	Greene, Vt.	Merritt	Shreve
Blakeney	Hawes	Michaelson	Siegel
Bond	Hays	Miller	Sisson
Bowers	Herrick	Mills	Smith, Mich.
Brennan	Hoch	Moore, Ill.	Smithwick
Britten	Hogan	Morin	Steenerson
Brooks, Pa.	Huck	Mott	Stephens
Buchanan	Hukriede	Mudd	Stiness
Bulwinkle	Humphreys, Miss.	Nelson, Me.	Stoll
Burdick	Hutchinson	Nelson, J. M.	Strong, Pa.
Burke	James	Newton, Mo.	Sullivan
Cable	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Brien	Tague
Chandler, N. Y.	Jones, Pa.	O'Connor	Taylor, Ark.
Classon	Kahn	Overstreet	Taylor, N. J.
Clouse	Keller	Paige	Temple
Codd	Kelley, Mich.	Park, Ga.	Ten Eyck
Connolly, Pa.	Kendall	Parker, N. J.	Thomas
Crowther	Kennedy	Patterson, N. J.	Tincher
Davis, Minn.	Kindred	Perlman	Tinkham
Davis, Tenn.	King	Petersen	Treadway
Doughton	Kirkpatrick	Rainey, Ala.	Tucker
Drane	Kitchin	Ramseyer	Upshaw
Dunn	Kleczka	Ransley	Volk
Dyer	Kline, N. Y.	Reber	Wason
Faust	Knight	Reed, N. Y.	Webster
Fields	Kreider	Reed, W. Va.	Wheeler
Fish	Kunz	Riddick	Wise
Focht	Lee, N. Y.	Rose	Woodyard
French	Lehlbach	Rosenbloom	Wurzbach
Funk	Linthicum	Rossdale	Yates
Gahn	McArthur	Rucker	Zihlman
Garner	McCormick	Ryan
Gilbert	McFadden	Sanders, N. Y.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Bowers with Mr. Garner.
Mr. Magee with Mr. Almon.
Mr. Shreve with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Davis of Tennessee.
Mr. Stephens with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. Tincher with Mr. Kindred.
Mr. Kendall with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Sears.
Mr. Treadway with Mr. Fields.
Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania with Mr. Upshaw.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Bell.
Mr. Burdick with Mr. Tague.
Mr. Faust with Mr. Doughton.
Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Hawes.
Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Linthicum.
Mr. Mudd with Mr. Park of Georgia.
Mr. Merritt with Mr. Tucker.
Mr. Britten with Mr. Gilbert.
Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Kitchin.
Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Wise.
Mr. Kahn with Mr. O'Connor.
Mr. Kirkpatrick with Mr. Humphreys of Mississippi.
Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. Fish with Mr. Thomas.
Mr. Wurzbach with Mr. Smithwick.
Mr. Paige with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Moore of Illinois with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Dunn with Mr. Bulwinkle.
Mr. Kline of New York with Mr. Stoll.
Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Rucker.
Mrs. Huck with Mr. Sisson.
Mr. Keller with Mr. Overstreet.
Mr. Crowther with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14254, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, recommended by the commission and approved by the President, as set forth by him in a message presented to Congress on February 7, 1923, as contained in House Document No. 554, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, as follows:

Principal of notes to be refunded	$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to Dec. 15, 1922, at the rate of 4½ per cent	629,836,106.99
	4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made Oct. 16, 1922, and Nov. 15, 1922, with interest at 4½ per cent thereon to Dec. 15, 1922	100,526,379.69
	4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash	4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of Dec. 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par	4,600,000,000.00

"'The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000, and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds, until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

"'The British Government shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' previous notice.

"'Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates, on December 15 and June 15 of each year: 3 per cent semiannually, June 15, 1923, to December 15, 1932, inclusive; 3½ per cent semiannually, June 15, 1933, until final payment.

"'For the first five years one-half the interest may be deferred and added to the principal, bonds to be issued therefor similar to those of the original issue.

"'Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest'—is hereby approved and authorized, and settlements, similar but not more favorable in terms with other governments indebted to the United States, as set forth in this section, are hereby authorized to be made, subject to the approval of the President."

Mr FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. [Applause; Members rising.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I thank you for this very kind reception. It is my desire to proceed for 20 minutes without interruption, and the remaining 10 minutes I shall give to the answering of questions.

It is with a profound sense of responsibility that I approach the discussion of this bill. No measure has been presented in this House of more far-reaching importance since the days when our armies were battling in the field. At the outset I wish to call attention to the exceptional quality of these obligations which we are discussing. They are an obligation from one country to another. Instances have been frequent in which a nation has granted subventions to allies in war, but loans have usually been subscribed for by private individuals or organizations. This feature gives a peculiar delicacy to a transaction of this kind. The unprecedented magnitude of the amounts of these loans must impress us very strongly, as well as the effect upon exchanges, upon trade, and more than that, upon relations of amity between nations. Therefore, every American citizen who has a vision of world welfare must give careful consideration to this proposition.

I take the stand here, which I have repeatedly taken, that we should not release the principal of these debts from foreign countries, but I think I should be recreant to duty, I should be unmindful of the interests not only of our own country but of those vast interests which pertain to the whole world, if I did not also advocate a reasonable degree of concession and leniency in the terms of payment. These debts were incurred for advances made at various times after our entry into the war. Their amount, in the principal sum, on the 15th of November last was computed at $10,045,000,000.

This debt was made up of four classes, the first and most important being for advances made under the Liberty loan act, amounting to $9,386,000,000. The second was for purchases of surplus war supplies amounting to $574,000,000. Next to that comes advances made by the American Relief Association, $84,000,000 in amount, and fourth and last, although there are some other sums of minor importance, the debts due the United States Grain Corporation, the stock of which is exclusively owned by the United States, amounting to $56,000,000. This last amount is not included in the above total.

Divers payments have been made on these amounts, but at the time the World War Debt Commission was created, in February, 1922, only two countries had settled. Cuba, having a debt of $7,740,500, gave bonds, and has regularly paid installments of principal and interest. [Applause.] The State of Nicaragua gave an obligation which provided that the interest should not be collected until the maturity of the principal. That amount is comparatively small, amounting to $170,585.35.

It was in this situation that the World Debt Funding Commission was created, with the authority which is set forth in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means. That commission has very vigorously, I might say, endeavored to make some settlement of those debts. Notice was given at an early date to all the debtor countries that we were ready to meet with them and negotiate upon the subject. Their diplomatic representatives here in Washington conferred with us. Delegates came from various countries to the United States to present their case. No adjustment, however, which was within the terms of the law, or which we could recommend to the Congress has, however, been possible, except in the case of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

No amounts are now due from that Government except for advances authorized by the Liberty loan acts. The principal sum of this debt is $4,074,000,000. After computing interest from the date of an adjustment made in April and May, 1919, deducting payments of $100,000,000 in October and November last and a sum of little over $4,000,000 which is proposed shall be paid in cash when a settlement is concluded, the indebtedness of the English Government under the plan recommended would be $4,600,000,000 as of December 15, 1922. The commission presents you the settlement set forth in extenso in the bill, with the approval of the President and with the earnest recommendation that it be adopted. The terms of the original law provided that the duration of any loan should not be more than 25 years nor the rate of interest less than 4½ per cent.

This was manifestly impossible at the outset. Some time, when a larger amount of time can be allotted to me, I wish to speak, with the kind permission of the House, upon the economic phases of this situation. I will say right briefly here that so great a transfer of capital as would be involved in the payment of those debts, or even in the payment of the debt of Great Britain inside of 25 years, would be disastrous to our own people as well as to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Under the last administration the payment of interest was suspended when Mr. CARTER GLASS, then Secretary of the Treasury, on the 18th of December, 1919, sent a letter to the Committee on Ways and Means in which he said:

> The collection in dollars of this interest under present circumstances would be no less disastrous to American interests than to the interests of our debtors.

And so payment of interest was suspended. You can not destroy a delicate balance in finance between countries by an overwhelming wrench such as this would create without disaster. France, after the war of 1870–71, was subject to the payment of an indemnity of 5,000,000,000 francs, approximating a billion dollars. What was the result—and that indemnity, by the way, is not at all comparable with these amounts—France by rigid economy, by changing an excess of imports over exports to an excess of exports over imports, by calling in foreign loans, by calling forth that which was in the stockings or houses of the peasants, paid off that amount by 1873; and yet the payment of this very large amount of money to Germany inflated values, increased prices, and caused an artificial prosperity there, which was followed by a wave of depression, so that one of their comic newspapers said, more in earnest than in jest, "Let us have another war, let us be defeated next time and pay an indemnity and then we will be prosperous." And even the great Bismarck at one time remarked that he did not know but it would be better if Germany had an indemnity to pay and then they would have prosperity. I may say here that our stock of gold in the United States, though it affords us most sincere gratification, is not altogether an asset; that it would be far better for us if a part of this gold were distributed among the nations of the earth, loaned on adequate security, because its presence here tends to create inflation, raise prices, and stimulate injudicious enterprise.

For that reason the commission felt that it was best for the first five years to make the terms very moderate, and I now come to a statement of the particulars. First, consideration was given to the rate of interest on these advances, which in 1917 was fixed at 3 and 3½ per cent, and then raised gradually until our Treasury Department on October 31, 1918, suggested that it should be 5 per cent. The interest was incorporated with the principal April 15 and May 15, 1919—about two-thirds in April and one-third in May. The commission recommends that the rate of interest from those dates to December 15, 1922, be made 4½ per cent, the rate of interest on the larger amount of our bonds. The second modification from the statute of last year is in the rate of interest in the future.

We suggest the 4½ per cent as provided in the existing law be changed to 3 per cent from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, and thereafter 3½ per cent, payable semiannually. I also desire again to say that some time I wish to address you on rates of interest. There is every probability after 10 years rates of interest will come down within that figure of 3½ per cent. For 30 years, from 1880 to 1909, inclusive, the return on English consols was less than 3 per cent, reaching a minimum of 2.4 per cent in 1897.

Our own experience has been in the same direction. Especially after the Civil War the rate of interest decreased so rapidly that some of our bonds which had been placed were sold at a very large premium. Since 1920 rates of interest and the return on securities in this country have very substantially fallen.

The third change is the extension of the period from 25 years to 62 years, during which time, by regular increase, partial payments are to be made, the first payment being fixed at $23,000,000 in 1923, and at $175,000,000 in the last year that the loan has to run, which would be 1984.

Four provisions have been recommended which, I think, the members of the commission had a right to make under the authority of the existing statute. Great Britain may make payments of principal in three-year periods instead of annually. She may, on giving 90 days' notice, pay installments of principal. Thirdly, for the first five years the interest, half of it, may be funded with the principal; that is, the amount of interest would be $138,000,000. The debtor country may fund $69,000,000 of that into bonds on the same terms as the original bonds, 3 per cent until 1932 and 3½ per cent thereafter. The fourth provision is that the debtor may pay installments of principal and interest by the presentation of our bonds issued after April 6, 1917, and such bonds are to be credited at par with accrued interest. The date of April 6, 1917, is fixed to avoid the Panama bonds and some other bonds and obligations which are now selling at a discount. I do not see why we, who are so proud of our credit, could refuse to meet this offer. They would come to us with our own bonds in their hands and say, "We will pay you with these." How can we refuse? Again, it would be extremely favorable for us, in that it would bolster up the price of our own bonds because of those withdrawn by payments.

These, gentlemen, are the conditions under this bill in a general way.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. My time is not quite up. I will yield in a very few minutes. How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Then, I have three minutes more. Now, the importance of this transaction to us and to the world I can not overrate. We can not afford to take the position of a harsh and grasping creditor. The whole world is now open to us and to our trade and to our enterprise. We hope also to our helpful influence.

Let the principal of the debt be paid. I might rehearse some of the reasons which I have often given for my contention on that point: The sacredness of national obligations which must be observed, the cancellation of which would hereafter tend to break down national credit; the fact that the loans we made to those countries were made not from an overflowing Treasury but by issuing bonds; the fact that if we were to cancel these debts, Europe, in a ferment, might use a very considerable share of that which would otherwise be used in the payment of this debt in military equipment, which would carry a constant threat to the peace of the world. Then, again our obligations in the way of debt at the beginning of the war were trivial, almost, and the increase of our debt and taxation as a result of the war has been as great or greater proportionately than is the case with our debtors.

Those are the reasons on one side. What are the reasons on the other side, in the midst of this uncertainty? Great Britain comes forward and says, "We expect to pay if you will make the terms such that we can meet them."

This $4,600,000,000, again, it must be remembered, was for purchases made in this country, and to that $4,600,000,000 and more were added $3,000,000,000 for purchases paid in cash—a great stimulus to our trade and to our wealth, changing us in effect from a debtor into a creditor nation; and because of these purchases made by Great Britain in that time of whirling activity very large income taxes and excess-profits taxes were paid into the American Treasury, reaching into the hundreds of millions, maybe a billion or more. They themselves are staggering under a crushing weight of taxation in order to meet their expenses and maintain their credit, which they have so proudly maintained for 200 years. This they have accomplished by subjecting their people to a rate of taxation more severe per capita and more severe in its various forms than that ever borne by any nation in time of peace. Without alliance with them, with no encouragement of any imperial aspirations of theirs, we know that the future progress of the world in civilization depends very largely upon the concurrent action of the two great branches of the English-speaking race. [Applause.]

Mr. Webster, after having listened to the morning call at Quebec, thought out that famous apostrophe to the British Empire, "whose morning drumbeat, beginning with the sun and keeping pace with the hours, encircles the globe with one continuous unbroken strain of the martial airs of England." Those martial airs were sounded to rouse soldiers on many a bloody field, in Flanders, at Ypres, and wherever the fight was bloodiest, and many of those who were roused by that call sleep where the poppies grow. But we hope that this other country with which we have so much in common, with the same literature, the same sweet English tongue, may in the future, with strains, not so much of martial music as of beneficence and blessing, with us encircle the globe with those notes which make for peace and amity and a new era on the earth. [Prolonged applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 10 minutes in which to answer questions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In support of the gentleman's position that it would be disastrous to this country for this debt to be paid back in 25 years, the gentleman reminded us of the wish made by the German funny papers and by Bismarck. That wish has been realized for the German people. The German people now are paying an indemnity. If Bismarck could see the German people now do you think he would still wish them in their present situation?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, all I care to say in regard to that situation is that we must bear in mind that harsh treatment from one country to another is very likely to bring reciprocity at some future time, and therefore it is not best to be harsh. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if the reason for this remission of interest from the amount promised in the contract to that mentioned in this bill is the fact that England is not able to pay a higher rate of interest?

Mr. BURTON. I think it is entirely impossible for England to assure us of larger payments in the way of interest and principal than those provided here. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the settlement we have made is not based alone on any consideration of leniency, important as that is, but upon the probable ability of our debtor to meet the demand.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to know—I am sure the gentleman can give the House the information—what is the relative indebtedness of the two countries, Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. BURTON. Great Britain owes about £7,700,000,000, which would be $35,000,000,000 and more, based upon present rates of exchange. Our net debt, which has been diminished in the last few years, is somewhere between $22,000,000,000 and $23,000,000,000.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman give the per capita debt of the two countries?

Mr. BURTON. The per capita debt is very much larger in Great Britain than in the United States. I could not figure it accurately in a moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman give us the relative per capita tax of the two countries?

Mr. BURTON. The per capita tax is a somewhat difficult proposition, but that of Great Britain is about $80 per capita for national purposes, and about $20 per capita for domestic rates and purposes. Ours is between $30 and $35 per capita for national purposes, and for domestic purposes it is difficult to say, perhaps from $20 to $30 up. It differs very materially in the different States. I should like at some time to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] after a more careful preparation as to the exact figures. There is no question that theirs is two-thirds larger than ours.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is safe to assume that the per capita tax of Great Britain is much larger than that of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. It is at least five-thirds—once and two-thirds as much.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague state the percentage of debt in ratio to our wealth in comparison with that of Britain?

Mr. BURTON. Estimates of wealth are more or less fanciful. I have given a good deal of time to the gathering of figures on that subject. Our own wealth is variously estimated at from $220,000,000,000 to $280,000,000,000. That of Great Britain is estimated at only about $80,000,000,000, probably not more than a third as much as ours. Those estimates, I must say, however, are more or less conjectural.

Mr. FESS. I have seen the statement that the British debt is 46 per cent of her wealth, while ours is only about 10 per cent. Is that correct?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; I think so.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PURNELL. So many conflicting statements have been made that I should like to know what the Government of the United States actually holds as evidence of these various debts.

Mr. BURTON. There is a kind of due bill, a copy of which is attached to the hearings.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can furnish my colleague with a copy.

Mr. BURTON. I have never gained any very great satisfaction from reading it.

Mr. PURNELL. I wish the gentleman would enlarge upon that.

Mr. BURTON. I have not the time to do that, much as I would like to do so; but I will ask the gentleman to examine the document.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what effect this settlement will have upon the stability of European governments, and what will be the effect if the settlement is not made?

Mr. BURTON. The making of this settlement will have a very favorable effect as regards stability of exchanges and things of that kind. If not made, the effect would certainly be disastrous.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question which seems to suggest an equitable consideration in reference to this matter? What loans did Great Britain make to her allies during the war, and to what extent has she been able to recover them?

Mr. BURTON. Her loans aggregated in principal up to date £1,503,000,000. I do not think there have been any collections made on the loans.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Has the gentleman any figures as to the relative earning capacity of the English as compared with the Americans?

Mr. BURTON. That is merely conjectural. I think our earning capacity per capita is greater than that of England, because we are more advanced in the methods of using machinery in place of manual labor, by the greater readiness and adaptability of most of our workmen, and our resources in the way of raw material are more immediately at hand. These are the principal advantages of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman stated that the debt of England was $35,000,000,000. Did not a part of that indebtedness represent the expenditures in the World War by Great Britain?

Mr. BURTON. I have a table in regard to that. Nearly all of it, or about nine-tenths is the result of the World War. I have the figures running back to 1840, and I think for a considerable time after that date the English debt was nearly 800,000,000 pounds.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Would the gentleman from Ohio be willing to say whether he would recommend the settlement of the debts of other nations to us on similar terms to that provided in this bill?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I regard this as establishing a new standard.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think the people would rejoice to know that they could settle the other debts on the same terms as provided in this resolution? [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. No one would rejoice any more than the members of the commission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If we do not accept the terms of settlement imposed in the pending bill, what alternative remedy has this Government?

Mr. BURTON. Let it run as it is, run with only an occasional payment, without payment of interest or principal indefinitely. Since April, 1919, there has been a payment made of $100,000,000; but it has run along like a debt that had no special recognition or standing with either country.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman spoke about some paper in writing, in the nature of a due bill, or something of that kind. I would like to ask the gentleman if one nation can have any written paper that would be binding on that nation, whether a bill of sale or a promissory note or a bond or anything else, if the debtor nation determines not to pay?

Mr. BURTON. There would be remedies known to international law. One would be to wage war; another would be to grab the property of that debtor nation and of its nationals that was inside of our country. There are several remedies, but we would not want to resort to them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Have the debts due to Great Britain from other countries been funded?

Mr. BURTON. I think not. The Balfour proposition was to release them, but they wanted some other releases besides.

Mr. KNUTSON. Do they carry any interest?

Mr. BURTON. That is a little uncertain. I do not think more than a very small amount of interest has been received.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the per cent of interest?

Mr. BURTON. There is no agreement about it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know as the gentleman has mentioned it, but there is one important consideration in this bill, and that is that Great Britain may, if she pleases, pay a portion of the debt in American bonds.

Mr. BURTON. I did mention it. That was a concession that we could not refuse.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman tell the House, if he can, the approximate value of the colonies acquired by Great Britain after and during the war?

Mr. BURTON. They are figuring on the question whether they are worth anything or not. They are a very large source of expense thus far. If you figure it per acre or per hectare, the area taken over would be very valuable. There is an illustration of what may be the result of large indemnities. The Allies took away the ships of Germany and virtually destroyed the shipbuilding trade in their own countries for a time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman, in the course of his remarks, stated that England had some American bonds with which she would pay a part of the debt. Would the gentleman mind stating what the sum total of those bonds is and when they were bought and the interest they are drawing?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think I made quite that statement. It is thought that there is a certain amount of bonds of the United States in England. I doubt if there is a very large amount. They were practically all sent over during the war to apply on payments. I do not think that they subscribed for our bonds during the war.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If there are any bonds there, they are owned by individuals?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and not by the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman make any forecast, without embarrassment to his work as a member of this commission, as to when the other debtor nations will fund their debts owing to us, as Great Britain has so magnanimously funded this?

Mr. BURTON. I could not say. That is the reason for the last provision in this law. We want to be able to function between now and the time when Congress next meets.

Mr. COLLIER. Let me ask the gentleman if he has estimated the amount of interest that would be lost by making the proposed settlements instead of the one under which the commission was created proposed. The gentleman yesterday could not give us any information on that.

Mr. BURTON. It is a matter of long computation. The abatement on past indebtedness would be approximately $80,000,000 up to December 15, 1922. For the next 10 years, if no payments were made on principal, it would be $57,500,000 per annum, which would amount to $575,000,000, but payments on principal are to be made during that time, which would diminish the $575,000,000 estimate substantially. Then after the 10 years it would be something over $30,000,000 a year, diminishing. But to my mind we can brush all that aside. It is not a question of whether we get the full pound of flesh, but whether we get anything, and whether we conduct ourselves as this great wealthy Nation which wants to be a leader in world affairs ought to conduct itself. [Applause.] I concede the amounts bulk large. It is just about $80,000,000 that we are abating, if you call it 5 per cent to date on past advances.

The original interest on these advances was 3 per cent, then 3½ per cent, then 4 per cent, a very complicated proposition, then 4½ per cent on that proportion of the indebtedness on which our bonds were paying 4½ per cent, and finally our Government sent word on October 31, 1918, that it ought all to be settled at 5 per cent.

Mr. COLLIER. For the reason the gentleman stated our representatives did not push the 25-year proposition. I understood the gentleman to say it was manifest to all that that was impossible to be agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. We repeatedly called attention to what the law was and what our limitations were, but from the very outset it was manifest that neither the rate of interest nor the time was possible of agreement.

Mr. COLLIER. After the commission found they could not agree on any of the essentials of the law which created the commission there was no attempt on the part of the commission to report back to the body from which they got their authority, was there?

Mr. BURTON. No.

Mr. COLLIER. Everything was kept quiet?

Mr. BURTON. Well, so far as secrecy is concerned, I quote to the gentleman what I quoted yesterday from Mr. David Lloyd-George, that anyone who has ever been a member of a family of more than three would see the howling absurdity of holding an international conference in public. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I request the Chair to let me know when I have consumed 15 minutes. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I know that I speak for all when I say that we would be glad to get the refunding of these foreign obligations behind us. I wish to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] upon his presentation of the case from his side of the question, and I regret very much that in the discussion of a question which means so much to the American people I find myself unable to agree to the proposition now before the House. I believe it of the utmost importance that these foreign obligations should be refunded, and if I had absolute knowledge that this is the last word of Great Britain, and that the proposal now before us is the best that Great Britain can do, I for one, honoring and respecting that great country, would be among the very first to agree to that proposal. We have had one of the commissioners, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], before us, and we got no information from him at all, except vague statements that it was manifest to us from the start that Great Britain could not comply with the American demands as set forth in the law which created the commission.

We asked him for some information regarding the proposals made by the British Government. There was the law which in its essentials empowered the commission to make specific terms with England. Every essential of this law was ignored. These loans made by our Government were accepted by the foreign governments at the time of their greatest need. The foreign governments came to us and said, "If you will lend us this money to fight the common enemy, we will pay it back to you upon the same terms and under the same conditions parallel with the bonds you have to issue to get this money. That is the brief history of the lending of this money, and the Congress of the United States, without, I believe, one dissenting vote, agreed to a law which empowered the American commission to do two things in the negotiation of the settlement of these debts. One was to refund these obligations at 4¼ per cent interest, and the other was to extend the time of maturity for a period of 25 years.

In view of the fact that both of these essentials of the law creating this commission were ignored, we at least had the right to expect some information as to why they were ignored. We wanted to know if every effort to conform to the statute creating the commission had been made. But all information was refused us on the ground that these negotiations were sacred and confidential.

If I had information that would convince me that this is the best proposition Great Britain can accept, then I, too, would gladly vote for the refunding of these bonds upon the proposed agreement.

I do not want to force Great Britain or any other country to make terms impossible for them to carry out. I do not want "the pound of flesh" that the gentleman from Ohio referred to so often. But I do want the gentleman from Ohio or some other member of the commission to give me some information why the American people should surrender and cancel $1,600,000,000 of our foreign debt to England.

I want to know whether Great Britain refused to pay this $1,600,000,000, or whether Great Britain says the United Kingdom was unable to pay this sum, or whether the American commission generously gave England this sum. I think the American people who are paying 4¼ per cent interest upon money they borrowed to lend to England are entitled to know officially at least why England is willing to pay only 3 per cent upon this money.

The gentleman from Ohio gives us only his own impressions which he gathered talking to various citizens of England. I again repeat that if the American commission will lay before the House convincing information that these terms are the only terms Great Britain can or is willing to make I will vote to ratify them.

Briefly speaking, what is the history of these foreign debts? The provisions of the various Liberty loan acts which authorized the lending of this money to our allies in order to carry on the war are plain and explicit. They do not give the Secretary of the Treasury or any commission any discretion to either change the rates of interest or fix the maturity of the loans. They simply provide that when the Secretary of the Treasury shall loan money to the representatives of the foreign governments, the Secretary shall with this money purchase at par from those foreign governments their obligations at a rate of interest not less than the highest rate of interest in any Liberty loan act bond that may be issued here in the United States. They further provide that these foreign obligations or bonds so purchased at par by the Secretary of the Treasury from the foreign governments shall bear in all their essentials resemblance to the bonds that have been issued here in the United States and which were purchased by the American people.

We all know that when the Democratic administration negotiated these loans no partisanship of any kind crept into the discussion of the methods of these negotiations. There were no executive meetings of the Ways and Means Committee and the Republicans Members were invited to participate with us on each and every occasion.

Partisanship for the first time came into the attempted settlement of these debts when the bill creating the commission was, in October, 1921, discussed in the House.

It was first contemplated that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, be given full authority to settle these debts, and bills were introduced in the House by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. FORDNEY] and in the Senate by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the late Senator PENROSE, conferring upon the Secretary of the Treasury discretionary powers to settle these obligations. These bills even contemplated giving the Secretary permission to accept the obligations of one government in exchange for the obligations of another government. There was so much dissatisfaction over these bills that a bill creating a commission was then reported to the House. The bill gave discretionary powers to a commission of five Members, and I offered an amendment that this commission report back to Congress before the terms of any final settlement should be made. This motion was defeated by a partisan vote. I then offered the same amendment in the form of a motion to recommit, which on a call of the House was defeated.

The Senate amended the bill by taking away the discretionary powers of the commission and accomplishing in another way the substance in all its essentials of what the Democrats tried to embody in the bill when it passed the House. The Senate amendment was a proviso that nothing contained in the act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or other obligations due the United States by any foreign government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4¼ per cent per annum.

When the bill was reported back to the House it was passed unanimously with the Senate amendments.

The commission had no authority to change the rate of interest from 4¼ per cent per annum, as set forth in the law creating the commission, nor did the commission have authority to extend the time of maturity from 25 years, as set forth in the law, to 62 years, as proposed in the proposal submitted by our commission to the representatives of Great Britain.

This is the proposition our representatives made to the representatives of the British Government:

Principal of notes to be refunded		$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to Dec. 15, 1922, at the rate of 4¼ per cent		629,836,106.99
		4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made Oct. 16, 1922, and Nov. 15, 1922, with interest at 4¼ per cent thereon to Dec. 15, 1922		100,526,379.69
		4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash		4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of Dec. 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par		4,600,000,000.00

The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000, and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds until in the sixty-second year the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

The British Government shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on an interest date upon 90 days' previous notice.

Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates, on December 15 and June 15 of each year:

Three per cent semiannually, June 15, 1923, to December 15, 1932, inclusive; 3½ per cent semiannually, June 15, 1933, until final payment.

For the first five years one-half of the interest may be deferred and added to the principal; bonds to be issued therefor similar to those of the original issue.

Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

Partisanship never entered into these proceedings until the bill creating the commission was brought up for consideration. On the floor of the House that day a great many cruel and unkind things were said about the Democratic administration and the way in which Mr. McAdoo had made these loans. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] seems to be obsessed with the idea that the "mere notes of hand," as he described the security Mr. McAdoo took—the mere notes of hand, the I O U the Democratic administration took—were not good security. He has made many speeches denouncing the notes Mr. McAdoo received from the foreign governments. A few days ago on the floor of this House, speaking on this bill, he congratulated the Congress and the American people that now we had good security. My friends, there is no more power to collect the bonds that you take to-day, if this bill is passed, than there was to collect the notes given by foreign governments to the Secretary of the Treasury when the loans were first made. I consider a bond of Great Britain, I consider a note of hand of Great Britain, I consider an I O U, if you please, of Great Britain—if written in that I O U and on that note of hand there is a solemn promise to pay—good and ample security.

But I am sick and tired of hearing men like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and even the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], get up and talk about the false security that the Democratic administration took. Yesterday I asked Commissioner BURTON, when he appeared before the committee, if Great Britain's solemn promise to pay, written into a note of hand and signed by her representative agents, was not as good a moral obligation as the present bond, and to my intense surprise he said it might be as good a legal obligation but was not as good a moral obligation. I for one can not understand such reasoning. What is behind these bonds? What makes these bonds ample security? Has Great Britain pledged to us her real estate? Are they backed by negotiable stocks and bonds? Has England pledged to us her colonial possessions? Has she even set aside a special tax for a sinking fund; has she provided in any way for a sinking fund? No. Then, what makes these bonds ample and good security? It is simply and solely because England's solemn promise to pay is written on those bonds; and that same solemn promise to pay was written on the notes given by England to secure Mr. McAdoo for the money he loaned to that country.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Briefly.

Mr. HUSTED. Of course, we will all admit that these I O U's which were signed by diplomatic officials evidenced the debt and the intention to pay, but the gentleman will admit, I think, that they were not definitive obligations; they did not carry all the terms intended to be followed by a definitive obligation in which would be defined exactly what the terms agreed upon should be.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman will admit this, that the I O U's would not be worth the paper they are written on if England repudiated them; and the gentleman will admit that the bonds, if we pass this bill to-day, will not be worth the paper that they are written on if England repudiates them. There is only one court in which those bonds, if a default should be made, could be enforced, and that is not a court of law—it is a court of force—and I for one would never refer to that court for these debts or the debts of any other country. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman read the obligation which she gave us?

Mr. COLLIER. I have that and I will put it in the RECORD. This is a sample of the obligation Mr. McAdoo took from the representatives of the British Government when he loaned them the money. This is a sample copy of the obligation signed by the representatives of the British Government which these gentlemen so facetiously refer to as a mere note of hand, an I O U.

CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS.

$——— (amount in figures).

The Government of (name of foreign Government), for value received, promises to pay to the United States of America, or assigns, the sum of (number of dollars in words) on demand, with interest from date hereof at the rate of (rate per cent) per cent per annum. Such principal sum and the interest thereon will be paid without deduction for any (name of foreign Government) taxes, present or future, in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness at the Subtreasury of the United States in New York, or, at the option of the holders, at the Treasury of the United States in Washington.

This certificate will be converted by the Government of (name of foreign Government) if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America at par with an adjustment of accrued interest into an equal par amount of (rate per cent) per cent convertible gold bonds of the Government of (name of foreign Government), conforming to the provisions of acts of Congress of the United States known, respectively, as second Liberty bond act, third Liberty bond act, and fourth Liberty bond act. If bonds of the United States issued under authority of said acts shall be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent per annum, a proportionate part of the obligations of the Government of (name of foreign Government) of this series acquired by the United States under authority of said acts shall, at the request of said Secretary of the Treasury, be converted into obligations of said Government of (name of foreign Government), bearing interest at a rate exceeding that previously borne by this obligation by the same amount as the interest rate of the bonds of the United States issued upon such conversion exceeds the interest rate of (rate of this obligation) per cent, but not less than the highest rate of interest borne by such bonds of the United States.

——— ———.
(Signature of representative of foreign Government.)
For the Government of (name of foreign Government).
Dated the ——— day of ———.

This mere note of hand is as solemn and as honest an obligation as any Government bond. There is no court of law in which the bonds in the proposed bill could be collected that these notes could not also be collected.

Both depend solely and alone upon Great Britain's promise to pay, and there is no tribunal save the tribunal of war where either one of these obligations could ever be collected if England refused to pay.

But, say the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the Democratic administration violated the Liberty loan acts. Mr. McAdoo should have taken a bond for each dollar as he gave it to the foreign governments, as the law directed him to do. These gentlemen tell us that if the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury had done that we would not be in the position we are now in.

These gentlemen know that this could not have been done at that time. These gentlemen know that this money was not loaned in one sum at one time to our allies, but that the loaning of this money covered a considerable period of time and it was given out in installments as the Allies needed it.

England would tell us that during the period of seven or eight months a billion dollars would be needed. France might tell us that during that same period of time a billion and a half might be needed. Other countries might want several hundred millions more to be paid to them as they needed it in commitments, as they were called. When we informed our allies that we would let them have this money on the same terms and conditions we would have to pay the American people in order to borrow this money to lend to them, this money was not in the Treasury at that time. These gentlemen knew that. This money had to be raised by the sale of Liberty bonds.

These countries were given a credit for the amount that was asked for and it was given to them as they needed it.

One week a certain amount would be drawn, another week another amount, and several weeks afterwards still another amount. We did not have this money in the Treasury. We had to raise it by the sale of Liberty bonds. England would ask for $2,000,000,000, two-thirds of it to be advanced at the end of 60 or 90 days or longer. How could the Secretary of the Treasury know what the rate of interest would be on bonds to be issued three or four months in advance? We did not know how long the war would continue. We did not know how many bond issues would have to be made. Experience had already proved that subsequent bond issues would have to authorize a higher rate of interest than the first issue. How could the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the loan was credited to the foreign Government, refund these obligations and fix the rate of interest when he himself did not know when the money would be raised by succeeding Liberty bond acts nor what the rate of interest would be?

So he did the only feasible, the only sensible, thing, which was to place this amount to the credit of the foreign governments to be drawn by them as needed, and took their demand notes, which afterwards could be changed into bonds parallel in their essentials with our own Liberty bonds.

But I want to make a few observations on the question of partisanship, which the Republicans have shown in the consideration of this matter.

This is a government by parties. That has been the policy of our Government since first it took its place among the nations of the earth. A strong majority party to put into effect the principles for which it stands and to carry on the Government according to the mandates of those who placed that party in power. That is the function of a majority. But the minority has an equally important function. Its function is to stand guard against the excesses and extravagances of the majority. The minority is the sentinel standing on the watchtower warning and restraining the majority from acts which the free exercise of power unchecked might prove to be dangerous to our institutions and to our Government.

This policy has been recognized from the very moment our country took its place among the great nations of the earth. But what do we find now? A partisanship unheard of in the annals of our country. I challenge the pages of the history of American politics to show as partisan an appointment as the appointment of three Republican Cabinet officers and a Republican Senator and a Republican Member of the House to be the sole members of a commmission which had to deal with the refunding of over $11,000,000,000, contributed alike by the American people.

As against the personnel of those gentlemen I, of course, have nothing to say and could have nothing to say. But there are millions of people in the United States who contributed of their means so that this money could be loaned to our allies and who belong to the minority party. I ask you, do you think it fair, do you think it right, do you think it just that their voices should be silent and that their interests should not be represented in the settlement of these debts?

If they wanted to be fair about this matter, if they wanted the twenty or thirty millions of people who helped to contribute to these loans by their means to be represented, why did they not give the minority at least one member on this commission? I ask you again, I ask the American people, was it right, was it fair, was it proper to deny the minority even one representative on a commission which meant so much not alone to our people but to the rest of the world?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] stated that the obligation of Cuba had been settled by bonds. Can the gentleman state whether there was any remission of any interest in reference to that obligation?

Mr. COLLIER. Of course, I could not answer that question, because all matters connected with this was turned over to this partisan commission, and I gather from the former Senator from Ohio that all these matters are sacred and it would be bad and not proper for us to go into them.

Mr. DENISON and Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois, who rose first.

Mr. DENISON. When these obligations were first incurred and the loans were made and the money advanced, of course that was all handled by one party alone—the Democratic Party?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. And the Republicans were not consulted or asked for advice; and if they gave advice, their advice was not accepted. Is there any difference in principle between letting one party make the obligations and the other fund them?

Mr. COLLIER. There would be no difference in the principle, but there is a great deal of difference in the gentleman stating here something that, with all due deference to him, I may say, are not parallel instances.

Mr. McAdoo was the agent. He got that money through the Liberty bond act, for which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and every other Republican Member of the Committee on Ways and Means and of the House voted; that was to borrow money to loan to our allies. I see what the gentleman is coming to. He wants to ask why Mr. McAdoo did not fund the bonded debt.

Mr. DENISON. I am not coming to anything. I want to ask a question. The same Congress that gave Mr. McAdoo the authority to make these obligations gave him this authority to fund them.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman that there has been some surrender of our rights here. I agree that the matter has been handled in a partisan way. I agree most heartily in all that the gentleman says about the way the party on the other side have acted in this matter. But the question before us now is, What are we going to do if we are not going to do this? [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. I must have expressed myself badly. If any Member here has gathered from my criticism of the administration making an economic question such a partison one, that that would now have anything to do with the final settlement of this question. It should not. I am as anxious to see this debt refunded as any of you, and I have tried my best to get the gentleman from Ohio to tell us why it was that the commission came to the conclusions they have. What proposition did England offer? What happened around the table? I made a motion in the committee that we send up to the other end of the Avenue and get a financier who very often forgets that he is a politician, the Secretary of the Treasury, and ask him some questions, and the motion was voted down. And when I myself tried to get some information, so that I could go home and justify my action to the people whom I represent, so that I could say, "Here are the reasons why we should surrender $1,600,000,000 in an obligation which we took from Great Britain and which was accepted in good faith by Great Britain."

I was told in the usual gentle way by the chairman of the committee that I was delaying the proceding and remonstrated with so often on the ground that I was taking up the time and trying to delay the expedition of the bill that I was practically forced to desist. It was passed through with the most indecent haste. We have had no consideration of the measure, and we have not been able to get any information. Every question we asked would be met with the statement that that question would be a privileged question, and that they could not answer it by reason of making some international blunder. Of course, I do not wish to embroil us in any of those international complications any more than the gentleman from Ohio does. But I do think that when a law is passed by practically a unanimous vote of the House and Senate, putting several essentials into that law and empowering the commission to act up to those essentials, and the commission ignores each and every one of those essentials, the American people have a right to know why these essentials were ignored. We asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], "Please tell us what were the reasons actuating you in ignoring all the essentials in the law which created you?" And all that we could get was the answer that it was manifest from the start that Great Britain would not be able to do this. And the only reason Commissioner BURTON could give us was not anything England's representatives said or did, but was from his personal observation when he went to England.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has the committee of which the gentleman is a distinguished member ever investigated to see what taxes in Great Britain go to subsidies for the support of their merchant marine and for keeping in commission the greatest navy in the world?

Mr. COLLIER. Nobody suggested anything of that sort.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is that not like the case of a man who can not pay his grocer's bill because he must keep up his expense for gasoline for his limousine?

Mr. COLLIER. I do not want to tax anybody beyond their ability to pay. I thought the committee ought to have some information upon which to act. I am anxious, and I know the American people are anxious, to get these foreign debts behind us. We are willing to strain a number of points, and I was trying in all sincerity and to the best of my ability to get all the information I could; but I could get nothing but platitudes and a story about a man who told Senator BURTON that he was willing to pay 15 shillings on the pound to pay the debt, and then he was knighted. Every time we came to those questions they would be declared to be privileged.

My friends, I think this is a matter in which the American people are entitled to have some information.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on this last question of secrecy for a suggestion?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. LONDON. If on the score of secrecy members of the Committee on Ways and Means are prevented from getting at the facts now, why will not the same thing occur in the future? What will prevent it from occurring in the future?

Mr. COLLIER. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. LONDON. I say that on the score of secrecy members of the Committee on Ways and Means were unable to get information and facts.

Mr. COLLIER. We did not get information.

Mr. LONDON. Now, in case England should refuse to live up to the new arrangement in the future, then on the score of secrecy she may be able to get away with it?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Why do you permit that secrecy? Why do you stand for it?

Mr. COLLIER. You may go over there and put it over NICK LONGWORTH and Brother FORDNEY and the balance of them, but I could not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, because of the great importance to the American people and to the rest of the world in the refunding of these debts the majority party in this House owed it to us and to the country that we should obtain some information from a commission of five Republicans in whom was vested all the power to negotiate. I state here on the floor of this House that we did not get that information and were met with generalities only. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 855. An act for the relief of Fred G. Leith, United States Navy;

H. R. 13046. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Wilmington, N. C., marine-hospital reservation; and

H. R. 12007. An act providing for the conveyance of certain land to the city of Boise, Idaho, and from the city of Boise, Idaho, to the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4469. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River in the State of Alabama; and

S. 3892. An act authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5224) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior for restoration to the public domain lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

REFUNDING OF FOREIGN DEBT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I do not believe anyone present will charge me with partisanship ordinarily. I have tried to get at the merits of propositions presented here, and although frequently disagreeing with some of my colleagues on this side of the aisle, I can not see any real question of difference to separate us to-day. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], who has just spoken, my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, has referred to partisanship politics in this matter, and I fear that he has rather represented himself than the people on his side of the aisle, and I do not believe he has done justice to himself, for he is a very able Member. I will leave to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to answer—as I know he will—matters in regard to the inception of this loan. Speaking for myself, I will say that as the loan was made during the war the mantle of fairness ought to be spread over those who undertook to negotiate this loan with Great Britain, and also the loans with other governments, because they acted under a tremendous pressure at that time, and could not do what would be done in ordinary times of peace.

Responding to the question that was asked a few moments ago of the gentleman from Mississippi, as to whether or not England at this time is sending her warships abroad and whether that is not a great expense to Great Britain that might better be paid in interest, let me say that Great Britain to-day is not spending more for her war vessels than we are in this country, according to my best information, and we are at peace with the world. Practically in the throes of war to-day, Great Britain is trying to protect her possessions, and yet in these trying times her cabinet has offered this settlement. So far as the ship subsidy is concerned, and the inquiry covered that—I say this with equal fairness—I do not believe she pays any subsidy in proportion to what has been proposed in the legislation pending before Congress, as the gentleman who propounded the inquiry can readily ascertain.

With this situation abroad, I believe we have all essential facts before us, and I do not ask Senator BURTON to testify on this. We have facts before us that will convince any intelligent man that this was a fair settlement for us under all the circumstances and that Great Britain certainly did a wonderful thing in making good her national credit. [Applause.]

The estimates to-day of able economists show the average per capita debt in this country to-day is $160; that is, after we deduct this British debt, which we can fairly do when the debt obligations are received. That means an $800 national-debt average for a family of five in the United States. In Great Britain to-day, without any substantial prospect of getting back any or practically any debts due her from other countries, her debt per capita is $800, or as much as that of our average family of five; and a family of five in England is obligated on the average to an amount of $4,000. Can we as intelligent legislators fail to recognize the condition that confronts Great Britain to-day or the great effort she has made to meet her war-time obligations? It does not require any additional facts than knowledge of her own comparative financial burdens to understand fully what she has done to meet her promises to us.

I do not care to ask the gentlemen who made up the American Debt Commission to tell all the conversations that occurred over the board or the pleas that were made for or by Great Britain in that delicate transaction. We know what they were, and Great Britain has done a wonderful thing in coming up as closely as she has to the mark and far beyond expectations of this country. [Applause.] In the law which we passed the House never inserted any rate of interest. In that law we never inserted any determination as to time of payment—not when it passed the House. It was the Senate which did both, and we finally confirmed the Senate action; but it was not put in when it passed here. We did provide for the commission; and if there is one thing of which we may well be proud it is of the distinguished Member whom the House furnished as a part of that commission and of the fine work that he did. [Applause, Members rising.] I may say, what is generally appreciated, that our distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is known throughout the country as an authority second to none on the subject of finance. We all understand that, and I believe it is a great credit to the House as well as to the country that he was a member of that commission. In a way I feel pleased to know that in the committee I urged five different amendments, all of which finally became a part of the law under which the settlement was made. As it came originally from the Secretary of the Treasury the bill was without any limitation. The Secretary of the Treasury had sole power to settle in his own way and terms all debts, and the proposition pressed in committee was to put his resolution through that same morning. Members of the committee who were present will remember that five amendments were urged by me to the bill. One was for a commission, another no cancellation of bonds, a third for no substitution of bonds. All those provisions were adopted, and they are the essentials under which the commission acted when effecting this debt settlement, notwithstanding the fact that my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] says none of the essentials are in it. The question of interest becomes a question of England's ability to pay, and with a national indebtedness of $4,000 for the average family of five can we say that they did not offer us a fair proposition when without any expectation of payments to themselves from other governments they now undertake to pay the full face of the obligation and pay interest, not what the Congress originally proposed but an interest rate that is ordinarily paid in times of peace by great governments.

Mr. Chairman, an important factor in arranging settlements with foreign governments confronts us. The present English ministry is jealous of the honor and good name of the English people, never yet tarnished with the charge of debt repudiation.

Strong political interests in England to-day and also in other countries indebted to ours have voiced a protest or hope that in addition to an expenditure of more than $20,000,000,000 apart from money loaned to foreign governments, we should cancel foreign loans aggregating nearly $11,000,000,000. We are not selfish nor mercenary when asking for a repayment of these debts. Apart from sacrifices made by our people when engaged in a common cause we pledged them that so far as we could act these foreign debts would be repaid and their heavy burden of taxation, both local and national, be lightened to that extent. The people gave until it hurt to raise the money. Our good faith is involved in such payments and repayments.

We have a group of international bankers in New York, powerful in wealth and influence, that seeks to undermine our own position by widely published proposals for a cancellation of foreign debts, notwithstanding the law prohibits any such act by the commission. Inspired, as many believe, by a desire to enhance the value of billions of dollars in foreign securities now held by these bankers, as owners or agents, which they would not dream of canceling, foreign governments have been misled by propaganda for debt cancellation into a belief that the American Congress and the country would approve a proposition of that character.

Those advocating cancellation at home or abroad have complicated a delicate situation in these debt negotiations, but our commission has sought to meet every essential under the law and the Government of Great Britain has met their proposals fairly and, in my judgment, equitably.

The settlement of $4,700,000,000 due from England on which amount 3 per cent is to be paid for 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter until fully paid, will practically reach the ordinary interest rate on Government securities within a decade in all probability.

Remembering that international obligations are a matter of faith and not of enforcement other than by military and naval power; that we believe in peace and fought the war to end all wars, and also in the interest of world-wide confidence that forms a basis for all industrial and political strength, I feel the agreement reached by all parties has marked a forward step toward better adjustment of our relations with all governments indebted to ours.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will when I have finished. I have one or two other matters briefly to discuss. One proposition contained in this bill that seems to me of supreme importance is that it establishes a permanent policy for this Government in its transactions with foreign governments. We have here an acknowledgment of our debt. We have here a proposition that there is to be no repudiation by one of the great governments of the world. In my opinion, we could have afforded to go further in order to have that fact established, in order to set a precedent for other governments with which we are to negotiate hereafter. [Applause.] This was admittedly a partisan or one-party commission. I was desirous, according to my original amendment, of having its members come from both sides of the aisle, but I feel that this commission in a nonpartisan manner has secured far more than was expected by the Congress in having an agreement reached to be placed upon the statute books.

Mr. SNYDER. And more than was expected by the public, either.

Mr. FREAR. And more than was expected by the public, as has been suggested by my colleague from New York. Now, as to the other governments, we can not say what the future may bring forth in settlements; but under the terms of the proposition as it passed the House and the Senate in this bill it is announced that no more favorable conditions can be expected by other governments than those given to Great Britain. We may not receive as good terms in all cases, for we can not get money from people unless they have it or can raise it hereafter. But we do know this: That the commission must come back to the House and to the Senate if it can not secure an agreement as fair as this, and its members have accomplished, in my judgment, a splendid work. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I join with my colleague from Wisconsin in lamenting the fact that the gentleman representing the minority of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. COLLIER] has seen fit to bring partisan politics into the discussion of this question. I, however, hope and believe that when the final vote is taken a very substantial majority on that side of the House will be found voting with us in favor of the bill. [Applause.] The gentleman from Mississippi has brought up the fetish on which he has harped for months—that his party has not been allowed on all occasions to sit with the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, while during the war our party, then in the minority, sat with the Ways and Means Committee. That is a perfectly simple proposition. During the stress of war the Republican minority upon the Ways and Means Committee could be trusted not to bring politics into consideration. [Applause.]

I have never said that we had no security from Great Britain or any other country for the loans advanced to them. I merely said that the law under which these loans were authorized was ignored at the time they were made, and I leave it to any unprejudiced lawyer in this House, after I read the section of the first Liberty bond act under which the loans to Great Britain and other countries were made, whether the law was not ignored in receiving the security which the gentleman from Mississippi prizes so highly.

Section 2 of the first Liberty loan act, which for the first time authorized loans to foreign governments, reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act.

Now, what does that mean?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The act says during the period of the war, does it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; it does not limit it to the war period. What is the effect of this provision? It simply authorizes the proceeds of the bonds purchased by the American people to be invested in precisely similar securities issued by foreign governments. There was no authorization whatever to lend cash on a note of hand.

Now, what is the security that we have received from Great Britain and other countries?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman read that provision of the law again?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I can get some more time. Can the gentleman from Michigan yield me more time?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have requests for 20 minutes more time than I have. Will the gentleman from Mississippi let us have a little more time?

Mr. COLLIER. I have requests for 50 minutes more time than I have.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I have five minutes which I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am under great obligation to my friend from California, because I think this matter ought to be straightened out so that we may see just where we stand.

I am not speaking for political effect at all. I am simply asserting that as a matter of fact the law was violated, and in that I am confirmed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who the other day admitted that the law had been violated. I will read the section again, if desired:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act.

That same provision was carried in the subsequent Liberty loan acts. Now what was the security that came into the possession of the Treasury Department? I hold in my hand one of the last certificates of indebtedness, and here are the essential parts of it:

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for value received, promises to pay to the United States of America, or assigns, the sum of $1,000,000 on demand, with interest from the date hereof at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Such a transaction, in my opinion, was not authorized under the law. I am not saying that it is not good security to an extent at least, and possibly the exigencies of the situation made it necessary. But I have said repeatedly and now assert that the law was violated in making it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the gentleman be fair enough to read it all?

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is a provision later for subsequent conversion, but that is not an essential. I said that I read the essential part.

Mr. BLANTON. It provides for giving bond at the rate of interest not less than that charged by the United States for its money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but that is nonessential in the proposition we are now considering.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state to the House whether there is any court on the face of the earth where this security could be enforced and bonds taken?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, what is the use of talking about a court when it is a question of an obligation between two great nations.

Mr. COLLIER. In case of default could it be collected, except by force?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman begs the question. Here is the only proposition: We can not collect that demand note, and every sensible man in the United States and every sensible man in Great Britain knows it. Is there a man anywhere within the sound of my voice who will assert that it is possible under existing conditions to collect $4,600,000,000 from Great Britain, at 5 per cent, on demand? It is too absurd to talk about, and that is all there is involved in this proposition. Instead of having that doubtful security, we have, if we accept the proposition brought in by our commission, a debt funded under such conditions that it can be collected, and that is what the American people are interested in and what the people of Great Britain are interested in. [Applause.]

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not yield. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] says that the two essentials of the law were violated, those essentials being an interest rate of 4½ per cent and a 25-year limitation. If the gentleman thinks that those are the essentials of this law, why did he not insist upon them when the bill was under consideration in the House? And why did he not suggest them in committee? No such suggestion was ever made. The bill that passed this House had no limitation whatever with regard to interest or with regard to the period of the loan.

Those provisions were added in the Senate. If they could have been put in when the bill was under consideration in the House why did he not suggest that they be inserted if he believes them to be essential? As a matter of fact we are getting back more nearly to the attitude of the House on this proposition when it passed the House, and what I think was the proper attitude.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman asked me why we did not put those in in the House. I offered a motion to recommit, when you vested full power in this commission, that this commission be empowered to come back to Congress before they made any settlement, and that motion was voted down.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely, and that is just practically what we are doing now. They have come back to Congress. [Applause.] When did any man on the other side try to limit the rate of interest or the period of time? You say you insisted that any agreement made by the committee must be referred to the House for ratification. Why, that is what we are doing now, and that is what we are to vote upon to-day.

Mr. COLLIER. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio on his at last coming to the subject of my motion to recommit.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just want to get some information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a question whether our obligation to-day from Great Britain is good or not. Of course it is good, but it is not in a form in which it can be executed in detail. This new agreement is creditable to Great Britain; it is creditable to the United States, and it will do much to stabilize financial conditions throughout the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a good deal has been said here this morning about which is the best security, the note of hand which we got during the war, or these bonds that we are going to get now. I do not think there is any difference, for this reason: The notes have not been disputed. Great Britain has never said that she did not owe these obligations and she has shown no disposition up to date to repudiate them. I have great respect for the British nation. I think they have the smartest statesmen in the world, in fact, I think they have bested our statesmen in this proposition, and I am going to tell you why. I have great respect for the British people. You know that they want to pay their debts and I believe they are going to pay their debts. I believe in being generous to the taxpayers of Great Britain, but I think generosity to a foreign taxpayer means putting him on the same basis, on the same level, on the same footing with the taxpayers of our own country. I dare say this commission would have had a great deal of trouble if they had suggested to Great Britain that they pay more interest than we pay. I know that the taxpayers of this country are up against it, and everybody knows it. They are clamoring all the time to reduce taxes. They have had the excess profits tax repealed because it was too much, they said; they said they could not pay it, and they have had the surtaxes reduced because they said they could not pay them, and I get letters almost every day from constituents saying that they are going to have to borrow money to pay their taxes. I believe we ought not to charge the taxpayers of Great Britain less than we charge our own taxpayers. Here is what ought to have been done. I was very anxious to have Secretary Mellon before our committee. He is the chairman of the commission and I think the ablest man in the Republican administration, and also I think he plays politics less than any other man connected with the administration, from the President down. You can always tell where Secretary Mellon stands. When he says to-day that he stands for a certain proposition or against a proposition, you may put it down that to-morrow he will be standing right on that same spot.

I wanted to have Secretary Mellon before us, because I wanted to get as good information as we could from the chairman of the commission. They refused to let him come. Here is what ought to have been done. Mr. BURTON, the gentleman from Ohio, said in 10 years the interest rate will probably be down to 3 or 3½ per cent. Here is the reason it is likely not to come down. The British people will give these bonds, this $4,600,000,000 worth of bonds, that they are going to give this country. Now, under this provision here they can pay these bonds in American bonds. That is perfectly all right. There is nothing wrong about that, but our bonds will draw 4½ per cent, and we are going to have bonds outstanding just as long as those bonds run, or 62 years.

Mr. SNYDER. We have some at 3½ per cent.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Simply in direct connection with what the gentleman is discussing. These bonds will be entirely tax exempt?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. And our tax-exempt bonds at 3½ per cent are now selling at par, which is convincing to my mind we can float 3½ per cent bonds.

Mr. OLDFIELD. All right, why not wait until that time comes?

Mr. BLACK. I think it is here now, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They are not——

Mr. BLACK. We are not issuing tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman stated the English will exchange our bonds, drawing presumably 4½ per cent interest, for their bonds, which draw only 3 or 3½ per cent. I do not believe that the English sense of good business would permit them to do such a thing.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I did not say that exactly. I said the British international bankers can purchase for the British Government bonds to-day at 98.60, 4½ per cent United States bonds. They can hold those bonds until maturity, if they desire, and make 1½ per cent on the money. In other words, the taxpayers of this country would be paying into the British treasury, because the British treasury would own these bonds, 4½ per cent, while the British taxpayers would be paying into our Treasury only 3 per cent.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How long do they run?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Until 1952, some of them, long after the 10 years. Here are some that run until 1952, drawing 4½ per cent. If they can do that, they can force the taxpayer of America to pay into the British treasury, because those bonds are going to be held by the British treasury and held until they are due; it will make our taxpayers pay into the British treasury 4½ per cent semiannually while they pay into our Treasury 3 per cent semiannually. Here is what ought to be done——

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I have not the time.

Mr. HUSTED. For a brief question.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Another thing. I think there is some understanding between the British international bankers and the American international bankers to hold up the interest rate on bonds of our country. It would be easy to do it so as to give the international bankers an opportunity of making 1½ per cent on the money which they owe us. Now, that can be done; and that is what will be done if it can be done, because there are no smarter statesmen on the globe to-day than Stanley Baldwin and Bonar Law and that bunch. There are none who know how to take care of the taxpayer of Great Britain better than they do, and they are always on the job. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. If the British Government can not pay their debts without issuing bonds, where are they going to get the money from to buy our Liberty bonds?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I say we can not pay our own debts without issuing bonds.

Mr. HUSTED. Even if they could make the 1 per cent on the exchange, where are they going to get the money to buy our bonds in order to make 1 per cent profit? They have got to get the money, as they certainly have not got the money to invest in our bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. We are to-day paying 4½ per cent and propose to take 1½ off what our debtors owe us.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They are promising to pay so much each year—$23,000,000 and interest. That amounts to a great deal of money—$150,000,000 or $200,000,000—and if they can make 1¼ per cent on $200,000,000, do you not think the British Government is going to do it? And they are going to make the taxpayer of America pay the difference. That is the situation. There is no way around it. Now, as to partisanship, of course there has been partisanship from the start to finish about this. Mr. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, conversant with all the details in regard to these loans and one of the biggest Republicans in the country, a very able fellow, you do not say anything about. Mr. Leffingwell did more than any other one man to make these loans to Great Britain in the first place during the war. Yet you on the Republican side persist in saying that the Democrats played partisan politics when this money was loaned to Great Britain. Gentlemen, you can not get away with that stuff. You growled all the time during the war; that is, the leaders on the Republican side did. And my good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. Moore, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means at that time, got up here seriously day after day and wanted to take the conduct of the war out of the President's hands and put it into the hands of a commission—I presume a Republican commission. There was partisanship manifested by the Republicans all through the war, if you please, and now you come here and want to give the taxpayers of foreign countries an advantage over our own taxpayers. I do not think it is right; I do not think it is fair to our taxpayers. I believe Great Britain can pay, because I believe if she can pay 3 per cent or 3½ per cent she can pay 4¼ per cent. I think that about it, and you think that about it, too. If she can not pay the debt at all, she will repudiate these bonds just as quickly as she would repudiate a note of hand or any other agreement.

You are going to have trouble explaining to the taxpayers of America why it is you charge the taxpayers of our country more than you charge the taxpayers of some foreign country. I do not say that with any disrespect for Great Britain. She is one of the greatest nations in the world. She has her drum beat all around the world, just as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said. There is no question about that. But it is costing her a great deal of money, and if she did not have to beat so many drums all over the world she might have more money with which to pay her debts.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BOX. When this commission found itself unable to act under the instructions contained in the act creating them, were they able to show any reason for not obeying that act? Was there anything more than an expression of opinion, any concrete facts?

Mr. OLDFIELD. We have had no concrete facts, only a statement from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], a member of the commission. We thought the Secretary of the Treasury would be able to give us the best information. He has less of the politician in his make-up than any of them. But we could get no facts from him. Mr. BURTON gave us no more facts then than he did in his speech here. There were no facts in his speech, but some of the best speeches made both on the floor of this House and elsewhere are void of facts. Lots of good speeches are not intended to contain facts. But there is no reason on earth for not requiring the British Government to pay more than 3 per cent. They are willing, my friends, to tax the taxpayers of America 4¼ per cent and let the British off at 3 per cent and 3½ per cent.

If they want to repudiate the debt, let them do it. That is their lookout. But they are not going to do it. I do not like to see a bill passed here, my friends, that will permit any conspiracy of any sort by which our taxpayers are compelled to pay money into the Treasury at 4¼ per cent and then have our Government pay it into the exchequer of Great Britain and transfer it over there at 3 and 3½ per cent. It is not fair to the American people. I am not going to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, believing that this settlement, all things considered, is a reasonable one, I expect to vote for it. [Applause.]

But I, in common with the men on my side of the House, resent the unfair and partisan way in which this whole matter has been handled by this Republican administration. This is a country of parties, and while minority parties have very few rights, they have always been permitted heretofore to serve on commissions and legislative committees dealing with things going to the vital interests of the people of the United States. Common courtesy demands that they be given this consideration, which was denied us.

Here is a proposition dealing with $10,000,000,000 of the public debt, and the minority party was absolutely refused any representation on the commission. In saying that, I do not want to cast any reflection upon the personnel of that commission. I think they are splendid, able men, and I have no doubt whatever that they did what they believed was for the best interests of the people of the United States. As I have just said, I think their proposal a reasonable one, and I expect to vote for it.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an ordinary debt between nations in peace time, or a debt like a debt between two individuals. Let us consider briefly the history of this debt. When we entered the war it was to our interest to see that the Allies maintained their armies in the field. Shortly after we declared war the Russian Army collapsed and was withdrawn from the conflict. Our allies were being hard pressed for money, and the Congress of the United States knew that if our fighting allies could not get money to purchase supplies for their armies, they would have to withdraw them from the battle fields and America would have to send many more million boys overseas to carry on the conflict than she would if the Allies continued to function. So it was suggested that as our credit was good and the Allies were paying to private individuals as much as 6 per cent or 7 per cent for money, that we loan them money, and we thought it was to our selfish interest that we make these loans.

I was on the Committee on Ways and Means during the war and was present when all of these loans were authorized. It was the intent of Congress that we should lend this money to the Allies at the same rate of interest we had to pay to raise the money by selling our bonds. We did not care to make any money on the transaction, but we wanted to give them, our allies, battling for our rights as well as theirs, the benefit of our credit and let them get the money as cheap as they could.

Gentlemen of the Congress, do you not know that about every dollar we loaned England was expended in the United States for the purchase of cotton, cotton goods, machinery, war material, and food supplies to be used in the prosecution of the war in which we were actively engaged? The sum so expended here increased our national wealth, and the United States Treasury benefited to the extent of millions of dollars by receiving income taxes and excess-profits taxes from the American citizens who made money out of these expenditures. Do you not know also that England loaned to our mutual allies fighting with us approximately $6,000,000,000 to enable them to maintain their armies, and none of this colossal sum has been repaid England to-day?

Now, that is the history of this transaction. That being true, is it to our honor or credit to be like a Shylock and demand the last drop of blood, even if we could collect it, which we can not? The President and our funding commission say to Congress this is the best settlement we can get. I conceive it to be my duty as a Representative to represent the United States and my people in exactly the same way that I would represent myself in an individual transaction.

Now, what are the facts in this case we are called upon to decide? England, like most of the world, ourselves included, is staggering under a great debt and tax burden. There is economic unrest and unemployment there as there is elsewhere in all the world, and what humanity to-day craves above everything else is stabilization of the world's economic conditions and a return to a peace basis.

Now, when our Government made these loans it took demand obligations, the first ones drawing 3 per cent, and finally the obligation of Great Britain took the form of a promissory note payable on demand and bearing 5 per cent interest. That was made during the war as a war loan to help our allies carry on a common war, fighting a common enemy. Now the war is over. In war time interest rates are always higher than in peace time. These loans were made during the greatest war of history. Happily that war is now over. England owes us approximately $5,000,000,000, and no sensible man for a moment believes that it is possible for England to now pay that colossal sum on demand, as their note we hold provides. The foreign debt being in an uncertain and chaotic condition, therefore, the wise and sensible thing to do was to fund and settle the debt. Congress appointed a commission to do that. That commission was limited as to the time to which they could extend the debt and as to the rate of interest. Under the terms of the act of Congress the commission could not extend the time beyond 25 years nor agree upon a rate of interest lower than 4½ per cent. Now, I wish we had more information as to what transpired between our commissioners and those of Great Britain. I recognize, however, the delicacy of the situation from an international standpoint. We are called upon to approve a settlement which, in effect, requires Great Britain to pay us interest at the rate of 4½ per cent up to the 15th of last December, which equals the interest we had to pay on our bonds to obtain the money to loan them, future interest from the date of settlement to be at the rate of 3 and 3½ per cent. The time of the debt was extended to 62 years. Our funding commission entered into a tentative agreement for a settlement of the debt on this basis, stating to the English representatives that it could be put in force and effect only when Congress gave approval to it. We are now asked to ratify that agreement. I sought and desired all the information I could get. Why, our commission even tentatively agreed to a proposition that contravened the limitation under which the commission was acting as to the time and the rate of interest. May I read to you a question which I asked our colleague, Senator BURTON, who was a member of the commission, when he testified yesterday before the Ways and Means Committee, he being the only witness that we had before the committee, though we sought to have others:

Mr. CRISP. I understood you to say that the representative of Great Britain said they could not and would not fund the debt under the terms of the original act.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; they practically said that again and again. Whether we ever put up to them the question, "Will you pay that?" and they said "No," I could not absolutely recollect, but in substance that question was presented to them a great many times. We pointed out to them, "There is the statute under which we are working, and we desire you to come to that."

But they would not come to that. Now, gentlemen, a contract is mutual. Both parties to the contract must agree to it. It was manifestly to our interest that this debt be funded, and here the contracting parties could not agree under the terms under which our commissioners were acting.

If they could not agree and would not agree to it, what is our alternative? Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, there are only two ways to collect an international debt. One is by the voluntary payment of the debt. The other is by the use of your Army and Navy. We to-day have many thousand brave American boys sleeping in Flanders Field and thousands of others in the United States maimed and crippled for life. God knows I would not vote to snatch any American boy from his mother's arms, nor any husband from a loving wife, to send him overseas to collect this debt [applause], and I say to you what you all know, that it is unthinkable that there should ever be a conflict between the two great English-speaking nations on the earth over money. But I do say that this settlement is a reasonable settlement. Most of the wars that have been fought have been fought over commerce, money. Here are the two greatest nations on earth, the English-speaking nations of the world, setting an example to the world showing that they can amicably adjust their business relations, even to the amount of $5,000,000,000, to the welfare and honor of both nations. That in my judgment is what this settlement does.

Gentlemen, America is very much interested in selling our surplus products, and the market for them is broad. My own section is vitally interested, because a great part of the cotton crop is bought in England. If Europe becomes bankrupt and can not purchase our cotton, the American mills will have a monopoly, and I have no doubt the price of cotton will be greatly depreciated. In 1914, owing to submarine warfare, when Europe could not purchase it, the price dropped to 5 cents per pound. The West and other sections of this country are likewise interested, for their surplus wheat and meat products are shipped abroad. If the English Government and the other governments have to pay all these colossal sums at once, their purchasing power will be destroyed, and their currency depreciated and become of very little purchasing value. What I say about the English Government of course applies to the others, for if this settlement is made all the other governments are entitled to the same terms, and our great Government of course will extend those terms to them. If they have to pay these colossal sums at once in money, they can not purchase our surplus products, and that will keep the economic condition of the world upset. Some may say "If they can pay according to the terms of this agreement, why should they not pay under the old terms?" When this debt is funded it will be amortized and the English Government will know that it has only a certain amount of interest and principal to pay each year.

Their industrial life will become stimulated, their economic conditions will be stabilized, and they will go to work to create the wealth necessary to meet the payments due under the funding agreement. Until the debt is funded, their financial affairs are uncertain and chaotic, but, when funded, they will know how to proceed.

They can levy their taxes accordingly, and they can and will, in my judgment, meet these payments, whereas it is physically impossible for them to meet the payments under the terms of the war obligation which this Government holds. Do you know that to-day the English people are paying the highest taxes of anybody in the world? Their income tax is higher than ours. We come next to them. Our taxes are next to theirs in the degree of burdensomeness; but the per capita taxes in the United States are $160 a year, while the English per capita is $800. England's bonded indebtedness aggregates the enormous sum of $35,000,000,000, five-sevenths of which was expended in the prosecution of the war in which we were engaged. Her indebtedness approximates 50 per cent of her national wealth. The wealth of the United States is estimated at two hundred and eighty-six billions, and our national indebtedness, deducting the amount owed us by the foreign nations, amounts to a net debt of about $12,000,000,000, or only approximately 8 per cent of our national wealth.

Now, gentlemen, if you had as an individual the note of a debtor who could not pay at once, if he had defaulted on the interest for years and had not paid any of the interest, if he proposed to fund that debt, to amortize the principal, and you believed that by doing so you could get your money, what would you do? You would extend the time, just as when you have an insolvent creditor who has gone into bankruptcy you will take anything you can get.

My friend [Mr. OLDFIELD] had a good deal to say about the possibility of England buying up our bonds and making a profit on the interest. I do not believe that will happen. I think that is a mere straw man, for I do not believe England, when she has not the money to pay her own obligations, has any money to buy our bonds. England is a debt-paying country, and if she had the money, in my judgment, she would pay the last shilling of this debt. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] is a mere myth and will not amount to anything. But even admitting that it is true, I do not think this great Government of ours can refuse to accept its own solemn obligation—its bonds—in payment of an indebtedness owing to it.

But should the English Government attempt to buy up our bonds, seeking to make a profit out of them by virtue of the different rate of interest, we have a complete remedy. Under an act of Congress we have a sinking fund in the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use this fund in purchasing any United States outstanding bonds and canceling the bonds so purchased. If Great Britain were to buy any United States bonds and hold them to collect a higher interest than they are paying us, our Government would purchase the bonds from her, which England could not, in good conscience after this settlement, refuse to permit, and cancel same. In peace time our Government can easily float bonds nontaxable, as the English bonds will be, at the same rate of interest provided in this funding proposition, 3½ per cent. To-day United States bonds, nontaxable, bearing a rate of 3½ per cent are selling above par. Mr. Speaker, I am unalterably opposed to canceling the debts due us by the foreign nations of the earth and will always insist on their paying every dollar of the principal with a reasonable rate of interest thereon. The proposition we are to-day called upon to vote on provides for the payment of every dollar of the principal owing us by England with interest thereon at 4½ per cent up to the date of this settlement, the debt bearing interest from that date at 3 and 3½ per cent. I am not a financier, but all financiers agree that bonds to run over a period of 62 years, nontaxable, issued by one of the greatest nations of the earth are a fine investment, yielding 3½ per cent interest. Before the European war, English consols, or their bonds, sold at par, bearing only 3 per cent interest. Therefore, I do not think the United States is making any sacrifice in settling this war debt with its principal ally on the basis proposed in this settlement. Mr. Speaker, Great Britain is the only nation of the world owing us that has made any effort whatever to settle her indebtedness, or has responded to our invitation to enter into negotiations for funding same. It is certainly to her honor and credit that she regards as inviolate her obligations and wishes to settle them so far as her ability to do so permits. As I have before stated, I am opposed to the cancellation of the amounts owing to us by other nations, and, in my judgment, the funding of this debt will be notice to France, Belgium, Italy, and the other nations owing us that the United States demands and expects them to pay their indebtedness, and I have no doubt that national pride and honor will induce them to fund their debt on the same basis as herein proposed. Would not every American rejoice to-day if he knew that we would be paid back the principal owing to us by the foreign nations, with 3 per cent interest on each? I am a Democrat and have my share of partisanship, and I am willing to play politics on domestic questions where the welfare of humanity is not involved. I do not arrogate to myself superior virtues over my colleagues, but accord to each of them the utmost sincerity of purpose and believe that they vote their convictions having in mind the best interest of the country, just as I do. In my judgment, the war-torn, tax-burdened, weary world longs, above everything else, for stabilization of world conditions which will tend to promote the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people of the world. In my judgment, the funding of this debt is the first step inaugurated by this administration that tends to do this. Therefore, I shall not let politics nor, possibly, my own personal political welfare deter me from voting for a proposition that, from the depths of my soul, I believe is fair and reasonable to the contracting parties and tends to promote the welfare and happiness of humanity. Therefore, I am going to vote to fund this debt as proposed in the resolution before us. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BEGG having taken the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 6, 1923:

H. R. 6294. An act promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico.

On February 8, 1923:

H. R. 11731. An act to provide for the renting of the first floor of the customhouse at Mobile, Ala., to the Mobile Chamber of Commerce.

H. R. 12473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Winco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

REFUNDING OF FOREIGN DEBT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I wish to compliment the gentleman who has just left the floor [Mr. CRISP] over the fair, unbiased statement that he has made. He has put the discussion on the basis that the committee would like to hear discussed in this great transaction. It is in sharp contrast with the position of some of the minority who, on the foreign-debt question, are not in position to throw stones. I do not believe I am overstating when I say that this is the largest transaction in the way of payment of obligations in the history of the world. When you look over the figures that will entail the debtor country, the amount of payment, the sum total when completed—the principal of $4,600,000,000 and accumulated interest—will amount to $11,105,000,000 that one government is to pay another government. When a sovereign power engages in a solemn obligation such as this is, to respect and satisfy a debt that was contracted in war time, when nobody thought of the terms except to win the war, it is a tremendous undertaking and reflects credit not only on the debtor country but great credit on the commission that has brought to consummation this transaction. [Applause.]

I want to note the merits of the proposition the commissioners have brought in. It is to be paid in dollars and not in sterling. That does away with the possibility of the debtor country inflating its money in order to make easy payment. No one can overlook the importance of that. In Germany, now, her public debt has been canceled by the simple process of inflating the mark. Even in France the franc has gone from normal down to about 6 cents, so that debts paid in francs are paid at about one-third of their normal value. No such possibility of debt scaling is allowed in this settlement. The obligation is also permitted to be paid in bonds, and that makes sure immediately that there will be no discount of the American securities, because it offers a new market for our own obligations. It will, on the other hand, greatly appreciate their value. [Applause.] That is one of the chief features of the transaction, and discloses the wisdom of the commission. It is one of the surest ways to strengthen Government credit. Besides these two features, it makes certain a definite amount of income each year to our Government and our Treasury, an income from one source, definitely set out in this plan of settlement, which makes easy future financing of our Treasury in future obligations that we are to take up. All elements of indefinite calculations on the foreign debt are removed. These are some of the merits from our Government's standpoint of this tremendous consummation. Gentlemen, we are apt to overlook the burden of this debt and properly sympathize with the attitude of the countries concerned. It certainly reflects credit on the debtor country. In the first place the United Kingdom of Great Britain faces tremendous problems of ominous seriousness. Her changing Empire in the last 10 years, especially during and since the Great War, is one of the most outstanding symptoms of a modern trend of colonial governments throughout the world.

These facts should not be ignored in the adjustment of the greatest fiscal transaction in the history of the world. Look at her uncertainty in India. Anyone who has followed the recent movements in India must recognize, in spite of her wonderful work in that part of the world, that Britain has a problem in that country. Look at the present situation in Egypt. Anyone who has followed the modern trend there must recognize that Great Britain has a problem there.

Think of the enormous debt of the British Empire, $33,000,000,000 or more, when it was only three billions when the war began, according to the best authorities. It has been estimated to be as much as 46 per cent of her wealth. Our wealth has been estimated as high as $300,000,000,000, but if we make it $250,000,000,000 and include in our public debt all of the loans that the other governments owe us, outside of Great Britain, our debt would only be then 7 per cent of our wealth, while Britain's debt is nearly one-half of her wealth. In the light of these facts we should realize that the tremendous outlay that Great Britain agrees to pay us is only one-sixth of her total indebtedness. So I say to you, my friends, that when a nation like Britain comes up and meets her obligations as she has agreed to in this proposal no one can overestimate its abiding results. It is no desire on the part of America to drive a hard bargain and we do not mean to do so in this plan. On the other hand, when Britain acts as she has in this case, freely, we ought to show her leniency. It would be different did she complain that she did not owe us.

It must not be overlooked that this debtor country's chief source of wealth is in her merchant marine. We are now on the sea, and will in time become the chief competitor in her main source of wealth. Her attitude in thus freely admitting the obligation and her specific steps to pay, notwithstanding her heavy taxes, reflect great credit upon her honor.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I regret that I can not yield. I want now to say something on the interest item. In addition to this side of the discussion there is another consideration, if you view the future from the past, and that is that 3 or 3½ per cent is not a lower rate of interest than we will be financing our own obligations after we have reached stability. We had that rate in the Panama bonds, and we even went as low as 2 per cent in some bonds; but to be absolutely fair, that is not a good comparison, because the bonds at 2 per cent had a circulation privilege, which does not make it a good comparison. But with our credit assuring stability, as it will, our bonds are going above par, and we will see American bonds selling for more than 100 per cent, as they did before the war.

Mr. SNYDER. The 3½ per cent bonds are above par now.

Mr. FESS. As the gentleman from New York says, our 3½ bonds are above par now, and just as certainly as we stabilize conditions and secure this agreement we are strengthening our national credit, and our bonds will steadily increase in value. The provision in this bill which accepts our bonds in payment of the debt will prevent their discount by creating a foreign demand for them.

Everyone who studies the current of credits will also note that as our bonds go up our interest goes down. That is the law of all international transactions as well as governmental business.

Now, in the minute I have remaining I want to succinctly state what I think will be the specific results in the larger sense of this measure. The world will see as the result of this the greatest single transaction the country has ever undertaken, in my judgment, in some ways the greatest act for general stability since the armistice; that it is the prelude of other European settlements and sets a standard at once for all debtor countries. Secondly, it shows that the possibility of governmental defaults upon international obligations has been removed, and this twaddle in Europe and in certain sections in America urging, if not demanding, the cancellation of these debts will be forever ended. [Applause.] In addition to that, and as a result of it, stability in Europe will be advanced by the people setting their houses in order and proceeding upon business lines as no other thing up to date will insure.

So long as Americans, from whatever reasons, agitate for cancellation, whether it be based on business, altruistic, or foreign-market arguments, there will be a disinclination for these countries to take the proper steps to insure economic stability. This measure will have at least the merit of putting an end to this sort of misguided judgment.

With the economic recovery in Europe on its way, capital will begin to flow to Europe, and American capital will seek that field as a safe one for investment and in this way will assist Europe as well as ourselves. Besides that, this measure will create a better feeling between the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon or English-speaking people, which will insure stability, if it can be secured, both politically and economically, and peace in the world, if peace is possible, will be advanced in the interests of all peoples. I compliment this commission and this committee upon this remarkable achievement that is to be its second step in the incorporation into law to-day by what I predict an almost unanimous vote of this branch of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Under the rules of the House under which we went into the committee to consider these resolutions there were to be four hours of general debate. I raise the question in order to say that there should be a fair division of the time. Nearly three hours have been consumed, and yet there have been only two speeches against this resolution.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is about the proportion in the House against the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is not what the rule provides or what the arrangement was.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman want two hours?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; but we ought to have some time.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman is about the only one who is against the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad that there is at least one against the bill besides the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. We are entitled to a fair division of this time, and I think the time has been running long enough, so that there ought to be a little more consideration given to the few men who oppose the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not within the power of the Committee of the Whole to change the rule that was adopted by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I raised the question yesterday evening and I raise it again this morning to see that those in opposition would be given time, and we were assured that we would be given a fair division of the time, and the time is not being fairly divided now. This is just a mild protest.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, this has been a most interesting debate. During the debate and during the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee one or two things which might have been mentioned were overlooked, and I think perhaps it might be well to call attention to them now.

In the first place, it was not good hard money that was loaned to Great Britain, in the sense that the money was turned over to the one who borrowed it. This money did not go to Great Britain to be expended by Britain in payments to its own manufacturers, laborers, and farmers. We simply established a credit for them here; all the money to be paid to our manufacturers, to our laborers, and to our farmers. It might properly have been called a due bill. It is about the same as though the owner of a department store were to make a contract with a builder to construct a building and to pay him for it in goods. That would be quite an advantage, would it not? I think this ought to be kept in mind when we consider whether 3 or 3½ per cent upon the entire face of the loan is fair or not. We have not permitted Great Britain to make repayment in kind. They have not been permitted to pay in merchandise. In fact, we have passed a tariff law which has raised the duties upon British and other foreign products.

There is another consideration. To my mind it is a very distinct advantage to have the payment of the loan spread over a period of 62 years. This goes to the purchasing power of Great Britain, and if settlements are made with other countries upon the same basis it will go to the purchasing power of all these countries, and this method of settlement means that they are going to be able to buy more of our American products. Some of our people have thought it so important to increase the purchasing power of the European debtor countries that they have even advocated the entire cancellation of the loans. Those who do not go that far will at least agree that the long period for payment will make it possible to sell more of our manufactured goods and farm products.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, yield for a brief question?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I have been trying to find out whether the arrangement means that Great Britain shall issue bonds of small denominations or whether it means that we are going to get a diplomatic piece of paper such as we obtained in 1917? What does the arrangement mean?

Mr. YOUNG. My impression is that those bonds will undoubtedly be issued in the customary form of Government bonds. I doubt if the commission worked out the details to show the denominations, but undoubtedly there will be formal bonds issued somewhat the same as they are issued now in Great Britain and such as they sell to their own people, and they will be sent here.

Mr. LONDON. The proposed law does not demand it.

Mr. YOUNG. This ratification does not require it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman speaks a little hastily. On page 2 there is the statement that the total principal of indebtedness as of December 15, 1922, "for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par."

Mr. YOUNG. I believe that was my statement. Formal British bonds will be issued. The gentleman asked in what denominations. I do not know whether they will be in $500 denominations or in $1,000 denominations.

Mr. LONDON. The British Government bonds may be of five documents, each for $2,000,000,000, say.

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, there is reason in all things. I do not think any such settlement is proposed. This is a good-faith proposition all around.

Mr. LONDON. The original bond that was given by Great Britain——

Mr. YOUNG. That was simply an I. O. U., and informal proposition, and this agreement calls for the giving of formal bonds.

Mr. LONDON. It was a bond as much as any obligation could be.

Mr. YOUNG. I think the gentleman is unreasonable in his criticism.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I am friendly to the bill and I shall vote for it. But I want to know whether the bonds will be denominations and amounts that will place them on the general market or whether it will be a repetition of a Government statement in writing, such as we had in 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have watched with considerable interest to see what the attitude of the minority of the House would be on this very important question. I have been very much pleased to see that many of the membership of the minority are doing what I think they should do in this matter—approving of it; but I have been disappointed to see some of the leaders of the minority upon the Ways and Means Committee opposing this very just and wise proposition. To those I want to say a word or so. It seems to me, gentlemen of the minority, as to those of you who oppose this proposition, that you are putting yourselves and your party in a very undesirable position.

In the first place, we all voted for these Liberty loan acts, and authorized President Wilson to make certain loans to foreign countries. We provided, in effect at least, that those loans should be made during the period of the war and close at the end of the war, and we provided that they should be made by taking the bonds of other countries. That was not done, as has been stated, and the obligations taken were not obligations such as were prescribed by the act, but were, in my opinion, in entire violation of the letter of the act. Not only was that true, but after the period of the war ended over a billion dollars of this money was loaned at times when I have always contended, and now contend, under the law it was absolutely illegal to do so. Not only was that true, but over $150,000,000 of this money was loaned to people who had not been allies of ours in the war, but were our enemies. Now this was done by the last administration. And during the time that administration kept in power and up to March 21, 1921, not a single step was taken toward the funding of this debt, not a thing, and the impression was prevalent over the world, and held in other countries very strongly, that it was our intention never to insist upon the collection of that debt.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have not the time. There was the impression that it was never our intention to collect this money; whether created rightfully or wrongfully, that was the impression. On the first of March, 1921, when President Harding came into office with his administration everything was in a condition of uncertainty. No one knew what the obligations were; there was nothing found except these diplomatic promissory notes of no legal and binding effect, because everybody knows that the only way one nation can bind itself to pay money to another is by its bonds, issued by authority of the legislative bodies of those countries. The day came along when we desired to have authority to have a debt-funding commission appointed. I say nothing in regard to the question of whether we should have had a bipartisan commission, that is not a matter to be considered now. I want, however, to call attention to what happened when that matter came up in the House. When it was taken up in the House on October 24, 1921, for the passage of that bill, almost the entire minority of this House voted against it, and almost the entire majority voted for it. The ayes were 200 and the nays were 117, the nays being almost entirely from the minority. In the Senate, January 30, 1922, the yeas were 29 and the nays were 26, the minority opposing it. At the time when we were trying to appoint a commission and straighten matters out, the minority in this House and the minority in the other House joined in opposition to our doing anything at all. Now, gentlemen of the minority, and those of you who oppose this proposition to-day, your party can not stand safely upon the proposition of opposing the passage of this bill, when the only proposition of settlement that could be made is brought before us and is in the bill.

No party can stand on that record. No party can afford to do it, and I say to you now, gentlemen of the minority, that, while we would like to have you join with us in the passage of the bill, we will pass it whether you join or not. It is a just proposition, it is a sound proposition, and one of the things which the people commissioned the majority party of this House to do at the last election.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I have not the time. If you are not going to do this, what are you going to do? Are we going to sit still and do nothing? Are we to continue the policy adopted by the last administration, sit idle and do nothing? To reject this proposal would bring disaster. You ask us why we are taking these bonds at a lower rate than the original interest. The reason is we are getting bonds in lieu of ambassadorial notes; we are getting the debt funded. This funding will lead to the funding of the rest of the international debt in a similar manner and reestablish amity and credit throughout the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this debt of $4,604,128,085.74 with interest from December 15, 1922, which Great Britain now owes the United States represents loans we made her during the recent war, which Great Britain and her allies entered against Germany, because that war-mad Imperial Government treated sacred national obligations as a scrap of paper.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio would have us and the country believe that the sacred obligations which the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland signed and gave our country, evidencing this stupendous loan of $4,604,128,085.74 made during the war, is now deemed by England a mere scrap of paper. He and other prominent Republican leaders would have us believe that such obligations are not collectible at face value, and, secondly, if we sought to collect face value on same, we would be Shylocks demanding our pound of flesh.

There is nothing Shylock in the proposition of demanding settlement of a debt at face value in kind, especially where the debtor is financially able to fund a settlement at face value. Where money is borrowed on certain terms and the terms are met by money being paid back or promised to be paid, according to the agreement, there is no pound of flesh in the proposition. The settlement becomes a Shylock transaction only when the unreasonable is demanded, and flesh and blood rather than money is the resulting sacrifice.

What are the facts? Under what conditions did we enter this war and make this loan of $4,604,128,085.74 to England? Belgium had been invaded and devastated, and was facing annihilation. Russia, after nobly defending one frontier, had collapsed and was taken over by enemies and no longer in a position to render aid, but was becoming a costly liability. All of Russia's artillery had been captured or destroyed, and her crushed soldiers ragged and barefooted and rapidly renegading. France, sore and bleeding, had her back to the wall. Italy was ready to give up the struggle. England was practically upon her knees, and, like France, had her back to the wall. Under such conditions these countries sent their various commissions to this country, many of whom were received on this floor and addressed this House, and all appealed for help and financial succor. They represented to us that European civilization was in the balance and that without immediate financial help ruination would surely result.

Not only did our country mobilize and train 4,000,000 soldiers and send many of them across the seas to their assistance but we loaned them over $10,000,000,000. Our Government did not have this money to loan. It had to borrow it from the people of the United States. It had to issue Government bonds and sell these bonds to the people of the United States. Many of these bonds were bought by the poor people of the United States. Vigilant committees were formed in every community in the United States, who represented to all citizens that unless they bought bonds to the uttermost limit of their financial capacity they were yellow and not patriotic. In instances where certain citizens failed to buy bonds their homes and business houses were in the nighttime painted with yellow streaks, and they and members of their families were ostracized by neighbors. Many citizens were forced to borrow money and buy bonds. Some were insulted, killings took place between former friends and neighbors over the question. Some of these bonds bore interest as high as 4¾ per cent, payable semiannually in cash. And during the deflation period many families were forced to sell their bonds far below face value in order to pay back the purchase money they had borrowed at the banks.

When so raising this money through issuing and selling our bonds to our people, in order to make these foreign loans, Congress did it under a law which assured our own people that England and the other foreign countries accepting such loans under the terms of such law would pay us in bonds carrying the same rate of interest which our Government had to pay for its money borrowed. And Woodrow Wilson, the great American President, saw to it that our rights were thus protected. Did he take a mere scrap of paper? Did he take a worthless document? Was it a mere unauthorized I O U, noncollectible between honorable governments? Ah, no; he did nothing of the kind. Why is it that no Member yet has read the kind of an obligation that he took from these foreign countries? Would it not have been as little as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] could do, in fairness to Woodrow Wilson, when he criticized this obligation, to have read it to you and placed it in the RECORD, so that it would clearly appear just what kind of an obligation Great Britain is now under to the United States? Here is a copy of one of these certificates of indebtedness which Great Britain gave to the United States, signed and executed by her representative, every time she got a dollar in loan from our Government:

CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS—SEVENTH SERIES—$1,000,000.

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for value received, promises to pay to the United States of America, or assigns, the sum of $1,000,000 on demand, with interest from the date thereof, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Such principal sum and the interest thereon will be paid at the subtreasury of the United States in New York, or, at the option of the holder, at the Treasury of the United States in Washington, in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness, or, at the option of the holder, at the Bank of England, London, England, in pounds sterling, at the buying rate for cable sterling on London in the New York market at noon on the day of such demand, as determined by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and at any such place of payment, without deduction for any British taxes, present or future.

This certificate will be converted by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America, at par, with an adjustment of accrued interest, into an equal par amount to 5 per cent convertible gold bonds of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland conforming to the provisions of acts of Congress of the United States known, respectively, as second Liberty bond act, third Liberty bond act, and fourth Liberty bond act. If bonds of the United States issued under authority of said acts shall be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4¼ per cent per annum, a proportionate part of the obligations of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of this series acquired by the United States under authority of said acts shall, at the request of said Secretary of the Treasury, be converted into obligations of said Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland bearing interest at a rate exceeding that previously borne by this obligation by the same amount as the interest rate of the bonds of the United States issued upon such conversion exceeds the interest rate of 4½ per cent but not less than the highest rate of interest borne by such bonds of the United States.

For the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

_____ _____:

_____ _____:

Dated this — day of ———, 1919.

Is that a mere scrap of paper? Not if the debtor is an honorable nation with ability to pay. Just such a certificate of indebtedness as the foregoing did our Government take from Great Britain for every loan we made her, and we now hold certificates of indebtedness such as the above duly signed and executed by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland covering the entire $4,604,128,085.74 now owing us by Great Britain. And I submit to the lawyers of this House and to the lawyers of the United States that, considering the stress of war during which this money was loaned, we could not have drawn up a more binding obligation had the matter been submitted to the entire membership of the American Bar Association for drafting. What more could Woodrow Wilson have done during this stress-time emergency of war? What more could he have gotten from Great Britain to hold as a proper evidence of indebtedness until the war could be won and in the after-war settlements Great Britain could then issue bonds under legislative authority?

Yet the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says that it is merely an unauthorized I O U; that it is a mere scrap of paper; that it is noncollectible except by force of arms; and that in order to now secure proper bonds from Great Britain, in accordance with the terms of her agreement, we must take what we can get; we must be willing to sacrifice part of what is due, otherwise we might not get anything. He and those with him would have us believe that Great Britain is bordering on insolvency; that we are dealing with a bankrupt. And he intimates to us that the bonds which under this sacrifice he proposes for our people to make in order to get them will be collectible without force of arms. What is there about such bonds that will make them more collectible than the present certificates of indebtedness we already hold? I am not surprised at his display of ignorance on legal matters. Unfortunately for Mr. LONGWORTH, after he took his course of law at Harvard and then finished in the Cincinnati Law School and received his law diploma, instead of continuing in the practice and learning more about the law he shortly let his friends place him on a school board and then went into politics, and has since been too busy to learn much about the law.

What will make the bonds of Great Britain collectible? It will be the honor of Great Britain. It will be the stability of her faith and credit. Without such we would never be able to collect one penny on such bonds from Great Britain, for our Nation will never collect any money debt by force of arms. The identical same thing that will make the bonds which we are to receive collectible will make the certificates of indebtedness we now hold equally collectible. The honor of a great nation is behind the certificates of indebtedness we already hold. That is all Great Britain will put behind the bonds she is to give us, the honor of Great Britain. And that is enough to make these certificates of indebtedness worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Now, under what authority was this Debt Funding Commission created? What limitations did we place around them? How far did we tell them they could go, and when did we tell them to stop? By section 2 of the act creating the commission Congress thus limited them:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or other obligations due the United States of America by any foreign government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4½ per cent per annum.

Thus Congress, representing the American people, whose $4,604,128,085.74 was loaned to Great Britain, instructed this Debt Funding Commission not to extend the time of payment beyond 25 years, or 1947, and not to accept a rate of interest less than 4½ per cent, which was amply authorized by the certificates of indebtedness executed and given us by Great Britain.

And in section 3 of such act, creating such commission, Congress, representing the American people, further provided:

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to authorize * * * cancellation of any part of such indebtedness except through payment thereof.

And the rate of interest on deferred payments constituted just as much a part of said indebtedness as the principal sum. And the commission was thus definitely instructed by Congress not to cancel any part of the principal, interest, or rate of interest on deferred payments. Therefore this commission was instructed not to extend the time of payment beyond 25 years and not to fix the rate of interest on deferred payments at less than 4½ per cent.

Any statesman in any party would assume that in appointing five members of such a nonpartisan commission to handle debts aggregating the stupendous sum of nearly $11,000,000,000 the Executive would appoint two Democrats from the minority party, or at least give them some representation on the commission. But to our surprise President Harding placed only orthodox Republicans on this commission. And not one single Democrat and only a very few Republicans have been able to find out what actually transpired during the conference that resulted in this unauthorized and unwarranted settlement.

And what are the excuses now offered us for accepting it? We are not accepting it, for that term implies discretion. We have no discretion in the matter. It is being thrust upon us. It is being now forced down us. We have to take the medicine because the doctor says so. We can not refuse. It is alleged there is no other alternative. When we confront the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] with the direction Congress gave him and his confederates that they must not extend the time beyond 25 years, this distinguished statesman tells us that Congress was shortsighted, that it did not know what was good for the American people, that for this four and one-half billions of dollars to be paid back to us within 25 years would bring disaster to our Government and to our people, that it would go to our head and cause too much prosperity in the United States.

Analyzing his position, do you know what that means? Just one thing. That where a country during war could mobilize, train, arm, and ship 4,000,000 soldiers across the seas, and then finance, borrow, and raise in cash over $10,000,000,000 and loan it to its allies, then for Great Britain to pay back $4,000,000,000 to such country within 25 years would make a fool out of the United States. Are we in such splendid financial condition that we could not safely assimilate $4,000,000,000 if paid to us in 25 years? Why, our Government now owes approximately $23,000,000,000. Just a few months ago we had a deficit of $760,000,000, and the only way it has been reduced was through the sale of our capital assets. Our annual expenses are approximately $3,000,000,000. We have an unsettled outstanding obligation due our ex-service men of about $3,000,000,000 in adjusted compensation. It ought to occur to any business man, and more especially to every statesman in the United States, that our country could place to very good use the sum of four and one-half billion dollars if collected during the period of 25 years.

Now, as to the other excuse that this action was necessary, that Great Britain was not financially able to pay the face value of her certificates of indebtedness. Has that position been proven?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is there any statement by this Debt Settlement Commission to the effect that the British Government at this time is bankrupt?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if they had so stated we would not believe it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Have they stated it?

Mr. BLANTON. No. We know better; we know it by the conduct of every Britisher who has come to this country within the last two years, who has gone back home with an arrogant, supercilious slur upon us.

If Great Britain were unable to pay the face value of her obligations with an extension of 25 years for payment, why did not she so represent the matter to our commission? And in such case, why did not they return to Congress and so state the facts? In such a situation Congress would have gladly extended proper leniency. And our commission would have kept within the law and obeyed our instructions. But without bringing any such representations to us, and without bringing any proposition whatever from England to us, our commission went beyond the law and exceeded its authority by proposing to Great Britain that she should have 62 years in which to pay off this debt, and should be allowed the interest rate of 3 per cent for the first 10 years and 3½ per cent for the other 52 years, and entered into a tentative settlement with Great Britain on that basis, under such circumstances as prove that they knew the President and his administration would approve of it, and would order his 170 majority in this House to ratify it. I am not going to do it. I am not going to sanction such high-handed methods by my vote.

Why Great Britain is the mistress of the seas. She boasts that the sun ever shines upon her dominions. Her titled nobility live in luxury and extravagance. She complains that she is forced to tax the royal estates of her great lords and noblemen, which is causing some of their immense land holdings to be sold, and that she only wants to tax their incomes, and does not want to force them to sell any of their lands.

Notwithstanding the fact that she owed us $4,603,128,085.74 she has made every kind of claim imaginable against our Government and collected the money from us in cash. We paid England immense sums for transporting our soldiers to France to save her and all Europe from destruction, and she has not hesitated to charge us at every turn. The claims she has made against us, and which we have paid, would disgust any fair-minded citizen. Since the armistice we have paid Great Britain sums approximating $1,000,000,000. She did not offer to let us credit it on what she owed us, but had our Government pay her the money. One of the German ships which we took over in New York after war began, and which under international law we would have been authorized to keep ourselves, we permitted to be given to Great Britain as part of her reparation against Germany, and because we used this German ship during the war to transport our troops and supplies to Europe for England's defense, England is now asking that we pay her several hundred thousand dollars for such use of said ship during the war. Upon just such ridiculous claims as this did we pay England nearly $1,000,000,000 since the armistice. And by passing this resolution to-day you are to make England another present of about $2,000,000,000 in interest that belongs to the American people, who are now taxed most heavily themselves. I am not going to do it with my vote.

I am not going to ratify a proposition where our agents have exceeded their authority. What we ought to do is to vote down this resolution and reinstruct our commission to have a new conference with Great Britain's commission and have them advise us whether they are financially unable to meet their obligations with a 25-year extension of time and the interest rate they contracted, and if they are not then to make us the best proposal they can, according to their financial ability, and then let Congress, and not an unauthorized Republican commission, grant them the necessary concessions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I regret to find myself out of accord with some of the leading members of the Committee on Ways and Means on my side of the House as well as with other colleagues in whose judgment and patriotism and loyalty I have such profound confidence. But this is a major question with which we are dealing to-day. I share with my colleagues who are opposed to this measure the resentment which they feel on account of the way in which this business has been handled from the beginning by this administration. I share the resentment which all fair-minded men must feel at the action of the administration in making this commission the representative of one party alone upon a purely business transaction. I share the resentment which is felt toward the attitude which the majority party maintained toward the Democratic war administration from the very close of the war. I deplore the fact that through their machinations, indulged in for partisan political purposes in the main, a great program which was laid down by the great Democratic administration was interfered with, and that as a result of that interference desolation came throughout the world, and for their folly men, women, and children everywhere on earth have paid in torture and toil and tears. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, that resentment which I feel does not in my opinion justify me, as a Representative in the American Congress, in rejecting the only thing which this administration has done that has even a tendency toward stabilizing world conditions, and I shall support this proposition. [Applause.]

I do not support it for the reason given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] a few moments ago. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that this side of the Chamber needs no lecture from him in order to enable it to do the thing that is right and the thing that is statesmanlike. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his recollection of the facts. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is mistaken when he asserts that the Secretary of the Treasury originally in taking these obligations violated the law. I have not the time to go into that now, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and I fought out that proposition on the floor before when we had up the matter of the creation of this commission, and I am satisfied with the record as it stands. Who expected that the Secretary of the Treasury at that time would literally take bonds of Great Britain? The people of this country who were buying Liberty bonds paid their money months and months in advance before they ever got a bond. They simply got the obligation of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury took the I O U's of the British Government to be replaced by bonds. He acted within the law. He acted in the only way that he or any other Secretary of the Treasury could have acted. So far as the security is concerned, gentlemen are nonsensical when they assert that the security contained in these bonds will be any better than the security behind those I O U's. [Applause.] All that was behind those I O U's and all that is behind these bonds is the faith, the honor, and the integrity of the British Nation. [Applause.]

Now I will tell you why I am for this settlement. I do not know whether these gentlemen could have done any better or not. I know that they did not do any better, and you gentlemen upon the Democratic side of the Chamber who are disposed to vote against this settlement because you think it is possible that they might have done better, let me ask you, What do you hope to gain by voting it down if you had the power to vote it down?

Do you hope to abolish this commission? Why, no. Do you hope to have a nonpartisan or bipartisan commission? Why, no; you can not hope that from this administration. Where will you be if it be voted down? You will be in the hands of the same commission dealing with the same questions; you will be in the hands of the same administration. In God's name do you say we shall wait another two years, that the Democratic Party shall go before the country saying that we shall wait for another two years, for Calpurnia perhaps to have sweeter dreams, before we will take a step toward settling this indebtedness and stabilizing to the extent that we can the affairs of the world?

Losses! Well, after all, that is speculative. That will depend upon world conditions in the future as to whether we shall lose by this transaction. Sixty-two years is a long time, even in the life of a nation. What vicissitudes will occur in the world during that time we do not know. Oh, from the time we began to make these loans—and I always favored the loans—I have felt that these international debts were going to be a source of irritation, of annoyance, of possible trouble between nations through at least half a century and perhaps a full century. If there be some financial sacrifice in this, and that is speculative, I think, Mr. Chairman, we can afford to make that sacrifice in order to have this much settled and to that extent remove a possible cause of irritation and the dangers of future conflicts. [Applause.]

Some gentlemen talk about this as though it were a debt between individuals. Not so. Nations can apply the same principles to the settlement of debts between themselves that are applied between individuals, but they have not the tribunals that individuals have. There is no court before which we can sue and obtain a judgment, there is no international sheriff to enforce an execution. There are just two ways, Mr. Chairman, in which this money will come into our Treasury. One is by voluntary payment on the part of the nations that owe us. The other is by the arms of the United States being sent forth in the hands of the young men of the United States to collect the debt.

This does much more than settle the basis of the indebtedness with England. This, if I interpret it correctly, fixes irrevocably, unless Congress shall change its action in the future, the basis which must be adopted in settling more indebtedness than is involved with England, to wit, the indebtedness of France and Italy and Belgium and all the other nations that owe us. This fixes the terms upon which they, too, will pay. Do you believe there is an individual in the United States to-day reasonably well informed of the conditions in foreign nations who would not regard it as a splendid transaction if we could have the assurance, even such as is given here, that we shall obtain from France and Italy and Belgium and Czechoslovakia and those other nations 3 and 3½ per cent on the indebtedness that they owe us?

This transaction can not be judged by the British debt alone. It fixes inevitably the basis upon which all the other settlements are to be made.

Whether England has done all she could do of course I do not know. I think it is reasonably certain that we can not expect these other nations to do more, even if this basis were not fixed. The great proposition involved here is this: It looks toward the stabilization of the world. [Applause.]

There may be complaints here and there about the rate of interest. I do not know. Temporarily, at least, we are paying more upon our bonds than we will receive upon these; but there is a larger aspect, there is a broader vision, there is a greater thing. The happiness, the prosperity, the peace of the human race will be at least advanced somewhat by the adoption of this settlement. And for that reason, feeling my responsibility as a Representative, I am willing to forget the partisanship that has been manifested by Republicans, I am willing to forget the narrowness of the administration that happens to be in power. I am willing to forget the indecencies of their campaign of 1920, in order to try to rise to the bigness of the subject and the bigness of the hour. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this talk about the prior obligation negotiated under the former administration not being as binding as the bonds to be issued is absurd. But that is beside the point. What ought we now to do, all things considered? The agents of this Government have been in negotiation with the agents of the British Government and report an arrangement, agreed to by the agents of the British Government, looking to the refunding of its debt owing to this Nation. Payments are to be extended through a long period. That is necessary because everybody knows and all will admit that Great Britain can not pay the debt now. It is necessary for our own interest to have these payments gradually made. Money is the blood of commerce. It is as dangerous to the body to get too much at one place as it is not to have enough in another. If we are to sell our surplus cotton, grain, live stock, and so forth, we must leave our customers with something to pay for them.

As I understand from this debate, the difference between Members is largely a question as to interest. The proposed rate on the British bonds is 3 and 3½ per cent, while our own tax-free 3½ per cent bonds are at par. When I consider the conditions in Great Britain, financial, industrial, and political; when I consider the general world conditions, and the probable effect, I am unwilling to take the responsibility of throwing this matter back into negotiations because of the difference in the interest rate. That is the clear-cut issue. I have no responsibility with reference to the negotiations or the result thereof up to this time. All the negotiations come from the party in power. But regardless of the view of the minority with reference to how they have proceeded, the fact is they have proceeded. We come now to pass judgment on the situation as it is this day, upon our duty as it is this day. Great Britain is having its political difficulties. The talk of repudiation is not unheard in that country. What would be the effect upon public opinion there of the failure to ratify the results of the negotiations which have been in progress no one can foretell. But no student of conditions which obtain can fail to appreciate its probable effect. We can not afford to take the chance of throwing this matter back, even if a little higher rate of interest should have been agreed upon.

The strain upon that nation is great to-day. How much more it can stand nobody knows. But everybody knows that the failure of these negotiations would add to that strain, reduce the chances of having even the principal of our debt paid, and imperil the markets for our products. Not only that, but in the midst of a world disorganized and confused there are two great nations on the earth, and only two, upon which rest the major part of the responsibility of holding the world together until sanity and order shall have come again to the world. If Great Britain goes, there will be but one—your Nation and mine. I do not know what was the best our representatives could have done, but I do know that in the state of public opinion in Great Britain there is a limit beyond which the present Government there can not go and remain in power. Nobody can guess what would happen then.

Every man should vote on this question assuming his share of responsibility as though his vote would determine the issue. No man should take the position in his own mind that if he votes against ratification all he will have to do will be to criticize it, because it will pass anyway and he will not have to answer for the results which would have followed if the proposition had been defeated. If we should throw the matter back into negotiation and uncertainty we would do that which, in my judgment, the present condition of the world does not justify us in doing. This is perhaps the most tragic and dangerous hour in the world's history, and I do not believe that any man who looks with understanding at the world situation can fail to recognize that government, broadly speaking, in the world was never in greater peril. This is a solemn hour for the man who has the responsibility of being a Member of the American Congress. On one hand is the rate of interest, on the other the matter of adjustments, of greater assurance of payments, of contribution to world stability, of greater probability of preserving a market for our products. The influence of disintegration, political, economic, moral, and religious, working in the world to-day, and I am not a pessimist, is characteristic of that period between the fifth and tenth centuries when the world went into the Dark Age in its history. I do not believe that a more solemn hour ever came in the world's history than this. I am willing to share responsibility. I may make a mistake, but its consequences can not possibly exceed a matter of 1 per cent per annum in interest, and it will make more sure the payment of the principal; it will make more sure a market for my people; and without a shadow of doubt will help toward world stability.

Now let us see about this trade. This is a business transaction. I am talking now about this as a plain, common-sense business transaction—the American Government on one hand and a hard-pressed creditor on the other. Every man who has ever represented clients engaged in the wholesale business, for instance, has confronted the situation where a creditor who in a bad condition is unable to meet his payments as they become due. What is the horse-sense thing to do? Take a chance on forcing repudiation, of losing the debt and a good customer besides, or getting around the council table with the representatives of the creditor and determine the best thing to do and agree to do it? That is the common-sense thing to do. [Applause.] Never in my life, nor did any of the rest of you who represented a client that had as much at stake as our client, this nation, cavil over the difference of 1 per cent interest. [Applause.] I do not say that much is involved. Our 3½ per cent bonds are selling at par, and these British bonds run that high; I do not recall the exact figures. Let us remember one other thing: Of all these war-loan debtors this Nation has to-day, England is the only one who will even talk with us about paying. [Applause.] Now, I want to help them along; I want to encourage them; and I want them to set a good example for the other debtors. [Applause.] The rest of them are either talking or acting repudiation.

We are not dealing simply with England's debt to-day; we are dealing with the great international debts owing to this Republic. I want to make them understand that we will be kind, that we will be reasonable, but that we expect them to "come across." [Laughter and applause.] That is the practical, common-sense thing to do if nothing more was involved than the collection of our debt. We can not sue these creditors. There is no court to hear the case and no constabulary to enforce the judgment. But what do we do under similar conditions even when we do have courts and sheriffs? I challenge the common sense and experience of any lawyer here that whenever a lot of debtors of his clients got into a situation like that in which our European creditors are now, most of them not even talking about paying at all, and one of them makes a proposition as favorable to his client as this British proposition is, I challenge the experience of any lawyer on the floor if he ever turned down the proposition. I am not willing to do it, especially when I consider the inevitable effect toward world stability which would come from its acceptance and the inevitable contrary effect which would come from the rejection not only upon world conditions but upon the markets in which my people must sell their surplus products.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS].

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of Congress I want to congratulate all who have been instrumental in bringing to pass this just settlement of the greatest financial transaction of all ages. It is a settlement. Already it has been approved by the British Government. It has been met with almost unanimous approval by the people of this country and shortly will have been officially indorsed by the American Congress. In my judgment, on the final vote there will not be more than 25 recorded against it. Why should there be? Why should anyone vote against an agreement that is just and fair to both parties? We do not wish to exact the last ounce of the pound of flesh.

This is a settlement with honor. The debtor nation says that this far we can go and no further. We accept that statement in good faith.

As I have said before, this is the largest business deal since the creation, and probably there never will be a transaction of such magnitude again. I hope this resolution will be the first and the model for others that will bring about as just a settlement of all our international credits.

This fair and equitable settlement of the indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States will go down in history as a great achievement in a great administration. This resolution, which will be adopted to-day by the House of Representatives, and the Limitation of Armaments Conference write the Harding administration indelibly on the pages of history as one of the great administrations of the American Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, no one feels more than I do to-day my limitations in this debate. I would be very glad indeed if I could follow some very good friends of mine on the minority side of the House and vote for this proposition, but I have not read nor have I heard an argument from anyone that will justify me when I go back home to my people, from whom I recently came—and more recently than most of you—and sustain the position of a vote whereby, in my opinion, we give to the Government of Great Britain in a period of 62 years approximately more than $2,000,000,000 in interest.

At the present time, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the debt of Great Britain to this country amounts to $4,135,818,358.44 as principal. The interest (including the interest due November 15, 1922) amounts to $611,044,201.85, making a total indebtedness to this country of $4,746,862,560.29. I talked this morning with the Treasury Department, and they tell me that at the present time these demand obligations of Great Britain due this country carry a rate of interest of 5 per cent.

We are asked to solemnly cast our votes to reduce that interest rate from 5 per cent to 3 per cent for 10 years and to 3½ per cent for a period of 52 years. Should we do it? By what process of reasoning can we come to the conclusion to do it? Should we do it from patriotic motives? Should we do it because we love Great Britain? Should we do it because Great Britain is a bankrupt nation? Should we do it to help the people down home who are paying enormous taxes? Right down here in the Internal Revenue Bureau to-day I know a man who has been assessed as high as $40,000 and who only has until a specified day in March to seek relief from that assessment. Has there been any let-up of the burdensome taxes in this country except to repeal certain surtaxes in favor of the rich interests of the country?

I ask you men here, who have to vote, and who have to go back home and meet the folks two years hence, how are you going to justify your vote in giving Great Britain more than $2,000,000,000 in interest? The funding act, passed February 9, 1922, allowed the World War Foreign Debt Commission to refund or convert and to extend the time of payment of foreign debts due us provided the interest should not be less than 4½ per cent and that the period of time should not be extended for payment beyond June 15, 1947. That is what this commission was authorized to grant to Great Britain. Practically everybody voted for that. What did the commission do? Great Britain said to them, "We can not pay now; we can not pay these demand obligations; we want time." The commission said, "Very well, we will give you time," and they gave Great Britain time—62 years. Great Britain still was not satisfied; they wanted a reduction of interest. Our commission became generous and liberal and agreed to recommend to the President and Congress a reduction from 5 to 3 per cent for 10 years and to 3½ per cent for 52 years.

Let us say that you owe a bank money on a 12 months' note. You are called upon to pay that loan at the expiration of the 12 months, and you can not pay it. You say to the bank, "I owe this money and want to pay it, but I can not do it now," and you ask for time. The bank agrees that it will give you time; and then suppose you turn around and say to the bank that you not only want time but that you want a reduction in the interest rate from 5 per cent to 3 per cent or 3½ per cent. What would the banker say to you?

According to my calculation, if this bill we are now considering becomes a law, for the first 10 years we would be giving to Great Britain 1½ per cent in interest, which would amount in 10 years on the debt now due to $593,357,820. During the 52 years Great Britain would be given three-quarters of 1 per cent in interest, which would amount for that period of time to $1,856,277,398.48. Adding what we give to Great Britain in interest for the 10 years with what we give in interest for 52 years, we have a grand total of $2,449,635,218.40. These are the figures.

Let us consider the matter for a moment as to the amount of interest we are giving Great Britain, calculating the reduction in interest from the present 5 per cent which is now being charged. For the first 10 years we would be giving Great Britain 2 per cent, which, according to my calculation, would amount in 10 years on the debt now due to $875,372,512.10. And during the 52 years Great Britain would be given 1½ per cent in interest, which would amount for that period of time to $3,413,952,796.80, a grand total for the 62 years of $4,289,325,308.90.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. No; I can not yield; I have not the time. I want to read you now something from a very good authority.

This is a statement prepared and submitted to Secretary Mellon, Secretary Hoover, Senator Smoot, Representative Burton, and Secretary Hughes by Mr. Walter S. Tower, American commercial attaché in London—a man right on the ground, an $8,000 per annum employee, or officer of the Government, who has studied this question. What does he say? Let me read it to you:

AMERICAN EMBASSY, OFFICE OF THE COMMERCIAL ATTACHÉ,
London, January 31, 1922.

The main points in the plan for refunding foreign debts owed to the United States, as proposed by B. F. Yoakum, probably would meet with general approval not only in the United States but also in the debtor countries.

There are two fundamental ideas which apparently lie behind the suggestions:

First. The need for reduction of taxes in the United States, and,

Second. A definite arrangement regarding payment of interest and principal of war debts to the United States, in order that the European countries may know exactly where they stand in this matter.

Both of these objectives are not only desirable but necessary for the full recovery of industrial and trade activity.

The main idea in the Yoakum plan is to refund the debts at 4½ per cent interest for 50 years, with 2 per cent sinking funds. The bonds given by the European nations on this basis could then be used as collateral by the United States Government for the issue of, say, $5,000,000,000 of 4½ per cent Treasury bonds, which would refund a like amount of outstanding war loans. Interest and sinking-fund payments on the foreign government issues, held as collateral for this domestic issue, would provide for both interest payment and amortization.

From the standpoint of the European countries, I believe the plan would be acceptable, in the main; 50 years is long enough for any refunding issue to run and 4½ per cent is not too high a rate of interest, at least under existing circumstances.

The immediate criticism which I am sure would develop, however, would be that Britain alone is in a position immediately to pay interest on its share of the debt, to say nothing of payments into a sinking fund. Clearly France is not now and for five years may not be in position to pay anything either on interest or principal account. For Italy it may be 10 years before such payments can reasonably be expected. Even Britain, according to some opinions, can and will pay only in the event that the United States takes a firm stand and indicates the necessity of having such payments undertaken immediately, whatever may be the effects of such payments on the fiscal policy of the British Government. I think a good many financial men here believe that it would do this country a good service to have the United States adopt a firm attitude toward such payments from Britain, because of their feeling that much of the British Government fiscal policy is unsound and foolish.

If the suggestions made by Mr. Yoakum were modified in such respects as to provide for postponing interest payment, and payments into the sinking fund, according to the varying prospective ability of the several countries to discharge their obligations, I think the opinion here would be very favorable to such a solution of a vexatious and disturbing problem. Such postponing of interest and sinking fund payments as would be required, for instance, in the case of France and Italy might modify somewhat the idea of issuing a United States domestic loan for refunding war issues on the basis of the European government securities as collateral on account of the fact that only the British share of the collateral would immediately have value through meeting of interest and sinking-fund obligations.

As Mr. Yoakum points out, however, a United States Treasury issue does not need collateral, and the possible exception to his plan, made to cover the present inability of certain of the debtors to meet their obligations, would not destroy the value of his suggestion as an apparently satisfactory and effective solution of the debt question.

WALTER S. TOWER,
American Commercial Attaché.

I dare say that this gentleman has made a greater study than has this partisan commission that we are asked as Democrats here to sustain. I want something else besides the advice of a partisan commission to justify me when I go home to the folks and ask them to send me back. I want something more than a vote to give away to the British people over $2,000,000,000 in interest and to grant an extension of demand notes of $4,600,000,000 of Great Britain for 62 years.

What are the reasons assigned why we should be so liberal to Great Britain in this settlement? I take it that the statement of Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, of the Debt Funding Commission, in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee furnishes for the proponents of this measure the most forcible reasons, and in all fairness I incorporate them in my remarks, as follows:

The proposed settlement must have the approval both of the President and the Congress. It is to be noted that the rate of interest is lower and the term longer than that fixed by the statute creating the commission. It is extremely desirable that a settlement should promptly be made on the plan outlined for the following reasons: First, in fairness to Great Britain. England is the only country which has come forward with a proposition looking to an immediate settlement of debts incurred to this country during the war. Also, it is the sole country of Europe which is providing for current expenditures by taxation. In order to do this it has been necessary for her to impose a burden of taxation far heavier than any of the leading nations has ever imposed in time of peace. A commendable pride in her credit stimulates a desire to meet all her obligations. In this connection it must be said that while the debts of the various nations of Europe to us should not be canceled, a considerate, yes, a generous, policy should be adopted in the terms imposed. It must be recognized that all of our allies in the late war made sacrifices far in excess of those suffered by the United States, however great our own may have been. Each is carrying a weight of obligations approaching or even surpassing one-half of all the wealth they possess, accumulated through centuries. Universal bankruptcy is threatened in all of them unless conditions improve. The ability to pay their obligations must be based upon faith in the future.

Second, as a practical matter. The rates of interest, although lower than those now prevailing, are not lower than in normal times. The average rate of return on English consols for more than 50 years prior to 1914 was less than 3 per cent. The rate reached a minimum of 2.4 per cent in 1897 and was less than 3 per cent from 1880 until 1909. There is every reason to believe that, notwithstanding the unfavorable situation created by the vast amount of national debts and the loss of resources by reason of the war, there will be a marked decrease in interest rates in the next 10 years. Since the peak in 1920 there has been a fall varying from 1 to 2 per cent in the United States, in the return upon investments and the rate at which new securities can be floated. In the time of the Civil War our Government issued securities at 7.3 per cent and also 6 per cent, payable in gold. There was a very marked fall soon after the close of the war.

Third, there is a financial advantage which can hardly be measured which inures to the people of the United States in case rates of exchange become more favorable to our debtors.

This would mean greatly increased purchases from us, especially in cotton and meats and all the varied products of agriculture. A crushing weight of taxation in any country will seriously diminish its purchasing power and fetter industry.

In conclusion, it is scarcely necessary to mention the stabilizing effect in finance and trade which a settlement of this debt would accomplish. Quite as important as anything is the good will which would be promoted by a settlement of debts which, so long as they remain unliquidated, are sure to promote controversy and ill feeling.

When the taxpaying citizenship of this country, who are groaning under the heavy weight of taxes, look at this statement of Mr. BURTON they will begin to compare notes and see about the justification for the passage of this bill. We are dealing to-day in the consideration of this bill primarily with Great Britain.

I assert that Great Britain never anticipated such favorable terms of settlement. The leading and oldest journal of practical finance and trade in Great Britain and a paper that more nearly represents the substantial thought of the people of that country in financial matters is The Statist, and in this connection it is well to quote from this paper. In the issue of January 22, 1921, on page 122, in an article entitled "British debt to United States of America," in discussing the refunding of the debt the paper uses this sentence:

It is hoped that Lord Chalmers will be able to secure a 5 per cent rate in funding the demand notes.

And again on May 28, 1921, on page 1009, The Statist published an article entitled "British debt to the United States," as follows:

FINANCIAL NOTES.

BRITISH DEBT TO THE UNITED STATES.

Further information on the course of negotiations between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States as to the settlement of our war debts to the United States was given by President Harding in a speech delivered in New York on the 23d instant, in which he outlined a tentative scheme which, it is understood, is being submitted to the British treasury. The new scheme has reference not to measures for repaying our indebtedness but to changing the form of our obligations with a view to making our creditors the general public of the United States instead of the United States Government. To secure this end it is suggested that the demand notes now held by the United States Treasury be converted into bearer bonds which are to be distributed to the public in exchange for the Liberty bonds at present held. The principal and interest of these bearer bonds would be payable by the British Government in dollars, and would be guaranteed by the United States Government. Special terms would, of course, be given in order to insure that the bonds would be accepted by the public in exchange for Liberty bonds. From the point of view of the United States Government the operation would be a favorable one, as, if successful, it would be tantamount to paying off a considerable portion of their unfunded indebtedness. From our point of view it would have the advantage of converting our obligations to the United States, amounting to nearly £1,000,000,000 at the par of exchange, from an obligation payable on demand to a long-term debt, for the term of the bearer bonds proposed is 30 years. Against this, however, must be set the fact that our annual interest charge would have to be substantially increased in order to make the debt in its new form acceptable by United States investors, and this is an important consideration in view of the position of the New York exchange. The merit of the scheme from our point of view obviously depends on the extent of the increase in interest charges to our Government, but considering that the proposed bearer bonds would have the guaranty of the United States Government, the operation could scarcely be more costly to us than if we sought to achieve the same end by floating a loan in the United States for the purpose of repaying our demand notes. It is understood that if an agreement can be arrived at as regards the scheme, it will be extended so as to cover the whole of the Allies' debt to the United States Government.

And, again, on September 23, 1922, page 440, The Statist published the following article:

FUNDING THE DEBT.

On Tuesday it was announced that the chancellor of the exchequer, Sir R. Horne, would head the Government delegation to America to arrange with the United States committee the terms of the funding of our debt to the United States. In view of the proximity of the negotiations (Sir R. Horne is to leave on October 18) it will be useful to set out the existing position of our American debt. The details, as on March 31 last, are shown in the following table:

Debt of United Kingdom Government to United States Government and United States nationals.

(Amount outstanding on March 31, 1922.)

Form of debt.	When payable.	Amount.	Sterling equivalent at $4.40 to 1 pound.
Government loan	On demand	$4,166,318,358	£946,891,000
5½ per cent 10-year bonds	Aug. 1, 1929	116,331,600	26,453,000
5½ per cent 3-year notes	Nov. 1, 1922	53,421,000	12,141,000
5½ per cent 20-year bonds	Feb. 1, 1937	143,587,000	32,633,000
American loan (unpaid balance)	Oct. 15, 1940	13,850	3,000
Total		4,479,731,808	1,018,121,000
Add unpaid interest on Government loan		509,148,000	115,715,000
Grand total		4,988,879,808	1,133,836,000

During the last financial year our debt to America was reduced by $209,909,000, equivalent to £47,707,000 at an exchange of $4.40 to the pound, and between March 31 last and September 16 a further reduction of £9,435,000 has been effected. The total debt owed by our Government to the United States on March 31 last stood at $4,988,879,808, or £1,133,836,000 at $4.40 to the pound, which is slightly below the current rate. The gross amount includes $4,166,318,358 in demand notes and accrued interest thereon amounting to $509,148,000. Of the remainder $53,421,000, or £12,141,000 at $4.40 to the pound, is payable on November 1 of this year, $116,400,000 is due in 1929 and $143,600,000 is repayable in 1937. It may be presumed that the amount due on November 1 next will be retired at maturity.

The demand notes, which constitute the bulk of the debt, are held by the United States Government and not by United States nationals. It is with these alone that the American allies' debt refunding act is concerned as regards our own portion of the debt, and it is with these that the forthcoming discussions will be concerned. The act referred to has entrusted the handling of the negotiations on the American side to a committee appointed by Congress, under the chairmanship of Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury. The discussions to take place are limited by the act to matters of detail rather than general principles. Thus it is already fixed by legislation that the demand notes at present held by the United States Government are to be exchanged for long-term bonds. The bonds to be issued in exchange by us are to be bonds of our Government and no other, no set-offs in respect of debts owed by other governments to us being allowed. The maximum currency of the bonds is fixed at 25 years and the minimum rate of interest they may bear is 4½ per cent. Subject to these limits the negotiating parties are to agree upon the rate of interest on the bonds and their term and the manner in which interest and amortization is to be paid.

Perhaps the chief interest of our creditor in the arrangements to be made for funding the debt is the possibility of selling our bonds to United States nationals, and thus acquiring ready cash before the maturity of the debt, and without doubt the American committee will have this end in view throughout the discussions with our delegation. It is safe to forecast that when the long-term bonds of our Government are made available they will be offered to American investors, backed by the additional guaranty of the United States Government. The American Government can naturally borrow more cheaply in the New York capital market than our Government could, and, consequently, bonds guaranteed as to principal and interest by the home Government can be absorbed in the United States at a lower rate of interest than if they carried the guaranty of the British Government alone.

The rate of interest which we will have to pay on our debt to America, therefore, depends mainly on the marketability of the funding bonds in the United States and the valuation which American investors are likely to place on securities of the home Government. At present the United Kingdom 5½ per cent bonds (1937) are quoted at around 103 in Wall Street, having fallen substantially in price during the past fortnight. At this price they offer a direct yield of £5 6s. 10d. per cent and a yield with redemption of £4 19s. 8d. per cent. The 5½'s of 1929 at 106¾ give a flat return of £5 2s. 11d. per cent and a redemption yield of £4 7s. 3d. per cent. As regards United States Government securities in New York, the 4¼ per cent Liberty loan, 1932–1947, offers a flat yield of £4 4s. 7d On the whole it would appear that a British Government 4½ per cent security would have to be offered at a discount in New York, and, even if backed by the guaranty of the United States Government, would not find an eager market if yielding only 4½ per cent. It must be remembered also that the force of the gilt-edge boom has been spent for a considerable time in New York and the appetite of investors for fixed interest-bearing descriptions will be in the near future as it has been in past months. If, therefore, the American Government contemplate a transfer of their United Kingdom Government credits to the general investing public, in all probability we will be called upon to pay on our funding bonds a higher rate of interest than the stipulated minimum, 4½ per cent. In view of the huge size of the debt the ultimate decision as to the rate of interest is one of great importance to our financial position. At an exchange of $4.40 to the pound the total of our demand indebtedness amounts to £946,891,000, on which 1 per cent represents nearly £9,500,000 yearly. If we assume that our Government will have to pay 4½ per cent on the debt, our annual interest remittance to the United States Government will be in the neighborhood of £48,000,000. Adding accrued interest, the total amount in respect of principal to be paid to America is £1,062,000,000. Assuming that payment is spread equally over 25 years, the annual payment would be about £42,000,000. The statement, therefore, that during the next quarter of a century our annual remittance to the American Government will be at amounts varying from £90,000,000 down to £40,000,000 presents a fairly accurate picture as to the extent to which our war borrowings from America are going to affect our national finances. Obviously, our American debt will from next year onward place a strain on our resources so great that we can not afford to talk lightly of remitting the debts owed by our allies to us. From the American point of view it means that the Government will be granted a long respite before they are forced to retrench in expenditure and will find it easier to launch out in popular schemes such as that embodied in the soldiers' bonus bill. The American industrial community must, however, be prepared for many years to come to tolerate an excess of imports into the country. Any attempt to prevent an increased influx of commodities through the medium of tariff legislation will simply result in a restriction of exports of American commodities.

It will be noted from these various articles that the rate of interest which Great Britain hoped to be able to secure was ranging from 5 per cent to 4½ per cent, and that the time period which they hoped to get was 25 years.

Now, what has happened to change the situation? Our debt commissioners were instructed by Congress to make no settlement to extend beyond June, 1947, and to grant no rate of interest of less than 4½ per cent.

What has brought about this sudden change? Congress is not informed. We are told that the delicate situation forbids our securing this information from the commissioners. Even the powerful Ways and Means Committee can not secure this information. It is locked up in the breasts of this partisan commission, and we are asked to vote as a gift to Great Britain billions of dollars and to do it blindfolded and on the say so of this commission.

I for one am not willing to do so, nor do I believe the American people are willing to go into this proposition. Why should we not take the American people into our confidence in this matter? The question of the settlement has been submitted to Congress, and the American people are entitled to know the real reasons which are now hid behind the curtain, which cause the commission to recommend the settlement.

It is well in this connection to call to your attention what our Government is paying in the way of interest on its bonds.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 159, gives the following information:

Liberty and Victory bonds outstanding June 30, 1922.

First Liberty loan 3½ per cent interim certificates	$267,950
First Liberty loan 3½ per cent bonds	1,407,650,600
First Liberty loan converted 4 per cent bonds	12,475,400
First Liberty loan converted 4¼ per cent bonds	525,107,100
First Liberty loan second converted 4¼ per cent bonds	3,490,000
Second Liberty loan 4 per cent bonds	54,113,050
Second Liberty loan converted 4¼ per cent bonds	3,253,661,950
Third Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds	3,469,741,800
Fourth Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds	6,339,167,050
Victory Liberty loan 3¾ per cent notes	14,609,400
Victory Liberty loan 4¾ per cent notes	1,985,842,100
Total outstanding	17,066,126,400

Most of these bonds are long-term bonds. Some of them run until June, 1947.

I desire to call especial attention to that provision of the bill now under consideration which provides as follows:

Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

Now, under this provision what is to hinder the British Government or its bankers or agents from buying our Liberty and Victory bonds, which draw from 3½ to 4¾ per cent, and pay off all the British debt by the interest saved by the transaction? This is not unlikely and it is most probable. It is possible for Great Britain or her agents to buy up Liberty and Victory bonds and pay us back at the expiration of the term of the American bonds, and in the interim we would find our Government paying Great Britain or her agents 3½ per cent, 4 per cent, 4¼ per cent, or 4¾ per cent on the American bonds, as the case may be, and our Government only receiving 3 per cent and 3½ per cent on the British bonds. The possible action as above indicated by Great Britain or her agents would enable Great Britain to pay back her debt to us by the profits made out of us in the difference in interest, and a calculation will demonstrate this, I confidently assert.

The great argument in favor of the proposed legislation is Great Britain's inability to pay. A careful study of the internal affairs of Great Britain, I take it, will show that country has recovered rapidly from the war. I think it is well to call to the attention of the House and the country—and especially at this time, when our President and the leaders of the majority side of this House have refused to permit the soldiers' and sailors' compensation or bonus to be taken care of by the payments to be made by Great Britain under this bill—to the liberal way in which Great Britain has taken care of her sailors and soldiers of the World War, and I desire to insert for public information, and especially for the information of our veterans of the World War, who have been denied their adjusted compensation by this administration, the following statements, one by Mr. Carl Meyer, December 6, 1921:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Legislative Reference Service.

War gratuities to soldiers and sailors.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A.—ARMY.

I. Gratuities to noncommissioned officers and men. (London Times, December 20, 1918, p. 5.)

A royal warrant of December 19, 1918, authorizing a gratuity to noncommissioned officers and men was issued as an army order. (Army Order No. 17, 1919.) The minimum gratuity payable to a soldier is as follows:

(1) Private, lance corporal, lance bombardier, or equivalent rank	£5
(2) Second corporal, bombardier, corporal, or lance sergeant	6
(3) Corporal of horse (household cavalry) or sergeant	8
(4) Squadron quartermaster, corporal (household cavalry) or squadron, battery, troop, or company quartermaster sergeant, staff corporal (household cavalry), staff sergeant, or color sergeant	10
(5) Warrant officer, class 2	12
(6) Warrant officer, class 1	15

Sections 6 to 9 of Army Order 17, 1919, follow:

"SEC. 6. Soldiers who have completed more than 12 calendar months' war service will receive, in addition, the following sums in respect of each complete calendar month or portion of a calendar month of war service beyond 12 months, subject to a maximum of 48 such monthly increments, corresponding to a total gratuity covering five years' war service—

	Shillings.
"(a) If with any war service overseas	10
"(b) If with no such service	5

the rates under both (a) and (b) being subject to reduction in the cases shown in the next paragraph, and the rate under (b) not applying to any war service rendered by the soldier as a boy.

"SEC. 7. If a soldier has been entitled to draw service pension during any portion of his war service, or if he has been entitled under article 6 of the royal warrant published in Army Order 1, of 1918, to elect to draw it, in respect of any portion of that service, irrespective of whether he has actually drawn it or not, the monthly addition for any month during the whole of which pension has been, or would have been issuable, will be 5 shillings or 2 shillings 6 pence instead of 10 shillings and 5 shillings, respectively.

"SEC. 8. The minimum gratuity payable to a soldier who is a boy will be £2. The additional sum for each month's war service after the first 12 months will be as in paragraph 6, except that if no service has been rendered overseas the sum shall be 2 shillings 6 pence instead of 5 shillings. For the purpose of this warrant the term 'boy' will include trumpeters, drummers, buglers, pipers, fifers, and bandsmen enlisted as boys, and under the age of 18.

"SEC. 9. The soldier who has served both as boy and man will be eligible for the minimum as a man if he has given any war service overseas, or has over six months' war service as a man. Otherwise the boy's minimum will apply."

The monthly additions will be 10s. if any overseas war service has been rendered; if not, they will be 2s. 6d. for each month beyond the first 12 served wholly as a boy and 5s. for each subsequent month.

II. GRATUITIES TO OFFICERS (ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE, FEBRUARY 15, 1919, PAGE 109; SEE ALSO LONDON TIMES, FEBRUARY 13, 1919, PAGE 6).

The gratuities to officers of the army in recognition of their war service are set forth in a schedule appended to a royal warrant which is published as an army order. The schedule, subject to certain exceptions, runs as follows:

1. Subject to the other conditions laid down below, war service for the purpose of this warrant shall be commissioned service within periods beginning from August 4, 1914, inclusive, and ending at the date of the termination of the war as defined by statutory authority, or August 3, 1919, whichever comes first.

2. Such service shall include any war service with the Egyptian Army, West African Frontier Force, King's African Rifles, or in the Royal Navy, Royal Marines, or Royal Air Force, which would qualify for a war gratuity under this warrant had such service been in the army.

3. The minimum gratuity payable to an officer in respect of war service will be as follows:

Second lieutenant Officer classed for pay Q.H., or JJ., royal warrant of July 5, 1918 Staff lieutenant, third class Lieutenant Aid-de-camp	£35
Staff lieutenant, first or second class Officer classed for pay N, O, P, GG, or HH, royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate	£40
Captain Brigade major Assistant military secretary (unless otherwise classed for pay) General staff officer, third grade Staff captain	£45
Commandant or governor of detention barracks or military prison, second class Officer classed for pay K. L. M., CC, DD, EE, or FF, royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate Chaplain, fourth class Major Deputy assistant director at the war office General staff officer, second grade Deputy assistant, adjutant and quartermaster general
Deputy assistant, adjutant general deputy assistant quartermaster general Deputy assistant director of supplies and transport	£60
Commandant or governor of detention barracks or military prison, first class Officer classed for pay G, H, I, J, Z, AA, or BB, royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate Chaplain, third class Lieutenant colonel Assistant director at war office Commander of a district Officer i/c records (other than royal engineers) General staff officer, first grade Assistant adjutant and quartermaster general Assistant adjutant general Assistant quartermaster general Officer classed for pay D, E, F, V, W, X, or Y, royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate Military attaché Chaplain, second class Colonel Assistant director of supplies and transport paid at £900 Commander of coast defenses (unless paid as a brigadier general or major general) Commander of royal garrison artillery	£75
Officer classed for pay C. or T., royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate Chaplain, first class (including deputy chaplain general, and principal chaplain)	£100

Brigadier genera i/c administration	£140
Brigadier general, general staff (other than commandants of the Royal Military Academy and Royal Military College)
Brigadier general, not otherwise classified
Brigade commander
Chief engineer
Officer i/c royal engineer records
Commander of coast defenses, if a brigadier general
Commandant, school of military engineering
Commandant, ordnance college
Officer classed for pay B. or S., royal warrant of July 5, 1918, or paid at an equivalent rate
Major general	£200
Chaplain general	£370
Lieutenant general

General and field marshal, rates to be fixed by the army council.

III. GRANTS TO COMMANDING OFFICERS.[1]

On August 6, 1919, the House of Commons appropriated the sum of £585,000, to be issued as grants, varying from £10,000 to £100,000, to military and naval leaders in the war. Of this sum £375,000 were distributed among the military leaders.

B—NAVY.

By order in council of March 25, 1920 (Order in Council, 1920, No. 629; Great Britain, Statutory Rules and Orders, issued in the year 1920, London, 1921, vol. 2, p. 265 ff), gratuities were granted to officers and men of the navy, marines, naval reserves, and naval volunteer reserves who have served during the war.

I. Gratuities to temporary officers, officers of the royal naval reserve and royal volunteer reserve, and officers of the retired and emergency lists were granted subject to certain exceptions, on the following scales:

(a) Entered or promoted from ratings, etc., on or before February 18, 1919—

For the first year's service or part of a year's service, 124 days' pay.

For each subsequent year or part of a year's service, 62 days' pay.

(b) Entered or promoted from ratings, etc., after February 18, 1919, 31 days' pay.

All officers on the retired or emergency lists employed during the war, for year's service or part of a year's service, 31 days' pay.

II. Gratuities to permanent officers on the active lists of the royal navy and royal marines, including the R. N. R. and R. N. V. R., for service during the war.[1]

Relative rank of officer.	For the first year's service (or for a part of a year if a year has not been served).	Increment for each additional month after a year's service.
		Officers who have served at sea or overseas.	Officers who have not served at sea or overseas.
	£	£	£ s. d.
Admiral of the fleet	720	3	1 10 0
Admiral	540
Vice admiral	370
Rear admiral	200
Commodores, first and second class	140	2	1 0 0
Captain, over 3 years' seniority	100
Commander and captain, under 3 years' seniority	75	1	0 10 0
Lieutenant commander	60
Lieutenant	45
Sublieutenant	40
Commissioned warrant officer	35	.....	.....
Warrant officer	30	.....	.....
Midshipman	20	.....	.....
Paymaster cadet	15	.....	.....

1. Order in Council, 1920, No. 649; Great Britain, Statutory Rules and Orders, 1920, London, 1921, volume 2, page 271.

Officers who have served at sea or overseas for any period during the war to receive the higher rate of increment for the whole of their war service after the first year, irrespective of any shore service which may be included therein.

The war gratuities of chaplains to be assessed on the following scales:

Chaplain of the fleet, same rate as for rear admiral.

Chaplain of 20 years' seniority, same rate as for captain, over 3 years' seniority.

Chaplain of 15 years' seniority, same rate as for commander.

Chaplain of 8 and under 15 years' seniority, same rate as for lieutenant commander.

Chaplain under 8 years' seniority, same rate as for lieutenant.

III.—GRATUITIES TO SEAMEN AND MARINES.[2]

(a) Royal Navy.

	For the first year's service or part of a year if a year has not been served.[3]	Increment for each additional calendar month or final portion of a calendar month after a year's service, subject to a maximum of 48 such monthly increments.
	£
Boys	2	s. 10 To those who have served at sea or overseas for any period during their qualifying war service.
Ordinary seamen or able seamen.	5
Leading rates	6
Petty officers	8
Chief petty officers	12	5 To those who have not served at sea or overseas.

[1] Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, vol. 119, p. 208 ff.

[2] Order in Council, 1920, No. 649; Great Britain, Statutory Rules and Orders, London, 1921, vol. 2, p. 274.

[3] No gratuity to be paid to ratings who have rendered only 6 months or less than 6 months' service within the prescribed war period without any service at sea or overseas.

(b) Royal marines.

The scale for warrant officers, noncommissioned officers, men, and boys of the royal marines to be as laid down for equivalent ranks in the army, and to be inclusive of marching money now payable.

IV.—GRATUITIES TO CERTAIN NAVAL AND MARINE OFFICERS.

By Order in Council of October 13, 1920 (Order in Council, 1920, No. 2087; Great Britain, Statutory Rules and Orders, London, 1921, vol. 2, p. 330), gratuities, subject to certain exceptions, were granted to certain officers of the naval and marine forces who were employed during the late war but were not paid at naval rates of pay, as set forth in the following schedule:

(1) The gratuity to be at the rate of 31 days' pay for each complete year of service.

(2) The conditions governing the award to be the same as those which apply to the ordinary war gratuity.

(3) No service rendered subsequent to the 1st of August, 1919, and no service for which pay has not been issued direct from naval funds to count for the gratuity.

(4) The rate of pay on which the gratuity would be assessed to be not the full pay of the rank held but the pay actually drawn on the 1st of August, 1919 (or on the last day of service, if previous to that date), or on the 11th of November, 1918, if more advantageous, and to be exclusive of the retired pay element, if any, merged in such rate of pay.

(5) The gratuity to have retrospective effect to August 2, 1914

V.—GRANTS TO COMMANDING OFFICERS.

Of the sum of £585,000 appropriated by Parliament on August 5, 1919, to be issued as grants varying from £10,000 to £100,000 to military and naval leaders[1] in the war, £200,000[2] were distributed among seven of the leading naval officers.

(c) Table showing expenditures and estimates for purposes of war gratuities:[3]

	Amount.
I. ARMY.[4]
Gratuities on discharge, etc.:	£ s. d.
Appropriations for 1919–20	65,787,081 17 5
Estimates for 1919–1921	97,000 0 0
Estimates for 1921–22	187,000 0 0
Total	66,071,081 17 5
II. NAVY.[5]
Gratuities to officers and men:
Appropriations for 1919–20	11,620,173 18 10
Estimates for 1920–21	389,300 0 0
Estimates for 1921–22	166,000 0 0
Total	12,175,473 18 10
III.
Army and Navy commanders[6]	585,000 0 0
Grand total	78,831,555 16 3

[1] For detailed statement see Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, vol. 19, p. 207.

[2] £275,000 were distributed among 11 army chiefs; the remainder of £10,000 went to Sir Hugh Trenchard, of the Air Service.

[3] So far as they are available.

[4] The data for the appropriations for 1919–20 are taken from Great Britain Army annual account, 1919–20 (H. of C. P. 72), London, 1921, p. 114; the estimates for 1920–21 and for 1921–22 are taken from Great Britain Army estimates for 1921–22 (H. of C. P. 99), London, 1921, p. 126.

[5] The data for the appropriations for 1919–20 are taken from Great Britain Navy appropriation account, 1919–20 (H. of C. P. 56), London, 1921, p. 60; the estimates for 1920–21 and for 1921–22 are taken from Great Britain Navy estimates for the year 1921–22 (H. of C. P. 43), London, 1921, p. 150.

[6] Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, vol. 119, No. 109, p. 207.

Another statement by Mr. C. C. Tansill, August 25, 1922:

War gratuities paid to British admirals and to British generals.

	Pounds.
NAVY.
Admiral of the Fleet Sir David Beatty (earldom)	100,000
Admiral of the Fleet Viscount Jellicoe (viscounty)	50,000
Admiral Sir Charles E. Madden (baronetcy)	10,000
Admiral Sir F. C. Doveton Sturdee	10,000
Rear Admiral Sir John de Robeck (baronetcy)	10,000
Vice Admiral Sir Roger J. B. Keyes (baronetcy)	10,000
Commodore Sir Reginald J. Tyrwhitt (baronetcy)	10,000
ARMY.
Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig	100,000
Field Marshal Viscount French	50,000
Field Marshal Sir Edmund Allenby	50,000
Field Marshal Sir H. Plumer	30,000
Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson	10,000
Gen. Sir Henry Rawlinson	30,000
Gen. the Hon. Sir Julian Byng	30,000
Gen. Sir Henry Horne	30,000
Gen. Sir William Robertson	10,000
Gen. Sir William Birdwood	10,000
Lieut. Col. Sir Maurice Hankey	25,000
AIR.
Air Vice Marshal Sir Hugh Trenchard	10,000

DRAFT PROCLAMATION GRANTING PRIZE MONEY TO THE FLEET.[1]

"We do therefore now make known to all our loving subjects and to all others whom it may concern * * * that the net produce of all such prizes captured during the present war as shall * * * be declared to be droits of the Crown, and of all other sums which shall be paid into the naval prize fund shall be for the entire benefit and encouragement of the officers and men of our naval and marine forces, and shall be distributable when * * * there is a sufficient fund standing to the credit of the naval prize fund to warrant it; that a distribution shall be made in shares and proportions hereafter mentioned to those members of our naval and marine forces as aforesaid who have during the present war performed service at sea in our ships and vessels of war," etc.:

[1] Official; issued by H. M. Stationery Office, 1918.

	Shares.
Commander in chief Grand Fleet	2,000
Admiral commander in chief	1,250
Admiral commanding a squadron	1,000
Vice admiral commander in chief	1,000
Vice admiral commanding a squadron	750
Vice admiral	500
Rear admiral commander in chief	750
Rear admiral commanding a squadron	500
Rear admiral	300

From a letter of Robert P. Skinner, American consul general, London, to the Secretary of the Navy:

"Instead of as in the past making the award of prize money to the actual captors, the net value of the prizes taken will be pooled and distributed among the whole of the fleet engaged in this war at the close of hostilities under a scale of distributions."

SPEECH OF THE PRIME MINISTER, AUGUST 6, 1919, RELATIVE TO THE GRANTING OF WAR GRATUITIES TO BRITISH ADMIRALS AND SAILORS.

The PRIME MINISTER[1]. It is an honored tradition of this country that it rewards liberally those who have rendered it conspicuous and distinguished services in time of peril, and that, I venture to say, is a sound tradition for a country. Ingratitude chills the ardor of service, and no State has long thriven which does not display its gratitude to those who have served it well in its time of peril. It was really one of the marked features of distinction between Rome and Carthage, and the lesson is not without its value. I am proud of the fact that the pensions we have voted in this House—the scale of pensions—to the men who have served us well in the field and in the air and on the sea is incomparably the most generous in Europe. I think the amount aggregates £98,000,000 a year, which is half the whole of the national expenditure before the war. There is no scale in Europe which compares with it, and I am proud of it. But we do wisely, we shall do wisely, if we accept this motion, in maintaining the tradition that exceptional rewards should be given to those who have borne exceptional responsibilities with exceptional success. That is the proposition which I would invite the committee to accept.

The Duke of Wellington had voted to him two pensions, in the aggregate £4,000 a year, for three lives, and after the Battle of Waterloo a sum of £500,000 was voted to him. That was for him alone. Lord Wolseley had £25,000 voted to him for the Ashanti campaign and £30,000 for the Egyptian campaign. Those were moved by Mr. Gladstone, who was undoubtedly one of the most rigid and stern of all the great economists. Lord Roberts had £12,000 voted to him for the Afghan campaign and £100,000 for the Boer War. Lord Kitchener had £30,000 voted to him for the Soudan campaign and £50,000 for the Boer War. Those two were moved by another famous and very rigid economist, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. That was the view taken in the past of the kind of reward that ought to be accorded to men who had rendered services of this kind to the country. In magnitude, in fatefulness for this country, there is no comparison between those wars and the war which has just come to a conclusion.

Therefore, the sums which we are inviting the committee to agree to err in comparison, not on the side of overliberality, but quite the reverse, and we have come to the conclusion that the precedents of the past should rather be fined down, not because we regard the merits of the men to whom we are going to invite the House to accord the vote as being less in comparison than those whose names I have quoted, but because we had to have regard to the gigantic burdens of the community. I need hardly tell the committee that our greatest difficulty was in choosing—a very delicate and difficult task. There were so many who have done well, there were so many who have rendered brilliant and even dazzling service, and our difficulty is not in recommending the names which are down in the list, but in confining the appeal to the munificence of Parliament to these names. I may say a few words about each of these men. There are so many that I can not possibly do justice to any of the individuals which are mentioned. Therefore, if I say a few sentences in respect to men of great and outstanding merit it must not be regarded as in the least an indication that I do not consider that a good deal more might be legitimately said to the committee on the subject.

I, first of all, naturally, choose Field-Marshall Sir Douglas Haig. I have already spoken in this House, and at some length, on his great qualities. His tenacity of purpose, his dauntlessness in the face of what looked like disaster, make him an embodiment of the race which is so proud to claim him amongst its sons. But there is another quality of Sir Douglas Haig, which is known well only to those who knew him well, and that is the readiness with which he has always been prepared to subordinate self to the demands of his country. That was never more clearly manifested than in the way in which he accepted the command of Field Marshal Foch over the British forces which hitherto had been commanded by Sir Douglas Haig. There have been great men in the past who have rendered distinguished service to their country in this and in other lands, and who never hesitated to risk their lives in rendering that service, but who, somehow, failed in loyalty when it was a question of personal pride or professional pride. Sir Douglas Haig has been as ready to sacrifice his own pride of position as he has always been ready to run the risk of his life. For that especially we honor and respect him. After all, modesty adds a cubit to the stature of the tallest man.

I would like to say a word now about Lord French, and I should like to say that in this day of crowning triumph we must not forget the day of small things—the time when Field Marshal French, then Sir John French, had to lead few men, fine men, great men, never finer soldiers quitted these shores to fight for the flag, but they were few against overpowering odds, inadequately equipped against the most finely equipped army in Europe. He fought one of the six decisive battles in this war. That is too often forgotten. Sir John French led the British Army in one of the six decisive battles and campaigns of a war which produced hundreds of great battles. He fought the Battle of Ypres—it is now clear from the German account of it—against overpowering odds. He won it. Had it been lost, the war would have taken a different turn. From the moment he won it the faith in German military supremacy was irretrievably doomed. It is, therefore, meet that we should now, when German militarism is shattered beyond recovery, remember the great commander who, with small means, fought during the first year of the war and won a battle which covered the British Army with honor.

The name of General Allenby will be ever remembered as that of the brilliant commander who fought and won the last and most triumphant of the crusades. It was his good fortune, aided by his skill, to be able to bring to a glorious end an enterprise which absorbed the chivalry of Europe for centuries. We forget now that the military strength of Europe was concentrated for generations upon this purpose and concentrated in vain. A British Army under the command of General Allenby achieved it and achieved it finally.

I have spoken quite recently of Sir Henry Wilson, one of the most gifted soldiers this country has ever possessed. I will add only one word to what I have said. His vision and organizing gifts constituted one of the most treasured assets of this country in the trying days of 1918, and no list would be complete without Sir Henry Wilson. As for Sir William Robertson, his services were rendered in the all-important field of organization. It is he we have to thank for the fact that the general staff was so well organized and rendered such great service, especially during the last two or three years of the war. He certainly deserves a name in this great list. As for Air Vice Marshal Trenchard, he, by his energy and daring and drive and imagination and magnetism, which make for great leadership in war, made the air force become the powerful and formidable fighting machine that it was.

I have another name, the name of one who took no part in battle, but he was as essential to our success in this war as any name—I mean Sir Maurice Hankey. It is difficult for those who know to speak about Sir Maurice Hankey's services without appearing to exaggerate. His services were known only to a few, but none rendered greater service and none, therefore, is more worthy of honor and of thanks. If any Member of this House will take the trouble to ask the leaders in any sphere of this war or of the peace about the services of Sir Maurice Hankey, they will realize what I mean. Let them ask naval leaders or military leaders, let them ask M. Clemenceau or President Wilson or Signor Orlando, and they will all bear the same testimony. He was the first to recognize before this war that if a great war ever came it would be a matter not merely of fighting men but for the organization of the whole resources of a country, and inspired that war book that is one of the most remarkable productions that any man could peruse. Going through it now, one can see how he foresaw things which were perhaps not visible except to very searching minds like his at the time, and which have now become part of the horrible realities of war. He served under my predecessor for a good many years, and I am permitted to read a letter Mr. Asquith wrote to him in November of last year, after the signing of the armistice. This is Mr. Asquith's letter:

"No one knows as well as I do how much we owe to you for our (ignorantly derided) pre-war preparation, nor the extent and value of your daily, and almost hourly, contribution during the first two and a half years to every measure in all spheres that was thought out and done. I know that you have continued to the end, under constant strain which can not be measured, to render the same invaluable service. I should like you to know that in my judgment you have been in a true sense what Carnot was called, 'The Organizer of Victory.'"

I am in accord with every word of that. He refused a highly remunerative offer in order to remain in the service of Britain. If Sir Maurice Hankey's name were left out of this list I should feel ashamed of it. There is no one who has a better right to be in it, and there is no one I recommend to the House with less hesitation.

With regard to the army commanders whose names are very well known and whose achievements are known, no army ever had better fighting commanders, and those who take an interest in the history of war know how much a commander in chief depends on his fighting commanders and how much they contributed to Wellington's success in the peninsula and to Napoleon's success in his great European campaign. As a matter of fact, when Napoleon was deprived of the support of his great marshals, he failed; and Sir Douglas Haig and Field Marshal Foch were the first to recognize that it would have been impossible, especially in 1918, to have turned the tide of battle had it not been for the brilliant leadership of General Plumer, General Horne, General Byng, General Rawlinson, and afterwards General Birdwood, and I certainly commend their names to the generosity of the House.

I come to the fleet. As for Admiral Beatty, everybody will recognize that he is worthy of the highest traditions of British seamanship. By his great fighting qualities in the war he established finally the supremacy of the British Navy over its foes. There is no better tribute to his leadership than the fact that the fleet of the foe, having contested that leadership once, thought it wise to avoid putting it to any further test. As for Admiral Jellicoe, his services before the war and during the war were incalculable. His chief work was the work of organization, not so well known to the public but just as essential to the success of a fleet in war as that of the fighting leaders who went into battle. Those are the services that Admiral Jellicoe rendered to the British Navy. As for Admiral Sturdee, the committee will remember the brilliant action he fought off the Falkland Islands, by which he rid the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic of raiders who interrupted our commerce and threatened to put an end to it for some years. As for Admiral de Roebeck, his services in the Ægean are well known. Admiral Tyrwhitt, who commanded the torpedo flotillas on the east coast, is the outstanding representative of that special branch of naval service which embodies that ceaseless vigilance, ever watching, ever pursuing, ever chasing, ever striking, night and day, summer and winter, fair weather and foul, which ultimately ended in completely baffling the designs of the foe. Then there is Sir Roger Keys. His name will ever be quoted in naval history as the chief figure in one of those dramatic exploits which enrich the story of the fleet and enter into the character of the fleet. Those are the stories which attract children and attract the human mind when impressions sink deep into it and remain firmly in it, and this is one of the stories that will help build up the character of the race. No list would be complete without Sir Roger Keys, the hero of one of the most dramatic exploits of the war. There is also Admiral Madden, who undoubtedly rendered invaluable aid in the organization of the Grand Fleet and of the navy.

That, I think, completes the list. I think that it will be agreed that they are all men who deserve well of the bounty of the House. I have taken the trouble to examine the precedents for grants of this character covering two or three centuries, and I think that if Members of the House will take the same trouble they will find that we have fallen short of precedent, if at all. I think the members of this committee would do well, remembering this tradition, which is an honorable and high one, not to depart from it; and I therefore, remembering the great services these people rendered, and remembering what might have befallen this country if we had not had skillful leadership, earnestly say to the House that this is but a small part of the recognition which we owe to these great men.

[1] Great Britain Parliamentary Debates, Com. 119, 4–19, August, 1919, pp. 208–213.

It is evident from the above statements that Great Britain is abundantly able to take care of her soldiers and sailors of the World War and has done so.

An examination of the heavy subsidies paid by Great Britain to her shipping will show that she is abundantly able in this particular.

I can not see how this legislation will help the taxpayers of this country. I can see how it may and probably will increase the value of the British and other foreign bonds held by certain financial interests in this country. I think Great Britain is abundantly able to pay, and I can not see any reason why we should present her with billions of dollars in interest.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I think the debate on both sides of the House has been worthy of the important question now before us. Of course, in the few minutes I have available, or even if I had longer time, I would not expect to contribute anything noteworthy to the discussion. However, I want to state briefly why I am going to vote for the resolution approving the settlement. I think it may be fairly stated that the chief argument against the acceptance of it is that it is not the best one that we can procure. Well, that term "best" is susceptible of two constructions. Some gentlemen seem to think the hardest bargain we can drive is the "best" settlement. I take a different view. My view is that a settlement upon terms which the debtor nation may reasonably be expected to fulfill is better than one which might look more attractive on its face, but which imposed a burden of settlement impossible to fulfill. The world is still bleeding from the wounds of war. It is true the great World War ended more than four years ago, but the world is in a more disturbed condition of mind than almost ever before. The kaleidoscope of the world has been changed. Empires have fallen and thrones have crumbled as the dust of the desert. It seems sometimes that the elemental forces have suddenly been unloosed and are about to overrun the world. Serious-minded men are inquiring, What forces can be brought into play which will hold back the advancing tides of racial hate, of sectional animosities, and of imperialistic designs? One of the answers to that question is: Promote a feeling of friendliness and cooperation between the two great nations of the English-speaking race, the United States and Great Britain.

Therefore the question does not present itself, to my mind, What is the best bargain we can drive? but rather more, Is this a fair and equitable settlement considering the conditions which obtain? I think it is. If this settlement can not be justified as a fair settlement, then it can not be justified at all, and I say vote against it. Any proposition to arrive at terms for the settlement of the debt due should satisfactorily provide for the fulfillment of three important conditions:

First. Payment of the principal in full, without the remission of any part of it to the debtor nation.

Second. The payments should be upon the amortization plan, so that by the payment of a certain part of the principal each year the whole debt will be paid in a given number of years agreed upon.

Third. The rate of interest should be such as a solvent government would be expected to pay upon a bonded obligation extending over a long period of years.

Does the settlement agreed upon meet these conditions? I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment it does. (1) It provides for the payment of every dollar of the debt in American dollars and not in British pounds sterling. Therefore if the rate of exchange is against the pound sterling, as it now is and has been for several years, we will not lose by it. We will receive payments at par. (2) It provides that the payments shall be made upon the amortization plan, which, of course, we all understand is a payment of part of the debt each year, in such amounts as will pay all of the debt in 62 years.

It may not be out of place for me to remind the House that when the original refunding bill was passed providing for the appointment of this commission, I offered an amendment authorizing the commission to make settlement upon the amortization plan. By examining the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date my amendment will be found to read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK to the Frear amendment: After the word "provided" strike out the balance and insert the following: "Any such bond or obligation of any foreign government accepted under the authority herein granted may contain an agreement providing for the repayment of the loan on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover, first, a charge on the loan as interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and, second, such amounts to be applied on the principal as will extinguish the debts within an agreed period of not more than 35 years."

I did not expect the amendment would carry at that time and yet I felt sure that it was the only plan possible to provide for a real sure-enough payment of the debt. I am glad the commission has followed it, though varying the terms somewhat from those I suggested.

(3) The settlement provides for 3 per cent interest for first 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter until all payments are made. Now that is the only thing that is even subject to an argument. We are all agreed upon the other two propositions. Objection is made that the rate is too low, but it must be remembered that the interest will be going entirely to the United States Government and will be entirely tax exempt. Our tax-exempt 3½ per cent Liberty bonds are now selling at par and that fact establishes to the satisfaction of my mind that the rates of interest provided in this agreement are reasonably fair to us. Before the war the United States Panama 3 per cent—a straight investment bond without the currency provision—sold up to 103. We may reasonably expect the same conditions to return within a few years. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, believing that the terms of agreement meet the three conditions which I outlined at the outset of my remarks as being necessary to an equitable settlement, I shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a question that has naturally given many of us considerable concern as to how we should vote upon it, but after having given it all the mature consideration of which I have been capable, I can not escape the conclusion as a representative of the people of my own congressional district and partially as a representative on the floor of this House of the Government of the United States, that it is my duty to support this settlement of the British debt. [Applause.] Some complaint has been made here that it has been admitted that the proposal upon which we are now acting was the proposal of the American commission itself. I do not see anything in that fact to subject our commissioners to criticism. They were appointed, as I understand the spirit and letter of the act under which they were appointed, not to meet British representatives across a dead line and demand a settlement in terms, but they were appointed for the purpose of undertaking to negotiate for a fair settlement with the British Government. [Applause.]

And after they had had the facts fully presented to them, after they had learned from creditable witnesses, as they no doubt esteemed the representatives of the British Government to be, of the fiscal situation in Great Britain, the economic difficulties under which they were laboring, of their staggering national debt, I say I do not see anything inherently discreditable that they should propose themselves the terms of settlement which they are now offering. Gentlemen, the great question, it occurs to me, we should ask ourselves in this dilemma is this: If we do not accept the terms of this proposal what remedy, what reasonable remedy is at our command either to induce or enforce the settlement of this tremendous amount of money now long since past due? There is only one, and in its last analysis, as has been so admirably suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee in his excellent presentation of this question, it is the force of arms. Is there any gentleman here who proposes to vote against this debt settlement who would follow his action to its logical conclusion and say that if Great Britain will not meet it according to the terms of the original obligation, we will mobilize the Army and the Navy of the United States and send them abroad to enforce this collection? Is there any Representative of his people here to-day who will be willing to say, after the fresh memories of the recent great world tragedy through which we have gone, again we will summon our soldiers for the purpose of enforcing that debt? Gentleman, solemnly and seriously I say to you that this is the only legitimate and logical sequence to a refusal, to accept the offer now made, and for one I would not pursue that course.

Gentleman have urged here that a great Government like Great Britain will not repudiate an obligation, yet I want to call to your attention the evidence quoted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] quoted the British representatives as having said they could not and would not pay 4½ per cent interest and undertake to pay this debt in 25 years. If that is a correct statement of their attitude, gentlemen, it trenches dangerously close to repudiation. I say the settlement here proposed seems to be an adequately fair one considering all the elements that enter into it. Gentlemen, the international situation of the world with reference to credits and economic stability is like a log jam on a great stream. That is the situation, and here is the key log. It is a log jam of the international stream of the world, and here it seems to me is an opportunity to loosen the key log and thereby release the obstructions of international debts all along the line. The cotton growers of my section are vitally concerned in the stability of British credit, for there lies our greatest foreign consumer of cotton. I would rejoice to believe that we could be assured of the protection of our other foreign debts upon as favorable terms as those here offered by England. It would be a tremendous relief to our Treasury and tax payers to get such settlements. That is the reason, gentlemen, and for others that occur to me, which I have not time to argue, I shall give my support to this proposition. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think that practically all of us on both sides of the aisle are agreed that our Intenational Debt Commission has made a good settlement, as favorable to us as we had any right or reason to expect. We all know the circumstances under which these foreign loans were made, and most of us remember them. We loaned this money after we entered the European war when Great Britain was on her knees, when France and Italy were on their knees, and when they could no longer carry on as they had been carrying on, because they did not have the necessary money and they could not borrow the money unless we loaned it to them. This money which we loaned was expended in a joint enterprise; it was used in the prosecution of a common undertaking in which we were all interested and in which we were all engaged. It was expended for the carrying on of the war, and it was expended chiefly during the period when we were not ready to do our part, when we did not have men in the trenches, when we could not send a soldier to the front. This money which we loaned was expended for us just as it was expended for Great Britain and for France. It was used for the benefit of all the nations that were engaged in the war against the Central Powers.

And the money was expended in this country; not one cent of it ever went out of it. It was expended here for the products of the American farm and for the products of the American factory. Those farm products and those manufactured goods were sold at high, inflated war prices. The profits went into the pockets of the American farmers and into the pockets of the American manufacturers, and on those profits income taxes were paid, which went into the Treasury of the United States. If Great Britain is satisfied with this settlement, I certainly think that the United States of America ought to be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I greatly regret that I am unable to follow the counsel of those on the Republican side of the House who bear responsibility on this legislation. Even more do I regret that I am unable to agree with the distinguished Members on the Democratic side of the House who look upon the proposal in a different light from the views I entertain. I am especially embarrassed in not being able to follow the splendid leader of the minority [Mr. GARRETT], who, perhaps, made the ablest and most convincing speech that has been made in the discussion of this bill.

But, Mr. Chairman, all of us have our individual responsibilities here, and I am trying to live up to mine. I am sure that I approach the consideration of this question from the standpoint of utmost friendliness to Great Britain. I cast my vote to loan American money and to send the young men of America to shed their blood side by side with her when she was fighting with her back to the wall. I appreciate her sacrifices in that great struggle, and I do not for a moment forget that she is to-day attempting to lead the world into the paths of peace and prosperity and to restore order out of chaos and confusion. I rejoice that she is presenting to other nations the spectacle of a Government that is attempting to show something of common honesty and good faith in her international relationships.

I do not think that the United States can be justly classed as cruel, grasping, or unreasonable in asking and expecting that the money furnished by the taxpayers of the Nation and sent to the rescue of Great Britain in the hour of her distress shall be repaid in full. I know of no better consideration that could exist, either in law or morals, than that which underlies the debt of the Allies to this Government. This money was loaned and expended in the fight which saved the very lives of the allied governments.

I decline to join in the imputation that Great Britain would consider the repudiation of such an obligation. There is nothing to substantiate such a charge. On the contrary, the Government of Great Britain has all along acknowledged this indebtedness and has been making actual payments on it.

I am frank to say that if I were convinced that a real necessity existed for the acceptance of the offer tendered the Congress I should unhesitatingly cast my vote accordingly, but we have no information to that effect. So far as I can learn, and so far as has been disclosed in the hearings—and these hearings, let me say, are embodied in one little pamphlet containing about a dozen pages, though we are dealing with the greatest financial transaction ever handled in all human history—our representatives went into the conference to begin the discussion of this question, having made up their minds to repudiate the solemn instructions of the Congress that created them and laid down the conditions and limitations under which they were empowered to make settlement, and, so far as we are told, never for a moment was there any effort made by them to secure an agreement in accordance with the terms of the act which gave them their powers. Their attitude was about like that of lawyers going out to confess judgment against their clients.

With all deference to the able and distinguished gentlemen who constituted the American commission, I want to say that I am unable to find justification for the great rejoicing and congratulations indulged in by some of the gentlemen who have participated in this discussion. I can not quite recognize that it is a great accomplishment for a lawyer who goes out to collect a debt and walks up to those from whom he is to obtain payment and asks "how much do you want deducted?" If this is to be the measure of success, it would be easy to surpass the achievement. It would only be necessary to create another commission, call another meeting, and let them knock off two or three billion dollars more. Then the glory and congratulations of to-day would be forgotten in the greater glory of the achievement of to-morrow.

Gentlemen, I can not accept the reasoning that we must deal with this proposition as if the financial interests of America were absolutely and inseparably merged in the interests of Great Britain. All during this debate we hear these questions: How much are the taxes of Great Britain? What is her wealth? What does she own as compared with what we own? How much ought to be taken off her indebtedness to enable her to meet it without having to sacrifice too much?

I do not desire that our Government attempt to drive any hard bargain or make any harsh or oppressive exactions, but it is my desire as a Representative in the American Congress to approach this question from the standpoint of America and American interests. I am under oath to do that, and I do not believe that the best interests of America, or even the best interests of Great Britain, can be promoted by a settlement that amounts practically to half payment and half cancellation.

Much has been said in this discussion of the effect the proposed settlement would have in reviving confidence and stabilizing world conditions. I appreciate the benefits to follow on that line. The argument has weight with me, but it is more important that such a settlement be effected as will preserve undiminished the confidence and good feeling that exists between the people of the United States and Great Britain. Nothing could be more unfortunate than that the masses of the American people should be left to feel that their interests have been betrayed and that any portion of the burdens of the war that should properly be borne by Great Britain had been transferred to the backs of the people of this country. [Applause.]

When we made these loans to the Allies their credit was impaired, and the bonds held against them by the bankers and investors of the United States of America were below par. We restored their credit and made their bonds safe and sound. We may be sure that whatever reductions in the indebtedness of the Allies may be granted or allowed by the United States, the bankers and investors will not fail to collect in full all that is owing to them. I do not object to this. It is perfectly legitimate and proper; and I am glad that it is so. It is best for us and best for the world that the debts of the Allies, no matter to whom they are owing, shall be paid in full, but as long as there is no question about the discharge of the indebtedness to the bankers and bondholders I do not think that we, as representatives of the American people, should hastily and unnecessarily make unjust reductions in the indebtedness to our Government. The bankers will not reduce their interest below the stipulations of their contracts or extend their holdings for a period of over 60 years.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] in his very able argument in favor of this legislation made a statement that contains much food for serious thought when he said that wars are generally fought over money and commerce. In my humble judgment, the wise course for this Government is to discharge the debts growing out of the war in as short time as may be done with wisdom and prudence. A burden so vast as that which rests upon our people as a result of the war is enough to endanger the peace and perpetuity of any other Government on earth, and the sooner we are rid of it the brighter will be our future. Public safety requires that we should pay off our debts, get a clean sheet, and be prepared to finance any conflict that may threaten us in the years to come. An unimpaired credit constitutes the best possible preparedness. In my judgment we ought to have the patriotism and foresight to levy sufficient taxes to pay our debts and restore our credit as the surest guaranty of the Nation's safety.

When the loans were made to our Allies they contracted with us to pay 5 per cent interest, with the stipulation that the interest rate to be charged would not exceed the rate at which we floated our indebtedness, from the proceeds of which we made the loans. It is perfectly right and proper that the rate be reduced so as not to exceed that which the United States is paying. But there can be no justification for accepting less. Anything else is not payment, but repudiation or cancellation to the extent that our Government loses on the transaction.

The plan submitted to us contemplates a relinquishment of our rights under our contract and a loss of several billions of dollars to be borne by the taxpayers of America.

We have reduced the interest rate to be paid by Great Britain from 5 to 4½ per cent, the average amount which it is estimated we have to pay. The yearly interest rate of Great Britain on her entire indebtedness to the United States at 4½ per cent is $199,750,000. For the first 10 years during which time the rate, under the proposed plan, is to be reduced to 3 per cent, the yearly interest would be $141,000,000, lacking $582,750,000 a year, which we as the surety for Great Britain would have to make good. This would amount in 10 years to $587,500,000—nearly $600,000,000—which is in effect a reduction of Great Britain's indebtedness to that amount.

The yearly interest, rated at 3½ per cent, amounts to $164,500,000. That is $35,250,000 a year less than the amount which would be due at 4½ per cent, and for a period of 52 years would amount to $1,833,000,000 to be paid by the United States. So we see, assuming that only the interest is paid, the United States would lose a total of $2,420,000,000. This is the amount which we would have to lose in this period by reason of becoming surety for Great Britain, because it must be remembered that the United States had to go out and borrow this money and still owes for it, and our interest-bearing bonds are still outstanding to cover it.

The following table shows the advances by this country to the Allies:

Country.	Credits established.	Cash advanced.	Other charges against credits.	Balance under established credits.
Belgium	$349,214,467.89	$349,214,467.89
Cuba	10,000,000.00	10,000,000.00
Czechoslovakia	67,329,041.10	61,974,041.10		$5,355,000.00
France	2,997,477,800.00	2,997,477,800.00
Great Britain	4,277,000,000.00	4,277,000,000.00
Greece	48,236,629.05	15,000,000.00	$33,236,629.05
Italy	1,648,034,050.90	1,648,034,050.90
Liberia	26,000.00	26,000.00
Rumania	25,000,000.00	25,000,000.00
Russia	187,729,750.00	187,729,750.00
Serbia	26,780,465.56	26,780,465.56
Total	9,636,828,204.50	9,598,236,575.45	33,236,629.05	5,355,000.00

Now, let us see where we land if we follow the plan we are asked to adopt. We are urged to make the reduction in favor of Great Britain, amounting to $2,420,000,000, on the score of the financial difficulties confronting Great Britain. I do not accept the contention that Great Britain is not able to keep her contracts or that she desires to repudiate her debts. I acquit her of these imputations of weakness and bad faith. The fact is she is meeting her obligations elsewhere all along the line. She is going forward with a program of economic reconstruction and strengthening her preparations for defense and improving her navy. She is paying a liberal bonus to her soldiers of the late war. Right here I want to ask how we can justify the shifting of the enormous burden of $2,420,500,000 to be borne by our people, for which we are to tax our brave boys who risked their lives in defense of the allied cause and who have been denied the recognition which Great Britain has generously bestowed upon her gallant defenders?

But we are urged to grant this enormous reduction to Great Britain because of the serious demands now being made upon her strength and resources. Let us see where we shall land if we follow this policy to its logical conclusion. Gentlemen tell us that "this is not merely a settlement with Great Britain alone, but it is the beginning of other settlements to be consummated with the other allies who are indebted to us." Admit for the sake of argument—though we have no real proof to substantiate the contention—that Great Britain says it is necessary to have this enormous reduction.

Mind you, no one has shown us the mathematics by which it is determined that Great Britain is able to pay within 62 years all the principal of her debt and interest at 3 or 3½ per cent, but is unable to pay on the basis of 4½ per cent interest. [Applause.]

But suppose we follow the reasoning in the case of Great Britain. How much do we surrender? More than $2,420,500,000. What are we going to do when we get to the case of France, after having announced our program of generosity? We must consider her distressed condition and pay regard to the troubles which beset her and the dangers which threaten her safety. How can we be less generous to France than we are to Great Britain? Nothing so stirred the patriotism and fervor of our people as the recollection of our debt of gratitude to France for her aid when the American Colonies were struggling for independence. Who would attempt to defend a policy on the part of our Government that discriminated against France and in favor of Great Britain? If we make good to France the same loss we propose to bear on behalf of Great Britain we surrender nearly all of her debt. The amount it is proposed to allow Great Britain in the way of a reduction exceeds the amount of the debt of any other ally, unless it be that of France. If we follow the logic that underlies this proposed settlement with Great Britain and the argument made in support of it to-day, it is idle to talk any more about collecting debts from any other country. If all the Allies are to be allowed reductions in accordance with their peculiar difficulties and necessities, we shall never be able to collect a dollar from anybody except Great Britain. [Applause.]

We are told that this original contract or bond which the Secretary of the Treasury accepted for the United States covering loans made to Great Britain is a scrap of paper and worth nothing. That is hardly justified in the face of the great boasts being made to-day over the settlement which our representatives are attempting to have us accept. All this accomplishment of which they boast is based on the contract made by Secretary McAdoo, and which they now brand as worthless. I want to know what we shall have behind any new promise of Great Britain that does not stand behind the contract that the Secretary of the Treasury took when this money was loaned at the outset?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am sorry, but I have not the time.

There is not a particle of security, no collateral—nothing whatever except a promise to pay. We should be then, as now, dependent upon the resources and good faith of Great Britain.

What assurance have we that Great Britain will not seek a new settlement? If the very Congress that created the commission and wrote into the act the limitations to control in the exercise of the power granted stands ready now to swallow its words and say, "The great Congress of America did not know how to deal with this thing; we bow to the superior wisdom of the commission created by us; we withdraw the effort unwisely and thoughtlessly made to limit and control them in their negotiations," how do we know that a subsequent Congress will not set aside what we are doing to-day? Indeed, Great Britain would be justified in coming again, even to the present Congress, for further reductions.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Has not Great Britain already accepted this proposition which we are passing on to-day?

Mr. STEAGALL. Did not Great Britain accept our terms when we loaned her the money and accepted her bond under the other contract?

Mr. LINEBERGER. She has accepted this specific proposition through the action of her Parliament.

Mr. STEAGALL. Surely, and if the next Congress comes along and wants to knock off a billion or two more, as we have every right to assume might be the case, I have no doubt a superior diplomatic commission could be established who might hoodwink the British representatives into accepting that! [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW], and if he does not wish to use it I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great sacrifices that were made by Great Britain during the war, in view of the fact that Great Britain was our ally, not wishing to drive any hard bargain with an ally, and because I believe this is a reasonable, fair, and just settlement of this great debt, I shall vote to approve the action of the commission. [Applause.] After the tragedy of the war some of us had many varied and serious reflections. We made certain resolves. For one I made the resolve that by the help of Almighty God the remainder of my life should be dedicated to the cause of peace. I believe that the acceptance of this settlement by the commissioners is a step toward world peace. [Applause.] After all, the only controversy is about the matter of interest. There is no real controversy about the length of time. We are debating here whether we shall demand from Great Britain 4¼ per cent interest or whether we shall accept 3 per cent, followed by an increase to 3½ per cent. Why, Mr. Chairman, in the cause of international good feeling, in my judgment the sacrifice of interest sinks into utter insignificance when we consider the good feeling that will be engendered between these two great nations in a satisfactory settlement of a matter of this magnitude. I have no hesitancy about my position. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], in the great speech—though it was a short one—that he delivered from this desk a few minutes ago, expressed my sentiments in words far better than I could hope to express myself; but I can not help asking myself this question: If I vote against the report of these commissioners, what alternative is there? This is the first step toward world adjustment. It is a step in the direction of making the murderer, Germany, pay for crimes which engulfed the whole world in blood. [Applause.] So, Mr. Speaker, having attempted to justify my vote in this feeble manner, I take the responsibility and go back to my constituents in the full belief that they will be glad to approve the settlement which is recommended by the American commissioners, and which, in my humble judgment, means so much for world peace and world stability. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, with the nationalistic spirit engendered by reason of the World War it is not surprising that there is such general unanimity throughout the country in approval of the terms of the British debt settlement, because the public recognizes the magnanimity of the British Government in offering such generous terms of settlement. Beset with difficulties that have not confronted the British nation in generations other than those during the World War, with the withdrawal of France from participation in the settlement of reparations with Germany, with a break in the negotiations at Lausanne, with Ismet Pasha demanding more than can be expected of our former allies, Great Britain does not seize upon existing conditions as an excuse for withdrawing and terminating the negotiations. She goes ahead, the only debtor nation of this Government that has done so, and presents terms which are so flatteringly generous that the whole country virtually, as expressed in the public press, indorses the terms.

We who were here during the World War remember that it was never intended that the I O U's given by the diplomats and held by the United States as evidences of the indebtedness of the various nations should be the permanent form of the indebtedness. Those who served here during those trying days knew that it was impracticable for any of the foreign governments to negotiate at that time the bonds in exchange for our bonds. Those were the days when we were occupied with greater things. The Committee on Appropriations during that time voted authorizations of $23,000,000,000. The I O U's which were taken gave ample security to our Government, but it was never intended that the obligation of 5 per cent should be exacted from these foreign governments. The very reading of the certificates shows that that was not the intention, and it would be unconscionable on the part of our Government now, if it were a bond, to insist on the payment of 5 per cent, when everyone knows that this Government can get the money at less than 4 per cent. I would be guilty of the basest betrayal of my trust if I were to exact not only the pound of flesh but also the ounce of blood from our foreign associates in the World War, just because that rate happened to be written down as the maximum rate to secure our Government against any possible rise in rates. The very reading of the certificate shows that it was only intended as a temporary expedient. Those who know about it know that it was not intended even after the war that we should accept the I O U's as a permanent form of indebtedness. Assistant Secretary Leffingwell stated after the armistice before the Committee on Appropriations that it was not intended at that time to accept permanent forms of indebtedness in the way of bonds. Why? Because Great Britain was not in any position to give any permanent bond. Everything was in a topsy-turvey condition.

Should there be any criticism because we waited three or four years before negotiations were begun? Anyone acquainted with international finance knows that the terms written into the authorization of this commission, the limitation of 25 years, was not possible of fulfillment, and that the limitation of 4¼ per cent is greater than the now prevailing rate. Shall we to-day exact 4¼ per cent in the way of interest from one of our allied powers when we can borrow money on long-term bonds for less than 4 per cent? Is there not going to be any conscience on the part of this great Nation in dealing with another?

I wish the military intelligence officers of every other debtor nation could have been present here to-day and have seen the unanimity of sentiment throughout this Chamber in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] when he said he hoped this indication of our purpose in settling this debt would inspire other debtor nations to do likewise. If they had been here and seen that demonstration they would know that Great Britain has sensed the mind of America in the settlement of this debt. They would have seen an example which ought to be followed by these other nations instead of trying to exact blood money when it is not possible to pay it. For everyone who knows anything about international finance knows that France can not maintain her large standing army of 400,000 men and at the same time pay the indebtedness that she owes to this Government. She has her choice between paying that indebtedness and reducing her standing army. Let France cease her imperial conquest in the Ruhr. Let France and Italy give heed to the voice of America as expressed by our great Secretary of State to have a redetermination by unprejudiced financial experts of the amount of reparations that Germany can pay, and then accept the bond and end the strife that may, unless checked, imperil the civilization of Europe. England has shown the way, will France and Italy follow?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, believing as I do after such an investigation as I have had an opportunity to make that the settlement recommended by our commission is fair and just and equitable, I shall support this resolution. [Applause.] To me, my colleagues, it is not so much a question as to what Great Britain can pay or what she is able to pay, but the consideration with me is what is it just and right she should pay. I would much have preferred to see the President appoint a bipartisan commission to investigate and make a recommendation on this great matter of world importance, but in his wisdom he did not do so, and the fact that he appointed a partisan commission is no evidence to me that they acted in a partisan manner. I have every reason to believe that they acted in a patriotic manner. They had all the facts before them and every opportunity to make a thorough and complete investigation, and after doing so they have recommended to us this settlement as just and fair to both nations.

When we entered the World War Belgium lay prostrate, France was bled white, and England was fighting with her back to the wall. At least, my colleagues, from the time we passed the war resolution until our armies were on the Continent of Europe, England and her allies were fighting our battles. They not only needed our armies to stop the German onrush to Paris but they needed our financial assistance to keep their armies up to efficient standards until our armies reached the battle lines. They were our fellow sufferers and comrades in arms, helping to fight our battles, and I feel that they have come forward with a manly offer to do what is equitable, just, and fair.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. There was a remark made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to the effect that this proposal was the entering wedge for a requirement to compel Germany to pay for the assault that she had committeed on civilization. Will my friend state whether he concurs in that remark, and what connection there is between this matter and that; if we agree with Great Britain in this, will she join with France in making Germany pay?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If I had an hour's time I might enter into that phase of the controversy. I was stating the reasons that impel me to support this measure. I believe when the settlement is made it will be a long forward step taken toward world stabilization and world peace.

Without criticizing or impugning the motives of those who oppose this measure or see differently from myself, I fully believe, everything being considered, that the recommendation of the committee is an equitable and just settlement. Therefore I shall whole-heartedly support this bill.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill giving authority to our debt-funding commission to settle with Great Britain upon a basis of 3 per cent for the first 10 years and thereafter at 3½ per cent and, when the time comes, with the other countries who owe us money, upon a like basis. I look upon the indebtedness of Great Britain to us differently from a debt contracted in peace times or for money to be used, by the Government borrowing for such purposes, as it might see fit. The debt of Great Britain was created at a time when we were one of her allies straining ourselves for the preservation of civilization in the world by the defeat of the German and Austrian Empires. It was created at a time when England called across the waters that the Allies' backs were against the wall and help must be forthcoming immediately; at a time when we were preparing with breakneck speed our armed forces to cross the seas and join our allies in the defense of our rights.

England needed funds; she had borrowed to her limit, and the only place she could get the money was from our Government. We agreed to loan it, because we knew by lending the money the Allies would be able to keep their forces in the field until we could reach them to lend our aid.

It was not, Mr. Chairman, a loan in dollars and cents, but a loan in credits. In other words, we established a credit for Great Britain in this country, and with that credit she purchased food for her armies, ammunition, and all other things which go to make up the defense in a great war. With this credit she purchased from our farmers, our merchants, and our manufacturers. She paid war prices, and our people made large profits. Upon these profits they paid income taxes, and so it made our people more prosperous and rich, and our country received greater funds in taxation. I daresay considerable of this money found its way into the United States Treasury in income taxes, because, with surtaxes and excess-profit taxes, millions were collected from the people of this country.

Great Britain, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMMERS] has said, is the only one of our debtors who will even talk to us about a settlement. I add to this that she not only will talk to us but she has already paid $150,000,000 to us in interest on the debt. Great Britain now offers to settle with us by paying all interest at 4½ per cent to December 15, 1922, and thereafter 3 per cent for the first 10 years, and 3½ per cent thereafter, thereby canceling the whole indebtedness by interest and partial-principal payments within 62 years, and at the expiration thereof she will have paid $11,105,965,000 in interest and principal.

The question which is debated to-day is whether she should not pay 4½ per cent for the entire time. I realize, Mr. Chairman, it would bring to us a very considerable sum by this additional interest, but I verily believe that if we would take this entire British indebtedness, represented in bonds, we could underwrite them, as we have done for many of the Philippine bonds, and sell them to the public at a rate to yield us 3½ per cent, especially when you realize the fact that these bonds are tax exempt.

We must not forget that there is a widespread sentiment among many of our people that we should not charge any interest. There is also a considerable sentiment that the Allies should all cancel their entire debts in order to bring about stability and peace in the world. I do not agree with this sentiment, but I do believe that our people will be entirely satisfied with the settlement as made by our debt commission and will feel that Great Britain in her present financial straits has endeavored to do her best in the settlement of her debts.

We must not forget, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] has reminded me, that when we came to settle our Revolutionary debt to France, that country said, "Pay me the principal and I will forgive you the interest."

The money represented by these national debts was all expended in a common cause in which the Allies had united—the preservation of civilization and the rights of individuals.

So long as Great Britain, France, and Belgium were able to maintain their armies in the fields it saved our boys from taking their places. Those nations were fighting after we entered the war with us and for us, and taking all these matters into consideration and the success of the war, I can not but feel that the settlement is just and fair, when we realize the chaotic condition of the entire world. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Virginia in a conversation with me a short time back reminded me of the fact that when we came to settle our Revolutionary debt with France, France said to us, "Pay me the principal and I will forgive you the interest," and we settled our national debt in that way.

Mr. Chairman, I feel, as I have said, that we can accept this settlement; that it will not be any loss to our country; and I believe that Great Britain, with her great national honor, will carry it out according to the details described in the settlement.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected, nor had I desired, that this debate should take a partisan turn, but almost from the beginning from the other side of the House politics has been injected into it. The principal charge made has been that the commission has consummated a great achievement, but that it was created by a Republican administration and composed of Republicans. To this charge I enter a plea of guilty. It is not the first time that anything of that kind has occurred, and it probably will not be the last time that the capacity of Republican leaders for managing the most important affairs of the country has been demonstrated.

The achievement of the commission, to my mind, has been not simply worthy of approval, but in fact most remarkable under the circumstances. Throughout the whole world there was a clamor for repudiation and constant demands for cancellation of the debts which arose out of the Great War, and which are owing from any of the allied nations to another. This sentiment not only prevailed in Europe but to a certain extent existed in our own country, and many of our people contended that it was actually to our interest that all these debts should be extinguished, including the one which is now in process of settlement.

Out of this clamor for repudiation the commission has come back to Congress with a positive acknowledgment of the debt. Instead of the indefinite, uncertain scrap of paper which we had we have now an acknowledgment of the debt and will obtain bonds precise and certain in their terms. From a condition under which we received nothing either in the way of principal or interest they have rescued us and brought back a proposition which provides for annual payment and in the long run will finally wipe out the debt.

Mr. Chairman, the credit is not alone with the commission nor to this country in accepting these terms. No more credit than is due has been given at any time in this debate for the part which England herself has taken. Few perhaps have considered fully the conditions which prevail in England which made it extremely unlikely that she should comply with the terms of this proposition and utterly impossible that she should pay this debt in full, according to the original terms. It was not alone the stupendous debt under which she labored, for the war had created a staggering load of other charges which must be met each day for pensions and the care of her disabled soldiers, and crushing taxes are already required to meet her liabilities. As a result of European conditions her business has been depressed and a million and a half men walk her streets and roads in search of employment that can not be found. Nor is this all. Her peace is threatened by wars which involve other nations and rumors of war in which the British nation must take part. Unrest and discontent are rife in many of her colonies, and even revolutions are threatened. Yet England, bending under the crushing load, harassed on every side, troubled in her various domains, has proudly taken up this additional burden and will march with it along the path of honor, rugged and thorny though it be. All honor, I say, to England. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as everyone here knows, I represent in part one of the great agricultural States of the Middle West, perhaps the greatest agricultural State of our Union. As such I fall in the class that, according to a prominent English authority, if correctly reported by the newspapers, is not capable of taking a broad view of such matters as are before us. Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, I was from the first in favor of giving the commission full power with reference to the settlement of the British debt and believed that a better and more satisfactory settlement was likely to be obtained if such authority was given. It did not seem to me to be necessary to require the commission to come back to Congress to obtain its final approval. I also was in favor of granting liberal terms to England for many reasons. We should keep in mind it is the only country that has made any overtures to us concerning the settlement of its debt, and for this reason is entitled to favorable consideration. But above and more important than this, it seemed to me, that we could not, as a great nation which had lost in comparison but little by the war, deal rigidly with a debtor which had been brought to a most unfortunate condition by reason of expenditures, both in blood and treasure, made primarily, it is true, for its own interest, but actually in a large degree for our benefit. We were partners in the great enterprise of preserving the freedom of the world from the domination of a military autocracy. Shoulder to shoulder our soldiers fought by the side of the English in the greatest conflict the world has ever known. Hundreds of thousands of British subjects now sleep beneath the soil of France, having given their lives in a cause which was not theirs alone but ours as well.

Mr. Chairman, on such a debt we can not correctly strike a balance by a mechanical computation which is governed by technical legal rules. A higher principle should guide us and I hope has controlled in this settlement. For my part I should have voted for it if the commission had found that even more favorable conditions ought to have been granted. As it is, I hope and trust that the moderate terms which have been granted will serve to further cement that friendship which ought to exist between two great English-speaking nations, which, acting together, can control the destinies of the world, but which, parted by discord and enmity, can only bring ruin upon themselves and destruction to civilization. For these reasons I most heartily congratulate the commission on its work, and when I vote for this measure will do so with a degree of pleasure and satisfaction which I have not often found in my congressional work.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can contribute anything to this debate. I have asked this time because I did not want the RECORD to fail to disclose exactly my attitude on the subject. I have heard several gentlemen wondering what would be said when they return home to their constituents, what their constituents would think of their vote here. I believe I represent as intelligent a constituency as any other gentleman on this floor, and with all due respect to my constituents I think I know more about this proposition than they do. If I do not, then they ought to send some man here who will study these questions and understand them better than they because they have not the time to study and understand them as we do. I am in favor of this bill, and I am in favor of the arrangement which the commissioners have made. For that reason I shall vote for the bill.

If I were to consider this solely from the selfish standpoint of my constituents—and I suppose we are all more or less influenced by such considerations—I would certainly favor this settlement, and I am rather inclined to the belief that I would favor it even if it had been more generous than it is. I know of no constituency that is more deeply interested in stabilizing the business conditions of the world, in stabilizing international credit and exchange, than mine is, because my constituents are practically all engaged in or in some way dependent upon the production of cotton which they hope to ship abroad and sell to consumers on the other side. Viewing it solely from a selfish standpoint, what would happen to them if we rejected this proposition? I am not an expert in international credit and banking. I do not understand the intricacies of international exchange, but I have the opinion of men who are experts, that if the word goes out from Washington throughout the world that the United States has rejected this proposition and will insist that England pay her debt at 4½ per cent within 25 years, and that we are going to insist that she live up to her contract, it will seriously disturb international trade conditions and still more seriously hamper international exchange and credits.

If that happens one result will be that those producers in this country who are largely dependent upon foreign markets will see the products of their fields decline tremendously in value. [Applause.] Suppose our action should be to discredit England. Suppose it should be to destroy or seriously impair the credit of England in the world, and that the rest of the world should understand that we had issued a proclamation that we are not interested in their welfare, that we shall do nothing on our part to contribute to the rehabilitation of the world, and that our only concern is in collecting, and collecting now, the money they owe us, what then? I believe that anything that seriously retards the rehabilitation of the Old World will do the cotton producer infinitely more harm than the boll weevil has ever done. If we can not sell our cotton across the ocean, we may just as well let the boll weevil have it, for he will pay practically as much as we can get for it elsewhere.

I do not indorse the action of the administration, of course, in appointing a partisan commission to deal with this great subject. I think it is a mistake for a President in such circumstances to fail to select out of the opposite political party some outstanding man to represent the Government on such commissions. President Wilson failed to do that himself when he undertook to make the first readjustment after the armistice, and Mr. Harding is following that bad example. When he came back a partisan Senate, inspired, I have always believed very largely by the fact that no Republican of national importance had been put on the commission, defeated the treaty which he had helped negotiate and which meant so much for the world, and I, among others on my side of the House, severely criticised the partisan stand of the Republican party upon that occasion. Are we now to emulate that bad example and because a Republican President through a Republican commission has made this agreement undertake to defeat it? That is not a sufficient reason to convince my judgment.

Suppose we refuse to ratify this agreement; what will be the effect upon public opinion not only in England but throughout the world? Is it true that no President can negotiate any treaty or effect any arrangement looking to the settlement of the tremendous problems which we have inherited from the war without encountering the bitter opposition of the opposite political party in this country?

Mr. Wilson undertook to effect an agreement at Versailles, which, in my opinion, would have brought peace to this very distracted world and would have made possible the readjustment of the infinite variety of perplexing questions which have harried all the nations ever since its rejection. But a partisan majority in the Senate defeated his high purpose.

Mr. Harding, through the commissioners of his choosing, has now undertaken to settle one of the great problems which has disturbed and still is disturbing business conditions throughout the world, and I, for one, am not going to follow the bad example which the Republicans set when they defeated the treaty of Versailles.

It is true when we loaned this money to England we had to issue our own bonds and borrow the money, and, as I understand the facts, it was a part of the agreement that she would take the money upon exactly the same terms as to interest and maturity of the bonds upon which we ourselves had borrowed it.

Under the arrangements recently effected by the commissioners of the two countries these terms are changed, and those changes are all favorable to England.

There is only one forum in which such matters can be properly determined and that is the forum of good conscience. We can, of course, insist that she live up to the letter of the agreement. But for the astute counsel who saved him from the performance of a very specific contract into which he had deliberately entered, the Merchant of Venice would have been compelled to pay the penalty nominated in his bond, but all of us who have witnessed this great trial, perhaps with no exceptions, were delighted at the outcome when the new Daniel came to judgment.

Washington warned us in his farewell address of the unwisdom of an undue friendship for one nation or an undue prejudice against another.

But I can not wipe out of my memory to-day and approach this question uninfluenced by the facts which that memory presents at the time this money was loaned and when, as we believed, the liberties of the world were in jeopardy.

Those conditions doubtless did and should properly enter into the consideration in this settlement.

Three years of war had well-nigh exhausted the Allies. The government of the Czar had been overthrown by revolution and it was quite apparent that Russia would retire from the conflict. Rumania and Serbia had been overrun and the campaign at Gallipoli had failed. Germany, flushed by these victories, was able to strengthen her western front by the addition of many thousands of soldiers withdrawn from the other fronts.

England, in addition to the then unequaled expenditure of money for the conduct of her own military operations, had been forced to finance her allies. She believed that the destruction of the British Empire was imminent, and we believed that the liberties of the world were involved in the outcome.

Money, of course, was difficult to get and interest rates soared high. It was in such circumstances that we loaned her the money after we had been drawn into the conflict.

The armistice was signed and the guns ceased to fire on the battle fronts, but we know now that the war had not ended.

President Wilson with the representatives of our associates in the war undertook to negotiate a treaty which he believed, and all of us hoped, would inaugurate an era of peace on earth. When that treaty came to us, a partisan majority in the Senate refused to ratify it, and by so doing complicated the already dangerously unsettled conditions of the world.

I did, and so did the rest of us on this side of the Chamber, criticize the Republican Party for what we believed to be its spirit of narrow partisanship in dealing with a great international matter.

To-day conditions are reversed. President Harding has now undertaken to help to readjust the appalling industrial and financial conditions which have so seriously interfered with all international trade since the war.

Surely we are not going to follow the bad example set us by the Republican Senate and permit our partisanship to lead us into the serious error of blocking this first great step toward world rehabilitation.

England has come to us with an earnest and genuine desire to repay the money we loaned her when we were both touching elbows in the fight for democracy. She has asked no alms; she has not appealed to our charity; she frankly asks us for our bill. Our commissioners proposed to her to settle upon certain terms which provide for the amortization of her debt in 62 years at a rate of interest which they believed fair and just. I believe they have done well, and I am going to vote to ratify their acts.

What would happen if we should reject this as we rejected the treaty of Versailles? If we say to the world, as we would practically be saying, that we will not ratify any agreement any Executive may make with any of the powers of the earth looking to a peaceful settlement of the distressful conditions which now obtain throughout the world?

Our commissioners say this is a fair and just settlement, and I believe it is. England is not the great money power of the earth she was a few years ago, and the Government of England is not refusing to lay the heavy hand of the tax gatherer on her people in an earnest effort to discharge all of her obligations. The fact is, as I am advised, the Englishman is the most heavily taxed citizen in the world. Any substantial increase would amount to practical confiscation. Their wealth is not more than 30 per cent of the estimated wealth of the United States. The increase in her present revenue over her revenue before the war exceeds the total annual savings of all of her people prior to 1914. Can we in good conscience demand that she do more?

Assuming that we will never collect the debt owing to us by any of the other allies, the debt of the United States Government is about $180 per capita of our population. The per capita debt of the English Government is $900. In other words, the debt of the United States Government for each family is about $900, and the national debt of England is $4,000 for each family. She has no undeveloped resources. Ours are almost unlimited. She is the best customer we have across the seas, and upon the ability of her industrial enterprises to continue functioning depends in considerable degree the prosperity of the producers of raw materials in this country.

The nations she financed—and they were our allies as well as hers—have not paid her and can not pay her.

I am not at all influenced by the charge that we are showing favoritism to England. The bill provides that no settlement hereafter made with any of our other allies shall be upon more favorable terms to them; but I dare say if we could make an arrangement with our other debtors that would really guarantee the repayment to us of the vast sums they owe us we would not quibble with them long about the rate of interest they were to pay.

England is doing her best to-day to keep the peace of the world, and she can not be charged with shirking the great responsibility which rests upon every powerful member of the family of nations. She is to-day at Smyrna in a desperate effort to stamp out a fire which, if kindled, may start a conflagration which will sweep the earth.

If another European war should come and the existing order of things be overturned, she will be the rock upon which the waves of Bolshevism will dash to pieces, if, indeed, they can be stopped at all. She stands for orderly government everywhere her influence is dominant; for the enforcement of law; for the preservation of governmental guaranties of life, liberty, and property; and when these guaranties are lost men will in vain engage in the pursuit of happiness.

I am not willing to take the chance of crippling her or lessening the power of her strong right arm, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, when this House in a few minutes passes this legislation by an almost unanimous vote, as it will do, it will have done a thing far greater for national and international peace and stabilization than even the Conference on Limitation of Armament accomplished.

On October 24, 1921, when the World War Foreign Debt Commission was discussed in this House, foreign governments owed the United States $10,141,267,585.68 in addition to certain accrued interest. Of this vast sum, $13,999,146.60 was lent to Esthonia and $9,025,000 to Cuba, but the greatest sums were advanced to our allies in the war, Great Britain, France, and Italy.

When we were discussing the creation of that commission, whose splendid work we will soon ratify and confirm, I said that "the American people will be glad to see in this bill that the World War Foreign Debt Commission will not have power to cancel 'any part of such indebtedness except through payment thereof.'" To-day, I am sure that the American people are glad that Great Britain has led the way for final settlement of this huge debt. War on account of these debts with any of our recent allies is inconceivable, but this settlement with Great Britain removes a constant possibility of misunderstanding and mutual distrust, and makes for world balance and world peace and good will.

It is a privilege of high order to participate as a Member of this House in this, the greatest international achievement since the armistice, and it has been a memorable thing to have heard such contributions to the discussion as the speeches of the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. BURTON and Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and others. The Evening Sun, of Baltimore, remarked editorially Saturday evening, February 5, under the caption "A good settlement," that "the terms of the agreement reached between the American Debt Funding Commission and the British mission seem to be based on a certain businesslike recognition of the facts of the situation."

This, I think, will be the sound judgment of the Nation, and on that firm basis of fair business dealings the two great English-speaking nations stand together for world peace and fairness.

The President said in this Hall a few days ago—

> The call of the world to-day is for integrity of agreements, the sanctity of covenants, the validity of contracts. Here is the first clearing of the war-clouded skies in a debt-burdened world, and the sincere commitment of one great nation to validate its financial pledges and discharge its obligations in the highest sense of financial honor.

This agreement is alike to the honor of England and ourselves and to the great credit of the President, the commission, and all concerned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are dealing with a people who are indebted to us. Nine men out of 10 in this House are indebted to somebody. [Applause.] Do not forget. I have been married nearly 50 years, and I am still indebted to my mother-in-law. I want to deal generously with the people who owe us this great sum of money. This is a precedent and basis for other nations of the world who owe us money. We expect them to come forward and settle upon practically this same basis. The question has been asked here, What is the per capita debt of Great Britain? Great Britain's per capita debt to-day in round numbers is $800, and that of France $900, and of Germany $1,500, and of the people of the United States $200; or deducting from our public debt the amount owing us by foreign nations, our public debt per capita to-day is $118, $30 greater than the per capita debt of this great Nation at the close of the Civil War.

My good friends, it behooves us to deal generously with the people who were engaged in that Great War, and who suffered more than we did, both in the loss of property and human life. To-day we can afford to settle upon this basis, and I am going to ask for a record vote, a yea-and-nay vote, at the passage of this bill for one purpose only, and that is to show to the world the support of the Congress of the United States to our commission which was created by law to deal with this great question.

At the time our Government took these short-time or demand foreign bonds I, upon the floor of this House, stated that I justified the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in doing so, for the reason that at that time we did not know the rate of interest we would be obliged to pay our own people for money to loan to these foreign governments. We did not know how long the World War would last; therefore we took the demand bonds, with the understanding that we would, at the end of the war, surrender these short-time bonds for long-time bonds, and, my friends, that is just what is proposed by this bill. In other words, we now propose to close the deal entered into by the former administration with Great Britain, and Great Britain has agreed to settle as per conditions set out in this bill.

For the purpose of information I now wish to insert into the RECORD a letter just received from the Treasury Department; also copy of one of the demand certificates held by our Government given by Great Britain, and, Mr. Chairman, I now ask for a reading of the bill.

THE UNDERSECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 8, 1923.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FORDNEY: In accordance with our conversation of this afternoon, I am inclosing herewith a copy of a form of obligation (seventh series) given by the British Government for advances made under the Liberty bond acts. The terms of the obligations changed from time to time in order to conform to the provisions of the successive Liberty bond acts, but the seventh series was the last, and the form used for that series serves to indicate the general form of the obligations of the earlier series. I shall be glad to let you have copies of the obligations of the other series if desired.

Sincerely yours, S. P. GILBERT, Jr.,
Undersecretary.

—

CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS.

SEVENTH SERIES.

($1,000,000.)

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for value received, promises to pay to the United States of America, or assigns, the sum of $1,000,000, on demand, with interest from the date hereof, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Such principal sum and the interest thereon will be paid at the subtreasury of the United States in New York, or, at the option of the holder, at the Treasury of the United States in Washington, in gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness, or, at the option of the holder, at the Bank of England, London, England, in pounds sterling, at the buying rate for cable sterling on London in the New York market at noon on the day of such demand, as determined by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and at any such place of payment without deduction for any British taxes, present or future.

This certificate will be converted by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America, at par, with an adjustment of accrued interest, into an equal par amount of 5 per cent convertible gold bonds of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland conforming to the provisions of acts of Congress of the United States known, respectively, as second Liberty bond act, third Liberty bond act, and fourth Liberty bond act. If bonds of the United States issued under authority of said acts shall be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4¼ per cent per annum, a proportionate part of the obligations of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of this series acquired by the United States under authority of said acts shall, at the request of said Secretary of the Treasury, be converted into obligations of said Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland bearing interest at a rate exceeding that previously borne by this obligation by the same amount as the interest rate of the bonds of the United States issued upon such conversion exceeds the interest rate of 4¼ per cent but not less than the highest rate of interest borne by such bonds of the United States.

———, ———,
For the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Dated this — day of ———, 1919.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask for a reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That the settlement of indebtedness of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, recommended by the commission and approved by the President, as set forth by him in a message presented to Congress on February 7, 1923, as contained in House Document No. 554, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, as follows:

Principal of notes to be refunded	$4,074,818,358.44
Interest accrued and unpaid up to Dec. 15, 1922, at the rate of 4¼ per cent	629,836,106.99
	4,704,654,465.43
Deduct payments made Oct. 16, 1922, and Nov. 15, 1922, with interest at 4¼ per cent thereon to Dec. 15, 1922	100,526,379.69
	4,604,128,085.74
To be paid in cash	4,128,085.74
Total principal of indebtedness as of Dec. 15, 1922, for which British Government bonds are to be issued to the United States Government at par	4,600,000,000.00

"'The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the British Government to make these payments in three-year periods. The amount of the first year's installment will be $23,000,000 and these annual installments will increase with due regularity during the life of the bonds until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment will be $175,000,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

"'The British Government shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' previous notice.

"'Interest is to be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates, on December 15 and June 15 of each year: 3 per cent semiannually, June 15, 1923, to December 15, 1932, inclusive; 3½ per cent semiannually, June 15, 1933, until final payment.

"'For the first five years one-half the interest may be deferred and added to the principal, bonds to be issued therefor similar to those of the original issue.

"'Any payment of interest or of principal may be made in any United States Government bonds issued since April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest'—is hereby approved and authorized, and settlements, similar, but not more favorable in terms, with other governments indebted to the United States, as set forth in this section, are hereby authorized to be made, subject to the approval of the President."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to give greater clarity to one portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 3, lines 8 to 10, strike out all of lines 8, 9, and 10, after the word "year" and the colon following, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At the rate of 3 per cent per annum payable semiannually from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932; thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum payable semiannually until final payment."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I regard the provisions there as such that while it can be readily interpreted it is not altogether in the best form, and the amendment states clearly——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The provisions in the bill, in line 8, is June 15, 1923. As I heard the amendment read from the desk it said June 15, 1922.

Mr. BURTON. December 15, 1922.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported, with the permission of the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 8 to 10, strike out all of lines 8, 9, and 10, after the word "year" and the colon following, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually, until final payment."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] yield before he yields the floor and that amendment is voted on?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand, this proposition set forth in the bill is the basis of the agreement. Can the gentleman inform the House whether this same text is that which has been ratified by the British Government?

Mr. BURTON. The British Government had a representative here, who agreed upon this modification. It means the same thing in any event, but it is more clearly expressed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The payments will begin six months earlier under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BURTON. No. The bonds are dated December 15, 1922, and this interest is payable June 15 and December 15. The object of that is so that whatever is paid may be available for payments from our Treasury July 1 thereafter and January 1 thereafter. That was the suggestion of the American commission, that it be made December 15 and June 15.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman has just stated that the bonds are dated December 15, 1922. I have been endeavoring to find out the denominations of those bonds.

Mr. BURTON. That is a matter of detail, to be arranged according to the option of our Treasury Department. Presumably in the beginning they will be in very large amounts, with the option, at the request of our Government, to split them up into smaller denominations.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, it is in the nature of an obligation given by one government to another instead of the usual bond?

Mr. BURTON. A usual bond, but an unusual payee.

Mr. LONDON. A government obligor to a government obligee.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if this resolution is to be adopted at all——

A MEMBER. Oh, no. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Do not get in a hurry. I am here to use time, and I will use it. If this resolution is to be adopted at all, we ought to adopt the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Ohio. We ought to adopt another amendment, also, to place back into this resolution a further restriction in this proviso in section 2 that will place proper limitation upon settlements concerning the other five or six billions of dollars that other countries owe us. When we adopt this resolution we are taking away every restriction from this present commission. For two more years they have a right to act in the settlement of the other $6,000,000,000 that the other foreign countries owe us without any restriction. Is not that true?

Mr. BURTON. By no means.

Mr. BLANTON. What restriction is left?

Mr. BURTON. In settlements similar but not more favorable in terms with other Governments indebted to the United States, as set forth in this section, subject to the approval of the President. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right, so far as it goes. [Laughter.] But then the commission, as the distinguished gentleman will admit—if the other country wanted to come up and say, "I do not treat my obligations as a scrap of paper; I want to pay 100 cents on the dollar on my obligations; I want to pay 4½ per cent interest, what I agreed to pay," the American Government could not accept it? You could not accept it?

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman promise to make that same speech to these Governments that are indebted to us and induce them to come up and say that? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman if he would accept it under this resolution? You could not accept a more favorable proposition.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly we could; any offer under the terms of the original statute. But it is inconcelvable that that will happen. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Will that mean that no more amendments will be offered at all?

The CHAIRMAN. No, the Chair thinks.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes, for the purpose of letting the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is recognized.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that if I did not speak on this measure I would be remiss in my duty as a Representative of the largest one-Member constituency. After all, I represent a certain school of thought, and while in various parliamentary bodies there are representatives of schools of "sharks" I represent a school of philosophy. [Laughter.] As a socialist I can not content myself with merely voting for the bill. I want also to say a word in favor of it. [Applause.]

This is the outstanding act of this Congress. Not since 1814, when the agreement was reached between the United States and Great Britain for removing all war vessels from the Great Lakes and all forts on a boundary line of 3,000 miles, has so great a step been taken in the direction of peace between two great nations. Having cast my vote against the declaration of war and having lived through its sorrows, I rejoice that I have now an opportunity to vote for a measure which will help to promote international understanding and the peace of the world. [Applause.] I am not interested in percentages of interest; you can not speak the language of usury in dealings among nations.

When you extend the time of payment for 62 years—for nearly two generations—you offer a basis of an adjustment to all nations of the world. I will take the converse of the proposition laid down by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], which you all applauded, because I am afraid to be too much in agreement with you; it makes me doubt whether I am right. [Laughter.] He thought it was an invitation to all nations to pay their debts. It is more than that. It is a plea to the distracted nations to recognize each other's difficulties and to mutually liquidate their indebtedness. By this we say to France and her militaristic element, "See what we have done! See how the United States has acted toward a great, prosperous, and rich nation like Great Britain. We invite you to do likewise to the prostrate and helpless people of Germany." It will be a suggestion to ourselves as well as to the rest of the world how to deal with the distressed and bleeding people of Russia—180,000,000 in the agony of more than one revolution striving toward the light and trying to rise above themselves toward a better future. It is but a first step, but a giant's step forward, this settlement of the debt between Great Britain and this country. I support whole-heartedly this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the bill close in 10 minutes.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman give me one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion of Mr. FORDNEY was agreed to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by striking out "3½ per cent" where it occurs and inserting "4½ per cent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Strike out "3 and 3½ per cent" where they occur in the amendment offered by Mr. BURTON and insert in lieu thereof "4½ per cent."

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield me a moment?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no time yielded on this amendment, because by a vote of the committee debate was closed on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio and all amendments thereto. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rosenbloom, page 3, line 13, after the word "issue" insert:

Provided, however, That during the period of time set out above, if there shall be found due or owing any sum or sums of money from the United States to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, that such sum or sums shall be credited to the Government of Great Britain and Ireland as against the full indebtedness to the United States, as of the date of such finding.

Mr. BURTON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of this amendment may be discerned readily by the majority of you who are familiar with financial matters. The bill provides that for three years there can be no payment on principal should Great Britain desire that, and that half of the amount of interest that accrues for the first five years may be reduced by issuing bonds similar to those exchanged at this time. So that, with the exception of the $23,000,000 provided for in line 14, the probabilities are that all the real, hard cash that our people paid over to England that will come back to us in the first five years under the provisions of this bill will be that $23,000,000. Ever since this bill was presented I have tried to secure from the Treasury Department a statement of how much money we have paid Great Britain since this indebtedness was incurred as well as the amount they were still claiming from us. I have failed to get any definite statement, but it was $1,000,000,000 anyhow; and it may be that in the next two or three years we will be called upon to pay from $500,000,000 to $800,000,000 more in the good, hard cash of the people whom we represent while we are securing for them in return a promise to pay something running over the period of 62 years. So, in all good spirit and well wishes to Great Britain, our ally, but in the interest of the people of this country, why add to the amount that shall be due to us when they begin paying real, hard cash by our sending more cash over there in payment for the carrying of our troops and supplies and the purchase of cannon, and so on, for which we owed them and for which they have many hundreds of millions in claims against the United States?

The purpose of this amendment is that when these things are adjudicated, and it is held that they have a valid claim for two or three or four hundred million dollars, why not credit it to the interest account that is accrued rather than be sending it over to them in cash? I do not see anything unreasonable in that proposition. It would be regarded as sound business for the grocers and butchers and individuals whom you represent, and if it is sound business for individuals, why is it not sound business for the Nation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand that the effect of this amendment would be to throw this whole thing back into the chaos where it was before?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Not necessarily. We accept the term of the indebtedness, we accept the interest rate. We are extending the time 62 years. I am going to vote for this bill regardless of whether this amendment is adopted or not. In the next five years cash will be king more than ever before. During that time governments will be extending credit to other governments for commercial purposes, to finance business men, and so forth. If my amendment is defeated, we shall in all probability pay to Great Britain five or six hundred million dollars more than we receive. This is not good judgment and is not required by the situation. The acceptance on our part of 3 and 3½ per cent on the debt, the extension to 62 years in the time for payment should be enough to show the world our willingness to help. We should not, however, be asked to further advance money to Great Britain, which we certainly do if my amendment is omitted from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 8 ayes and 111 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with an amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report it back forthwith, with the following amendment:

"This resolution shall not go into effect until the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is repealed."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana moves to recommit the bill with instructions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. O'CONNOR moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: At the end of the bill insert: "This resolution shall not go into effect until the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is repealed."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the motion to recommit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 291, nays 44, not voting 91, as follows:

YEAS—291.

Ackerman	Dunn	Kopp	Robsion
Anderson	Dupré	Kraus	Rodenberg
Andrew, Mass.	Echols	Lampert	Rogers
Andrews, Nebr.	Edmonds	Langley	Rosenbloom
Anthony	Elliott	Lanham	Rucker
Appleby	Evans	Larsen, Ga.	Sanders, Ind.
Arentz	Fairchild	Larson, Minn.	Sanders, N. Y.
Aswell	Faust	Lawrence	Schall
Atkeson	Fenn	Layton	Scott, Tenn.
Bacharach	Fess	Lazaro	Sears
Bankhead	Fields	Lea, Calif.	Shaw
Barbour	Fish	Leatherwood	Shelton
Barkley	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Sinclair
Beck	Fitzgerald	Lineberger	Sinnott
Beedy	Focht	Linthicum	Sisson
Begg	Fordney	Little	Slemp
Bell	Foster	London	Smith, Idaho
Benham	Frear	Longworth	Snell
Bird	Freeman	Luce	Snyder
Bixler	French	Luhring	Speaks
Black	Frothingham	Lyon	Sproul
Bland, Ind.	Fuller	McArthur	Stafford
Bland, Va.	Fulmer	McDuffie	Stedman
Boies	Funk	McKenzie	Steenerson
Bond	Garrett, Tenn.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stephens
Briggs	Gensman	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Stevenson
Britten	Gernerd	McPherson	Strong, Kans.
Brooks, Ill.	Gifford	MacGregor	Summers, Wash.
Brown, Tenn.	Glynn	MacLafferty	Sumners, Tex.
Browne, Wis.	Graham, Ill.	Madden	Swank
Buchanan	Green, Iowa	Magee	Sweet
Burtness	Greene, Mass.	Maloney	Swing
Burton	Greene, Vt.	Mapes	Taylor, Colo.
Butler	Griest	Martin	Taylor, Tenn.
Byrnes, S. C.	Griffin	Michener	Temple
Byrns, Tenn.	Hadley	Miller	Thompson
Cable	Hardy, Colo.	Mondell	Thorpe
Campbell, Kans.	Hardy, Tex.	Montague	Tilson
Campbell, Pa.	Haugen	Moore, Ill.	Timberlake
Cannon	Hawes	Moore, Ohio	Tinkham
Cantrill	Hawley	Moore, Va.	Towner
Carter	Hayden	Moores, Ind.	Tucker
Chalmers	Hays	Morgan	Turner
Chandler, Okla.	Herrick	Mott	Tyson
Chindblom	Hersey	Mudd	Underhill
Christopherson	Hickey	Murphy	Upshaw
Clague	Hicks	Nelson, Me.	Vaile
Clark, Fla.	Hill	Nelson, A. P.	Vestal
Clarke, N. Y.	Hoch	Nelson, J. M.	Vinson
Clouse	Hooker	Newton, Minn.	Voigt
Cole, Iowa	Huddleston	Newton, Mo.	Volstead
Cole, Ohio	Hukriede	Norton	Walters
Colton	Hull	Ogden	Ward, N. Y.
Connally, Tex.	Humphrey, Nebr.	Oliver	Ward, N. C.
Cooper, Ohio	Humphreys, Miss.	Overstreet	Watson
Cooper, Wis.	Husted	Parker, N. J.	Weaver
Coughlin	Ireland	Parker, N. Y.	Webster
Crago	Jacoway	Patterson, Mo.	White, Kans.
Cramton	James	Patterson, N. J.	White, Me.
Crisp	Jefferis, Nebr.	Paul	Williams, Ill.
Curry	Jeffers, Ala.	Perkins	Williams, Tex.
Dale	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	Williamson
Dallinger	Kearns	Pou	Wilson
Darrow	Kelley, Mich.	Pringey	Winslow
Deal	Kelly, Pa.	Purnell	Woodruff
Dempsey	Ketcham	Radcliffe	Woods, Va.
Denison	Kiess	Rayburn	Woodyard
Dickinson	Kincheloe	Reece	Wright
Doughton	Kirkpatrick	Reed, W. Va.	Wurzbach
Dowell	Kissel	Rhodes	Wyant
Drewry	Kleczka	Ricketts	Young
Driver	Kline, Pa.	Roach	Zihlman
Dunbar	Knutson	Robertson

NAYS—44.

Abernethy	Favrot	McCormick	Riordan
Almon	Gallivan	McSwain	Rouse
Blanton	Garrett, Tex.	Mansfield	Sabath
Bowling	Hammer	Mead	Sanders, Tex.
Box	Hudspeth	O'Connor	Sandlin
Brand	Johnson, Ky.	Oldfield	Smithwick
Carew	Johnson, Miss.	Parks, Ark.	Steagall
Collier	Jones, Tex.	Quin	Taylor, Ark.
Collins	Lankford	Rainey, Ill.	Thomas
Cullen	Logan	Raker	Tillman
Dominick	Lowrey	Rankin	Wingo

NOT VOTING—91.

Ansorge	Garner	Kreider	Rose
Blakeney	Gilbert	Kunz	Rossdale
Bowers	Goldsborough	Lee, N. Y.	Ryan
Brennan	Goodykoontz	Lehlbach	Scott, Mich.
Brooks, Pa.	Gorman	McClintic	Shreve
Bulwinkle	Gould	McFadden	Siegel
Burdick	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Mich.
Burke	Henry	Merritt	Stiness
Chandler, N. Y.	Himes	Michaelson	Stoll
Classon	Hogan	Mills	Strong, Pa.
Cockran	Huck	Morin	Sullivan
Codd	Hutchinson	O'Brien	Tague
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Olpp	Taylor, N. J.
Copley	Jones, Pa.	Paige	Ten Eyck
Crowther	Kahn	Park, Ga.	Tincher
Davis, Minn.	Keller	Perlman	Treadway
Davis, Tenn.	Kendall	Petersen	Volk
Drane	Kennedy	Rainey, Ala.	Wason
Dyer	Kindred	Ramseyer	Wheeler
Ellis	King	Ransley	Wise
Fairfield	Kitchin	Reber	Wood, Ind.
Free	Kline, N. Y.	Reed, N. Y.	Yates
Gahn	Knight	Riddick

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Treadway (for) with Mr. Knight (against).

Mr. Graham of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. Sullivan (against).

Mr. Davis of Tennessee (for) with Mr. Kindred (against).

Mr. Morin (for) with Mr. Tague (against).

Mr. Tincher (for) with Mr. Keller (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Bulwinkle.

Mr. Free with Mr. McClintic.

Mr. Crowther with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. Yates with Mr. Wise.

Mr. Fairfield with Mr. Stoll.

Mr. Kendall with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. Cockran.

Mr. Hutchinson with Mr. Drane.

Mr. Brennan with Mr. Kitchin.

Mr. Merritt with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. Smith of Michigan with Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Shreve with Mr. Park of Georgia.

Mr. Perlman with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. HENRY. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have general leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon the subject matter of the bill for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks upon the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this bill and take this opportunity to state some of my reasons:

First. It closes up and funds the debt of our largest debtor at a rate which will be equal in a few years to the rate all the bonds of the United States will bear, and insures good feeling with our greatest customer; with Britain prosperous and friendly, the cotton farmer of the South has a market always.

Second. It closes the door to the clamor for debt cancellation. England having funded and agreed to pay her debt will not back any other nation in asking to be freed from them.

Third. It backs up Mr. Wilson's position, that we were not in the war for profit, but patriotism; and we would not drive a Shylock trade with our greatest associate in the war.

Fourth. It cements the friendship of the great English-speaking peoples and presents to the world the spectacle of amity which does much to insure lasting peace. The balance of the world will be slow to attack the Anglo-Saxon combination and they do not seek to attack others. There are many other reasons which I will not stop to enumerate. I append an editorial, by former Chief Justice Jones of South Carolina, in the Lancaster News, which states the case so well that it deserves perpetuation, as follows:

THE BRITISH DEBT SETTLEMENT.

We believe the proposed adjustment of the British debt to the United States meets the demands of both justice and equity. A speedy acceptance of the terms of agreement by Congress would be most salutary in its stabilizing effect on world finance and the promotion of good will between the great English-speaking nations. To make the adjustment a subject for partisan politics would be very unwise. We must admire the British for the unflinching maintainance of their debt-paying honor in times of great economic distress. The United States can certainly afford to be considerate in long-time extension of credit at moderate interest.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statements made by the Members of this House upon this most important subject. The proponents of the measure, as well as its opponents, all seem to agree upon the main points at issue, viz, that it will be to the advantage of America to have this obligation on the part of Great Britain gotten into funded obligations rather than allow the I O U's to continue in their present shape. The only real question to be determined by this Congress is the duration of the bonded indebtedness and the rates of interest on said bonds. It will make little difference to our people whether the bonds are to be paid in 25 years at the rate of 4½ per cent or whether these bonds will be paid in 62 years at an interest rate of 3 and 3½ per cent. What the American people want is a speedy settlement of not only this obligation but the remaining $19,000,000 owing the United States by our late allies. It seems to me that the English Government has made a fair proposition when all phases of their financial condition are taken into consideration. The most cordial relations exist between England and America, and knowing that we all desire that such pleasant relations continue this act on the part of this branch of our National Legislature will have a beneficial effect upon the other nations who are our debtors, and probably cause them to begin negotiations with us with a view of settling their debts upon a similar basis. May this 9th day of February, 1923, be a historic day of our Nation, a day marking the beginning of a new era not only for America but for England.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the observation has been made to-day that the United States of America is giving away billions in the settlement proposed in this bill to the great detriment of our own nationals. Let us see exactly what it amounts to. The difference between a 3½ per cent rate and a 5 per cent rate for the 62 years during which the amortization of the principal takes places is stated to be $2,449,635,218.40.

Viewed as a concrete proposition this is a sum exceeding the amount asked for by the first Liberty loan. However, this is not to be conceded all at once, but through a period nearly equal to the allotted life of man—over three score years. Now let us analyze the figures as compared with the present population of the United States and what it will be at the end of 1985 when the last installment will be liquidated.

The population of the United States at the present time is 110,000,000 people. It is increasing at the rate of not less than 1,680,000 persons a year. If only that normal increase is considered, the population in the United States in 1985, when very few of those who are living will be alive, will be practically doubled—it can not be less than 214,160,000. Of course the cumulative increase will be much greater. Granting that situation, do we all realize that this concession will not amount to 2 cents per month per inhabitant in this country? Not the price of a postage stamp to mail a letter! Let us figure it out: 2 cents per month equals 24 cents per individual per year, or $26,400,000 per year. Sixty-two times this amount would equal $1,636,800,000. But the population in that time will have increased by at least 104,160,000 persons, which at 24 cents a year or a postage stamp per month equals the sum of $24,998,400. For 62 years this progressive increase, averaged over the period, will amount to $774,950,400, which added to $1,636,800,000 amounts to $2,411,750,400, or practically the total amount of interest conceded; the fractions that I have discarded will take care of the small deficiency. Therefore we who are enthusiastically favoring this settlement can truthfully say to anyone who may object to the proposed terms that the concession of interest does not amount to a postage stamp per month for each person in our country.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to give my support to H. R. 14254, in substance approving the report and settlement of the conferees in the adjustment of the indebtedness of the two great English-speaking nations. The terms of the settlement, I am sure, will meet with the approval of the people of my district, and they will be satisfied with the definite and fixed terms of the agreement presented.

It shows a very healthy return to pre-war conditions when the only two nations on earth to-day worth living for and fighting for can get together on a business basis and adjust the money consideration that exists between them, strike a balance, and arrive at a conclusion. Apparently the United States made no effort to drive a sharp bargain because she held the whip hand. And the British Government made no attempt to confess and avoid payment because she was and is hard pressed as a result of the World War. The "pound of flesh" does not appear in the transaction between these two great nations.

About the middle of last November the total debts owed to the United States by the fighting nations in the war was, in round numbers, $10,100,000,000. About this sum of money had been sent overseas to help out the allied governments in their mighty effort to carry on the war. On the money advanced interest had accrued amounting to about $1,500,000,000, bringing the total amount due to the United States Government up to about the sum of $11,500,000,000. The money loaned or passed over to the allied governments represented transactions that occurred in 1917, 1918, and 1919. It seems to be an "open account" that the allied governments had with the United States. On her individual account payments have been made by Great Britain, in all, amounting to $100,526,000, and the remainder of the sum due was subject to such counterclaims and offsets as the English Government might wish to interpose in order to reduce its liability.

To the credit of the English people, let it be known that no such claims were filed. Of the moneys invested in the allied governments during the war period the English Government admits a just claim against her exchequer amounting to $4,604,000,000. And this sum she has arranged to pay. The difference between what England will pay and the total sum invested, if it can be called an investment, is the money loaned to the other allied nations engaged in the war. What these other nations will do, what course they may pursue, in no way affects the validity or equity of this settlement.

France owes the next largest sum, and so far shows no disposition to pay either interest or principal. She says she must depend on the German indemnity to pay her obligations to us. And as matters now stand it looks like the collection of the German indemnity will be indefinitely delayed. The other nations whose "I O U's" we are said to hold are now out of the game, and an understanding with them along any line of proposed settlement is not likely at an early date. It seems that it resolves itself into the parable, "Behold, a sower went forth to sow," and out of every 11 grains of seed that left his hand 4 of them fell on good ground and will return the seed that he sowed. The other seven grains fell on stony ground, among the thorns and tares, and if they produce at all it will be a straggly, uneven field.

The work of this World War Foreign Debt Commission has been thorough and accurate, and it has arrived at results. It is set out in full review in H. R. 14254. The opponents to the passage of this bill base their objection to the change the commission makes in the terms of the agreement differing from the conditions set out in the bill creating the commission. But the Congress passed the law under which the commission acted. It set out rigid, fixed, unworkable conditions, under which results could not be proclaimed. The same power that fixed this rule can certainly change it. The purpose of the bill is to make the law conform to the agreement reached by the commission. This is within the purview of power granted.

The fact that other countries do not, will not, or can not pay in no way absolves Great Britain, or does it furnish her an excuse for further delay or compromise. But the fact that she is the only one of the allied nations that acknowledges her indebtedness and fixes the time and the interest rate and the amount of the obligation, invites at least reasonable consideration for a fair offer as to the terms of payment. Her proposal is to issue bonds for the amount found due, fixing the interest rate and the time of payment. It is a fair proposal in itself. It ought to be accepted. It will clean the slate, close at least one account, and establish the cordial relations between the two great English-speaking peoples that in the immediate future is as important as the settlement itself.

Stability, credit, confidence, faith in men as individuals, as well as in governments, is an essential condition to world peace right now. This will help it along.

It ought also to put an end to the propaganda of the United States canceling the obligations incurred by the various allied nations under stress of war. The purpose of war is to put stress on somebody—on some nation. Forgiving debts may or may not be a Christian act. "As we forgive our debtors," it is said, "so will they forgive their debtors." And thus the German indemnity will be reduced to the allied nation to which it has been allocated by the sum of our forgiveness. If this should so result, the transaction certainly presents an anomalous situation.

In 1917, 1918, and 1919 the American people bent their backs to raise the money necessary to win the war. If by forgiving the debt of the allied nations due us from the money thus raised the German indemnity is correspondingly decreased, the net result is that the moneys raised by the American people in 1917 to "win the war" is applied and used in 1923 to pay the German indemnity. And this, to my mind, is unthinkable. These debts due from the various allied nations are not due so much to our Government as they are to our people as individuals. We personally raised the money that went to these debtor nations. And while our investments in our own Government securities have been taken over by the Government in a legal and orderly way, ours is not a forgettable interest in the transaction in which practically every American had a part. And all Americans will hail with delight the settlement negotiated with Great Britain and hope for an equally just settlement with other nations when the leaven of honesty, outcropping at all points in this settlement, has leavened the whole of the allied powers.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, occasionally I hear talk of economy. I thought that economy meant to save. I did not know it meant to take from him that "hath not" and give "unto him that hath." This, though, is the economy practiced here. A few days ago a great move for economy was made. The free garden and flower seed was killed. The millions of people—school children, little boys and girls—were deprived of free flower seed and garden seed. There was great rejoicing among the alleged economists. Of course, free seed cost money, but why rejoice so much over saving a few pennies from the hands of children and the poor and yet give untold millions to the big rich; millions to the big shipping interest in the form of a subsidy; millions, yea billions, to the British Government—billions not of our own but of the people's hard-earned money.

There is great rejoicing when a few pennies are saved from the meager allowance that the farmers of the Nation have been getting. This rejoicing is only exceeded when billions are given to Wall Street, the corporate interests, or to England. The shouting over the defeat of the free-seed item reminds me of the fellow who was rejoicing because he killed a rabbit in his cabbage patch and paid no attention to a thousand head of elephants which were devouring his cabbage.

Gentlemen, you are worrying about a gimlet hole in one end of the financial barrel when the whole head is out of the other end. For every dollar you saved by cutting off free seed you give by this bill to the British Government $30,000. You cancel a small per cent of interest on a large sum of money, which is equivalent to canceling a large amount of the debt. What is the difference between giving away a dollar of interest and giving away a dollar of principal? It is a dollar in either event. England owes the United States about $50 for every man, woman, and child in the United States, or $5,000,000,000. Those in favor of giving part of this money to England avoid saying they favor canceling one-third or one-half of this debt, but say they favor giving 62 years' time on the debt and a very low rate of 3 per cent interest. The payments to be made are very small compared to the size of the debt. If England paid 4½ per cent interest and made these small payments, she would pay interest and a very small part of principal each year, so that at the end of 62 years there would still be due about two-thirds of the debt. This is what is to be knocked off. I can not agree to it. Why let England have money at less interest than we are paying for the very money we are loaning? Why let England have money for decidedly less than our people can borrow it?

The United States is taxing everybody and everything to get money to pay interest on this money that is being given away. It is even proposed to tax farm-loan bonds and run up the rate to the farmers so as to get money to give away to England. It is proposed to give millions, yea, billions, to England to use in building up a shipping interest to compete with our shipping, and it is proposed to give a subsidy to the American ship interests to compete with the English shipping. This is to be some race, with the peoples' money being given away to pay the expenses of the big shipowners in America and England. Where does the taxpayer come in? Well, he is catching what "Paddy" gave the drum.

They say we are not able to pay our soldiers a bonus. England is paying her soldier boys a bonus, and we are giving her the money to pay it with. How can any just man favor that? It is said that giving this money to England will cause her to like us. Why do we want her to only like us a few billion dollars' worth? Why not give it all to her, and then maybe she would love us. The idea is absurd.

Is it true that England does not like us and we must give her this money to get her to like us? Is it true she likes us but will hate us if we do not give her a few billions of the people's money? These propositions are too absurd for any purpose.

It has even been suggested that it would hurt this country for all this money to be paid back in a short time. I admit the big bankers do not want it paid back now. They can manipulate money for their selfish purposes best when there is little money other than that which they control. These foreign debts are the biggest debts ever owed by any debtor since the beginning of time, and it is an outrage for them to be manipulated solely as pleaseth the international bankers and other multimillionaires.

How long will the people do the paying and the big financial crooks of the Nation do the manipulating? These big rich are not giving away any of their money, either interest or principal. In fact, they loaned money to England, and she owes it yet. When Uncle Sam's debt is donated in part, then England can pay the big rich promptly in full, interest and principal. Everyone who thinks knows why Wall Street would be glad for all these debts to be canceled. If every Congress gives away as much as this Congress is trying to give away, in 10 years our national wealth will be gone, our people will be paupers, and will be the most abject slaves the sun ever shone on.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am most heartily in favor of the settlement made with Great Britain. It gives the United States a real security, payable with interest at definite times which will pay $4,600,000,000 of our debt. This is much better than the vague notes held by us now. The settlement will have world-wide influence. It will tend to stabilize British finance, which is not oversecure when we consider how much Great Britain owes; that she is paying current expenses out of principal by excessive death duties; that she depends on foreign trade; that her markets have been reduced so that over a million of her people are without employment and receiving employment doles; and that she must maintain an army and navy to meet European and eastern crises. This settlement is an example to other nations which makes possible and probable some settlement with them.

These advantages have been so powerfully brought before the House that they effectually dispose of the objection that the United States was to receive bonds bearing as much interest as those which she had issued; that she is now to receive 4½ per cent for the last four years, 3 per cent for 10 years hereafter, and 3½ per cent for the next 52 years, and that these rates are less than the interest which the United States is paying, which interest is 4¼ per cent.

This statement is plausible, but it is not true. The United States is paying only 3½ per cent on tax-free bonds which are now above par in the market. The last sale was at 101.74. This interest of 3½ per cent is well above our former peace rates for Government securities, which used to be at 3 and 2 per cent before the war and will be so again. The United States is not paying 4¼ per cent interest, because that interest is subject to large surtaxes now and to the ordinary income tax after a few years, and these taxes are supposed to amount to much more than the difference between 4¼ per cent and 3½ per cent. If sales prove anything, these bonds sell at about 3 per cent less than the 3½ per cent nontaxable bonds.

It seems, therefore, that Great Britain by this settlement will pay us more interest than what the United States is paying upon its own bonds, because the United States takes back by surtaxes and taxes a large part of the amount of interest which it agrees to pay. It is perfectly plain that the statutes for the issue of like bonds by foreign governments can only refer to tax-free bonds.

The first act authorizing bonds for the war and to extend credit to foreign governments was passed April 24, 1917, and authorized five billions of bonds at not over 3½ per cent, payable in gold and exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation except estate or inheritance taxes imposed by authority of the United States or its possessions or by any State or local taxing authority, but without the circulation privilege.

By the second section of this act the United States could buy at par from foreign governments engaged in war with our enemies, their obligations bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as ours, and providing that if any of our bonds issued for such purchase shall thereafter be converted to a higher rate of interest, then the foreign bonds shall be converted in like manner into obligations bearing the same rate of interest as our bonds. Section 5 provides that if before the war is over we issue bonds at a higher rate, these bonds may be so converted. The essential parts of the act are as follows:

The bonds herein authorized shall be in such form and subject to such terms and conditions of issue, conversion, redemption, maturities, payment, and rate and time of payment of interest, not exceeding 3½ per cent per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The principal and interest thereof shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value and shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation, except estate or inheritance taxes, imposed by authority of the United States or its possessions or by any State or local taxing authority, but such bonds shall not bear the circulation privilege.

The bonds herein authorized shall first be offered at not less than par as a popular loan, under such regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to participate therein, and any portion of the bonds so offered and not subscribed for may be otherwise disposed of at not less than par by the Secretary of the Treasury, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid on any bonds issued under authority of this act.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act; to enter into such arrangements as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for purchasing such obligations of foreign governments and for the subsequent payment thereof before maturity, but such arrangements shall provide that if any of the bonds of the United States issued and used for the purchase of such foreign obligations shall thereafter be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent per annum under the provisions of section 5 of this act, then and in that event the obligations of such foreign governments held by the United States shall be by such foreign governments converted in like manner and extent into obligations bearing the same rate of interest as the bonds of the United States issued under the provisions of section 5 of this act. For the purposes of this section there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the authority granted by this section to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds from foreign governments, as aforesaid, shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized to receive on or before maturity payment for any obligations of such foreign governments purchased on behalf of the United States, and to sell at not less than the purchase price any of such obligations and to apply the proceeds thereof, and any payments made by foreign governments on account of their said obligations, to the redemption or purchase at not more than par and accrued interest of any bonds of the United States issued under authority of this act; and if such bonds are not available for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem or purchase any other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States which may at such time be subject to call or which may be purchased at not more than par and accrued interest. * * *

SEC. 5. That any series of bonds issued under authority of sections 1 and 4 of this act may, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be convertible into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than the rate at which the same were issued if any subsequent series of bonds shall be issued at a higher rate of interest before the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States.

On September 24, 1917, after two billions of bonds had been issued, we authorized seven and one-half billion more at not over 4 per cent, and, after provision for certificates of loan, section 7 provided that all such bonds and the certificates should be exempt from United States, State, or local taxation, "except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals," and so forth, with a proviso that $5,000 owned by any person should be tax free.

It is perfectly plain that we could not exchange this form of bonds for British bonds bearing the same condition and which would therefore be subject to British surtaxes and excess-profits taxes.

On October 3, 1917, the first war revenue act was passed, with a graduated income tax, surtaxes, and excess-profits taxes.

On April 4, 1918, the third Liberty loan was passed, authorizing twelve billions of new bonds at not over 4½ per cent, without privilege of conversion, and issues of bonds payable in foreign money were authorized.

July 9, 1918, the fourth Liberty bond act was passed, changing twelve billions to twenty billions, and providing that bonds payable in foreign money, while beneficially owned by a nonresident alien not engaged in business in the United States, should be wholly exempt from United States or local taxation.

On September 24, 1918, certain changes were made in the amount of exempt holdings of bonds.

February 24, 1919, a new revenue act was passed. By section 211 the surtaxes were very largely increased. By section 221 all income of a nonresident alien individual received from the United States was subject to 8 per cent, and by section 400 nonresidents paid estate or inheritance taxes. The conversion privilege hampered the United States in issuing new bonds and we had to resort to short-term notes.

The Victory Liberty loan act was passed March 3, 1919, for 7,000,000,000 of notes, at 4¾ per cent, which might be wholly or partially exempt from taxation at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and section 4 amended the previous act so as to provide that all United States indebtedness while beneficially owned by a nonresident alien should be wholly exempt from taxation.

This review of the statutes has been tedious, but it has not been useless if it bring out the curious muddle introduced by the system of taxing our own securities under which British or German or French capital may now buy United States 4¼ per cent bonds and hold them absolutely free of tax, while an American capitalist can not afford to own them because he might have to pay back to the Government two-thirds of the income received by way of surtaxes. Meanwhile we are paying to our own people less than 3½ per cent, tax free, if the prices in the market tell anything.

This settlement is on fair, sensible, old-fashioned terms. The bonds that we receive will be tax free and the United States will do well if it make new issues of tax-free bonds at not over 3 or 3½ per cent per annum, and reestablish its credit and business on the old-fashioned basis which can be thoroughly understood, and which imposes no penalty upon rich men for putting their capital into business at low rates of interest.

It is absolutely necessary that we should be able to fund our debt at low interest, and capital can not afford to own our securities so long as they are subject to taxes and surtaxes in the hands of men of wealth.

This settlement is a great step forward.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of Americanism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I desire to print a speech which I made in the city of Baltimore on February 4, 1923, as follows:

THE NEW AMERICANISM—AND THE OLD.

What is Americanism? Does the new Americanism differ from that taught by the founders of the Republic? Do the security leagues, defense societies, and other self-appointed guardians of our institutions hold to the principles of Jefferson and Lincoln, or are they seeking to train America in a new departure? The pronouncements of these organizations upon the subject are not to be accepted as final, for they are merely representatives of classes and groups and are in no sense qualified to voice the patriotism and wisdom of the whole people.

To understand America we must know not merely the history of our country but of the world's civilization. We must consider not merely political systems but the development of economic principles. We must understand something of world conditions of the time when our Nation came into being.

AMERICA, THE FIRST GREAT EXPERIMENT IN DEMOCRACY.

America was the first of the great republics. Here was made the original great experiment in democracy, in the ability of all of the people of a nation to govern themselves. The principle that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed was here for the first time applied on an important scale. That principle as enunciated in the preamble to the Declaration of Independence was untried. It was launched upon a world in which civil government shaded from rule by a small and privileged class down to sheer autocracy. The doctrines of the preamble were heard in the Old World as the ravings of wild radicals. The beneficiaries of the old system, riding at ease upon the shoulders of the masses, viewed the principles of Jefferson as impossible, almost insane. These principles came into a world of baron and serf, of privilege smug and assured, a world which could not believe it possible that men are created equal.

World conditions have changed since '76. America's example has not been wholly in vain. The spirit of democracy has pervaded all the peoples. None now accept despotism without protest. Empires have crumbled, thrones have tottered, princes and lords have hurried into the dust. There is a danger that we will conceive of Americanism as having been born in a time such as we now have. With such a conception it is impossible to understand our institutions.

There are two schools of political thought in every land. On the one side are the antidemocrats, those who hold that men have no natural right to order their own lives and that the wealthy, the cultured, and those of birth are best qualified to rule and hence should hold the political power. A tenet of the faith of these is that property and property rights are sacrosanct as the instrumentality through which their positions of influence may be assured. On the other hand are the humanitarians, those who value men per capita, those who feel that the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is equally the natural and moral right of all men whether great or small. These hold that God never made any man wise enough or good enough to be the ruler of another man.

We are prone to think that the people of the Colonies were united in their aspirations. To the contrary, the principles which inspired the Revolutionaries were grossly offensive to an important faction. The rich, the powerful, the officials, and many of the educated had Old World ties of both interest and ideals. They wanted to hold to the old systems. They wanted no independence which meant more than the mere transfer of the seat of government to our own shores. It was in the main the great masses who believed in democracy and who were willing to die if need be for a new order. This division of sentiment weakened our efforts and made success infinitely more difficult.

TORIES DISPUTED WITH REVOLUTIONARIES FOR POLITICAL POWER.

From the parts of the Colonies not occupied by British troops the Tories withdrew to the West Indies, to Canada, and to Europe. Some of them never came back, but after independence was gained many returned and resumed their property and by degrees their dominating status. Resuming their former wealth, they soon asserted themselves in resuming their former influence. It was only a few years after the Revolution before those who had been Tories during the war disputed for political power with the Revolutionaries who had fought the war.

The Revolution was fought under the Articles of Confederation. For the purpose of forming a permanent pact between the Colonies, a Constitutional Convention was assembled in 1787. It is a startling fact that in the convention held so soon after the treaty of peace was signed there was no representative of the masses—no member of the mechanic or small-farmer class. It was a "property-owners' convention," composed almost wholly of land speculators, large planters, owners of public securities, and of professional men. Small wonder, then, that the convention concerned itself chiefly with protecting business and property rights. It eventually found it necessary to resort to the revolutionary method of submitting the Constitution for ratification in a manner violative of the plain provisions of the Articles of Confederation.

In answer to the criticism of the democratic elements that the Constitution had omitted all reference to the English Bill of Rights, the reactionaries argued that express mention of the rights was unnecessary, as they were the implied prerogative of every citizen and existed independently of the Constitution. The liberals were not content with this and insisted that the Bill of Rights should be included within the letter of the law. The Constitution would never have been ratified by the required number of States except for the promise made by its supporters that the Bill of Rights should be incorporated by amendments, a promise which was subsequently violated by the rejection of all but 10 of the proposed amendments.

THE SOURCE OF AMERICANISM.

Thus we find that the greatest political issue of post-revolutionary days concerned the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. I believe that there can be no doubt, if in that time either Washington, Jefferson, Madison, or Samuel Adams had been asked to define "Americanism," he would have pointed to the preamble to the declaration and to the amendments. Either would have said that the chief function of the Constitution was to safeguard the principles enunciated in these documents and as machinery for the defense of those principles.

But we need not look merely to statesmen for a definition of the old Americanism. To Jefferson, it was his great mission to defend the principles of civil liberty as found in the preamble and the amendments and to extend their operation. He, with others of his school, were the organized fighting forces of early democracy. They thwarted Hamilton's purpose to clothe the Executive with panoply befitting a monarchy. They opposed the Federalist program in every detail. They struck down the alien and sedition acts of 1798. Their principles were approved in popular elections by overwhelming majorities, so that for a continuous 25 years of the formative period of the Republic that liberal group remained in power.

By the support which the people gave to that group approval was given to its interpretation of the purposes of the Revolution. The people approved the position of Jefferson and his associates that true Americanism was embodied in the preamble and the amendments. Therefore, to learn of the old Americanism we have but to study these documents.

The corner stone of American foreign policy from the close of the Revolution was isolation. Nowhere is that policy more clearly expressed than in Washington's Farewell Address, the gist of which is in these words:

"The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations; to have with them as little political connection as possible.

"Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns."

In discussing the subject, Jefferson said:

"I am for free commerce with all nations and political connections with none."

This policy was adhered to by every statesman in power during the period; it also found expression in the Monroe doctrine and later in Jackson's state papers and in the eloquent speeches of Clay. It may be confidently said that to definitely separate ourselves from the political intrigues of the Old World was practically the sole foreign policy of the earlier statesmen.

Be it also remembered that our isolation from Old World concerns was never geographical nor commercial but was always purely political. With Great Britain in Canada and in the West Indies, with Spain in Florida and Mexico, and with France in Louisiana, we were geographically surrounded. On the other hand, the need for commercial intercourse with foreign nations was always pressing and the desire to foster commerce never lacking. Those who now argue that because of the development of rapid transit and overseas communication we should abandon our old policy of isolation do not understand the reasons back of that policy, for our geographical contact with Old World nations was infinitely closer than steamships and telegraphs can produce.

AMERICAN FUNDAMENTALS.

Let us see, then, what are American fundamentals: Equality, liberty, and self-government, found in the preamble; the right of habeas corpus, as protected by section 9 of Article I; and freedom of speech, religion, and assemblage; prohibition against searches and seizures; due process of law, trial by jury, and other civil rights as secured by the amendments. It is to be noted that these principles relate chiefly to the enjoyment of civil and religious liberty, and, as an incident thereto, to the protection of private property. Without regard for these fundamental principles our Nation may be rich and powerful, but it can not be said to represent the ideals for which the Revolutionaries shed their blood. Without these fundamentals the Nation may possibly be perpetuated, but with the surrender of any one of them or its perversion from its true and original meaning the soul of the old Americanism will have departed.

All governments respond to the collective will of the Nation. Whether it be the Emperor of Japan or the President of the United States, Lenin in Moscow or Bonar Law in Downing Street, all rulers are at last the puppets of public opinion. Only we must not forget that public opinion is not always majority opinion; usually it is the opinion merely of those who count, of the coterie or group, large or small, who surround the seat of power. In the case of the United States there is a ruling class none the less than characterize an autocracy. Only with us the dominant elements are forced to take the trouble to mold a public opinion to support their measures. It thus becomes more expensive and troublesome to rule in a republic, for public support is essential and always must the rulers have the cooperation of the picked and leading spirits of the communities.

Again it must be borne in mind that governments usually take the form and adhere to the policies consistent with the ideals of their peoples and which further their material interest. In other words, they are dominated by public opinion as I have defined it. And when the ideals and interests of a people change, a tendency toward change in government and principles is inevitable.

Americans of Revolutionary days were a rural people, scattered upon the border of a wide continent. They or their fathers had come to these shores to escape oppression. Their chief desire was to be let alone and to have an opportunity to work out their own salvation. They feared Europe and Old World intrigues. They did not expect fostering and did not feel a need for protection except as against the painted savages. To a people of this social and economic habit, and holding to these ideals of liberty, the old Americanism was admirably adapted.

THE FORMATIVE PERIOD.

The seventy years following the Revolution were a formative period. The population multiplied, the frontier expanded deep into the continent, roads were built, national borders were established, and our civic institutions developed by experience. There were social and economic changes, but they were not fundamental, so that our people remained about the same with much the same opinions and interests.

Following the Civil War, industrialism had its rise. With a large and increasing population, there was a growing demand for goods and manufactured articles. A tariff wall was erected upon our boundaries, and American industrialists and financiers found a market upon whatever terms they chose to ask. Then followed a tremendous growth in industry and in industrial populations, drawn from our own farms and augmented by an ever-increasing stream of immigrants. Great changes were worked within two or three decades. We became less and less an agricultural people and more and more devoted to industrialism. Great fortunes arose out of the operations of Civil War contractors, railroad promoters, manufacturers, and financiers.

GOVERNMENT BY BIG BUSINESS.

In the early nineties a change began to come over the spirit of the American dream. Production in our factories had mounted until in many lines it began to exceed the home demand. Manufacturers who had had no competition except the competition from abroad, from which they were protected by tariffs, began to find themselves in competition with each other for an American market not large enough to satisfy them all. Tariff walls no longer sufficed to keep mills going. Competition at home became increasingly acute with a resulting shrinkage in prices and loss in profits. There was resulting industrial depression which affected both commerce and finance and even reacted disastrously upon the farmers. Out of the welter came monopolization, the organization of trusts and combines, the real excuse and purpose of which was to prevent ruinous competition among American industrialists.

But the structure of industrialism had been erected. It was not possible to abandon the system. Trustification at best was merely a palliative. It related merely to the home situation. As it proceeded until practically all lines of industrial production found protection against each other and ways of perpetuating by monopoly their profits from home business, more and more was felt the need for foreign markets. The era of railroad building had ended. Practically all of the Nation's mineral wealth had been collected into a few hands. Development at home was so far advanced that capitalists and financiers found themselves under the same pressure as captains of industry. More and more their eyes turned to foreign fields for investment and exploitation.

OUR FIRST ADVENTURE IN IMPERIALISM.

The control of Government by big business and big finance culminated in the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897. That administration and all those which have followed have responded to the changed American outlook. Possibly the first straw which indicated the veering of the American breeze was the program for naval increase promoted by Secretary Whitney. At any rate, the change was well under way by '98. By that time we had marked for our own the West Indies, Central and South America, and a share of the rapidly dissolving Chinese Empire. Cuba gave the first opportunity, and "Cuba libre" was the hypocritical slogan by which the masses were rallied to our first great adventure in imperialism. It was not by mere chance that Dewey's squadron was in oriental waters, ready to swoop on the Philippines, an admirable base for our operations in the Orient.

We swallowed Porto Rico at a gulp, but our professions concerning Cuba forced us to almost Old World diplomatic delicacy in assuming a protectorate. What the Cuban protectorate means is aptly illustrated by the presence of an American major general in Habana at this time and the dictation to which he has required the Cuban Government to submit. The house of Morgan is now advertising $50,000,000 of Cuban bonds for sale at ninety-nine odd. Our Government forced Cuba to issue these bonds. Morgan paid 96 for them and so cleans up a million and a half on the deal and who knows what else in commissions—the new Americanism!

DOLLAR DIPLOMACY AND THE RAVISHMENT OF COLOMBIA.

The Philippines secured, came Hay with his "dollar diplomacy," and an American regiment marched to Peking by way of showing the world that we had entered the great game. Came later from year to year the strengthening of our hold on sundry South American countries, our ravishment of Colombia for Panama, the Sandwich Islands incident, and our adventures in Nicaragua, Haiti, and Santo Domingo. We have also twice invaded Mexico.

The incidents and activities to which I have referred are not to be taken separately. They are parts of a whole, and bespeak a definite national policy. They are merely the tangible, visible evidences of the change. Those who rule America, those who mold its public opinion and dominate its ideals, have deliberately decided upon a new national course. They have need for foreign markets and for foreign fields for investment and exploitation. They have definitely decided that we shall go into competition with Great Britain, Germany, France, and Japan in the world-wide business of exploitation in which they are engaged.

Greatest profits are realized when goods are sold or money loaned to weak and undeveloped peoples. Competition is troublesome, therefore zones and spheres are selected and competitors excluded from them. The fundamental rule of the great game is that other nations are not to be allowed to compete on equal terms, and that the choicest bits are to be reserved for the overlording power. Other nations of the world know this, and our rulers know it no less well. Other powers practice it for the advantage of their nationals, and our rulers are resolved also to practice it for their own benefit.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE NEW AMERICANISM.

We have definitely entered into competition with the great exploiting nations in the business in which they are engaged. To successfully compete we must qualify and perfect ourselves, we must place ourselves in as good situation as our competitors, we must shape our political, social, and economic lives for the competition. We must make of ourselves a competitor as perfect as those whom we oppose. This is the philosophy of the new Americanism.

Competition is a matter of strength, of cheap production, readily available resources, facility and safety in distribution, domestic tranquillity and order, strength to collect debts, and to prevent encroachment upon our chosen fields of trade. These are the outlines of the new Americanism.

"DOWN WITH FREE SPEECH AND FREE ASSEMBLAGE."

To insure domestic tranquillity there must be no political agitation. "Demagogues and socialists" must be muzzled; hence down with free speech and free assemblage. Witness the Sterling sedition bill passed by the recent Senate and the sedition bill fathered by Attorney General Palmer and favorably reported by the House Judiciary Committee in the form of the more oppressive Graham bill. Only by an eyelash were these measures prevented from becoming law. Witness the sedition statutes of New York, California, Michigan, and other States. Witness 60 men yet in Federal prisons, most of them merely for membership in an organization said to be opposed to the recent war. Witness Daugherty at Chicago enjoining railroad strikers from speech and assemblage.

Domestic tranquillity also requires a docile population trained in obedience. Conscription is very useful to this end. The unformed boys are taken from their homes and placed in the ranks under hard-handed drillmasters. Here everything depends upon rank; the conscripts are trained to respect their betters and those in authority.

The impassable gulf which separates them from officer class accustoms them to social and economic barriers. If they have ideas of equality and democracy, here they are strangled. If they have initiative, it is quelled. If they are ambitious, they are subdued. If they are resentful, they are crushed. Out they go upon discharge, molded into orderly, quiet, resigned, unresentful, and unimaginative uniformity. Surely no agitator can find material in them.

Peace at home requires the means to enforce peace. There must be no possibility that the situation will ever get out of hand. Police, and again police; and since conscripted soldiers are the cheapest police, then soldier conscripts for policemen. And with police, espionage—a land filled with spies. Witness Daugherty, who has literally spent millions on his espionage system during the past 12 months. And with spying, passports made difficult to obtain, and the registration of aliens only, since the time is not yet ripe to register citizens.

DOWN WITH LABOR UNIONS; UP WITH THE "OPEN SHOP."

Cheap production requires cheap, docile, and steady labor. Organization encourages laborers to be more independent and assertive. They produce an objectionable class consciousness. Then down with labor unions and up with a nation-wide conspiracy for the "open shop," the great "American plan," even if it requires provoked strikes to destroy the unions. Witness the strikes in the textile, coal mining, steel, and railroad industries.

But strikes tend to increase production costs, so that strikes must be outlawed both in public opinion and the courts. Witness the nation-wide propaganda and misrepresentation of excesses of strikers. Witness the Kansas industrial court. Witness an orgy of antistrike legislation in the States. Witness again Daugherty's Chicago injunction, with the President of the United States demanding of Congress that strikes should be prohibited by law.

Cheap production is insured by cheap and docile labor. Ignorant and untrained immigrants are quite desirable. Therefore open up the gates. But stay, a strange ferment is working in the downtrodden European masses. They are holding to new heresies of equality and justice. Let us, then, be very careful that in admitting aliens we accept none who think. Muscle is what we want, not brains. If there were only some way to insure that the alien laborer would remain docile and cheap all would be well, but let us not ignore the urge which may come in his strange new surroundings for more than he should have. A cunningly devised immigration law which will comb out the "brother to the ox" from the "dangerous agitator" would be admirable. But to make sure we must postpone the protection of citizenship so as to hold a threat of deportation over the immigrant and thus prevent labor strikes.

TRADITIONAL POLICY OF ISOLATION ABANDONED.

A policy of foreign isolation is inconsistent with the strength in diplomacy required for competition in playing the great game. Farewell, then, to the teachings of the fathers; farewell to American non-intervention. How can there be isolation from Europe and Asia and yet meddling all the while with every South American concern?

The present administration has been frank in its five-power pact. We have solemnly bound ourselves not to have a larger Navy than any other power in the world. What a concession! For 300 years naval supremacy has been the corner stone of British policy. An island homeland, dependent upon ships for food for her people and with possessions in all the seven seas, the empire would crumble if an enemy should wrest control of the seas from Great Britain for 60 days. We have been generous. Her chiefest world competitor, self-supporting at home, we condescend to agree that we will not aspire to domination of the seas.

The four-power treaty is a still more frank admission that we are engaged in the same business as Great Britain, France, and Japan. We entered into partnership with them, each virtually agreeing to defend the other in its possessions in the Orient and not to poach on the other's preserves. It assures us peace for 10 years, and perhaps assures us war shortly after its period has expired.

Only by sheer good luck did we escape binding ourselves by the treaty of Versailles to defend the newly carved and fanciful boundaries of Europe. Nevertheless we have our observer at Lausanne. Were there anything to gain, the word might yet be given that we should help or hinder—as our business interests might appear—France in the Ruhr, or battle for British oil promoters at Baku or Mosul. The nations of the world must be made to know that America has arrived and will be a factor in all divisions of spoil in the future.

MILITARISM AND NAVALISM.

Of course, there must be great armies and navies, for war is a necessary incident to the great game. The possibility of war must always be in the background, for intimidation is the chiefest factor in preventing competition. There is always probability of war over division of spoil, and when the world has all been staked off, war is necessary in order to remove the landmarks.

A proposal to submit the decision for war or peace to the people is ridiculous—it is almost treason. What do the people know of the springs which move rulers? What would be the use of being strong on land and sea if we must submit whether we will use the strength to town meetings and country hustings, where not one in ten can hope to derive any benefit from a war?

No; it is hard for democracies to wage successful war. A strong centralized government is needed, a corps of trusty councilors with authority to decide in secret and to launch, without warning, armies and navies upon an adversary. National policies must be kept secret from competitors. The people even must not dream of the war they are being driven toward. The adversary must have no time to prepare for the onslaught. It is hard for democracies to wage war. Therefore minimize Congress and make it servile; this will make for a strongly centralized government; "stand by the President; he knows—let him decide."

And in this connection conscription again is of great value. It insures plenty of "cannon fodder" and makes unnecessary any appeal to the people to support the war. Without conscription wars must be popular, time and trouble must be taken to inculcate faith in the righteousness of the cause. With conscription all this is unnecessary. It is no matter that the masses who are expected to do the fighting are opposed to the war. Their opinions are not considered.

My friends, I wonder if yet you have not said the word "Prussianism." That is what we are driving for. That is the ideal of the dominant group; that is the new Americanism.

We who hold to the old Americanism found in the preamble and the 10 amendments have reason to fear for the future of our country. We may well realize that there can be no abiding democracy among a people separated into social classes and economic groups, in which all the advantage, all the hope, and all the opportunity rests with the few, and all the labor and all the burdens are imposed upon the many. We may well oppose the tendency toward the aggregation of the wealth of the Nation into a few hands, the monopolization of our natural resources, and the usurpation by the few of the opportunities which naturally belong to all. A Nation may be a powerful imperialism, but it can not be truly great, it can not be a truly democratic nation if, typical of its life, is the gilt and splendor of Fifth Avenue and the squalor and hunger of the slums.

The real patriots—those who love the soul of America and wish to hold it true to its high mission as the exemplar of liberty and justice to all the world—must bind themselves to the task to see that those who do the hard and useful work may still aspire, and that the door of hope and opportunity shall be open to those who may come after them. We must fight for our country. We must fight for its institutions. We must fight to keep it what the founders designed—a home for men who are free, a land of hope and opportunity. We must hold onto the old Americanism of justice, liberty, and equality. We must fight for the old Americanism.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the radio message sent out by the Department of Labor in connection with the school system of West Virginia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that very lengthy?

Mr. ECHOLS. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks, I wish to explain that my delay in doing so has been due to my desire to make some investigation of the activities of one Crane Gartz, mentioned in an interview recently published in the Washington Times. According to the interview, Mr. Gartz is to go into West Virginia at the head of some sort of investigating committee. I shall refer to him later on. At this point I want to have printed in the RECORD some extracts from the radio message recently sent out by the Department of Labor relating to certain conditions alleged to prevail in West Virginia. They are as follows:

1. One of the first necessities for children's health in wintertime is coal. It is almost as necessary as milk.

2. Schools in camps are often of the rural type—one room, one teacher—offering only five or six elementary grades. The terms are short, the schools are poorly equipped, and the teachers are untrained. In the West Virginia camps which the children's bureau studied many of the teachers had had no education beyond the eighth grade, and two-thirds of their pupils were failing to make normal progress for their ages.

3. In order that American children may live in warm houses, is it necessary for several thousand of them to engage in the mining industry? Is it necessary that the miners' children, even if they do not go to work, should have a seriously restricted education?

These statements are made by a Government agency. They are not in general true, and, therefore, are defamatory of the State's good name. It is wonderful what the demagogue can do with his weird imagination and half truths. What are the facts as to West Virginia? We are now spending in road improvement $50,000,000 covered by State bonds, paying the Virginia debt of $13,000,000, and building a capitol which will cost $6,000,000 to $8,000,000. Despite these extraordinary tax burdens, 52 per cent of the total expenditures of public money in the State is being used in educational work; 75 per cent of that amount is expended in what might be properly termed the rural sections of the State.

McDowell County, the greatest coal-producing county in the State, ranks third in educational advancement. It has 25 high schools. It pays among the highest salaries paid teachers in the State. The length of the term of school is nine months. Outside "uplifters" and other "Meddlesome Matties" have not seriously interfered with the development and school progress in McDowell County. In Fayette, the third largest coal-producing county in the State, the salaries of teachers in the coal districts of the county, in the elementary grades, range generally from $150 to $200 per month, and in the high schools from $208.33 to $300 per month. These are higher salaries than are paid the teachers right here in the city of Washington for performing the same grade of work. Fayette County was at one time seriously afflicted with the "reformers," but in recent years she has been getting rid of them. These are typical coal counties.

The per capita cost in the State based on enrollment is $45.10. The minimum school term is seven and one-half months for the present year, and next year it will be eight months. Hundreds of the teachers in the coal fields are graduates of the State normal schools, of which there are six, and the primary purpose of these schools is to train teachers. The law so requires. The students at these schools come from the coal fields in as great numbers or perhaps greater than anywhere else in the State, and they go back there after graduation to teach. Two of the normal schools are located in great coal-producing counties and rank high as educational institutions. How many States in the Union spend more than half the total annual expenditures in educational work?

The coal-producing sections are rapidly surpassing the other rural sections of the State in offering educational opportunities. It is true that the miner is often of a migratory nature, and thousands of illiterates come into the State, work for a while, maybe a year or two, and drift elsewhere. It is also true that the teacher in the coal fields has rather serious competition with the socialist reformer; while the teacher is trying to develop the boy into a substantial, educated American citizen the socialist reformer is trying to make of him a flaming anarchist who would resist all law enforcement and orderly procedure.

West Virginia will welcome practical suggestions from practical people with honest intentions, but we are growing tired of the Stephen S. Wises, the John D. Ryans, the guardians from the other end of the Capitol, and the "uplifters" from up the Avenue—self-constituted keepers of the public conscience—appointing themselves committees and investigators, coming into West Virginia, staying a few hours, obtaining no general truth, and then publishing broadcast to the country slanderous statements. They condemn the whole State because everything is not just what they think it ought to be.

The law prohibiting the working of children in the mines is generally well observed. There are, no doubt, isolated cases of its infraction. The State is rapidly bringing right to the door of the children in the coal fields an opportunity to educate themselves.

The radio message says, "One of the first necessities for children's health in wintertime is coal." Here is wisdom; here is a discovery—a child's health depends upon coal. This knowledge must not be kept from the world a minute. Send it by mail? No, indeed. Broadcast it by telephone or telegraph? Not on your life. We will flash it right into the homes by radio. The poor mothers will not have coal, but they will have radio receivers by the thousands.

All the Wises, the Ryans, the self-appointed investigators and "uplifters," and the ten thousand additional demagogues who have prated about "social justice" and the evils in the mining sections of the country never had a job for a workingman; they never found a job for a workingman; they never paid a day's wages to a workingman, or built a mile of railroad to haul coal or other commodities, or manufactured a foot of lumber with which to build a home, created an industry, or made a practical suggestion of any kind to correct the evils about which they complain. Their chief business is to make socialists, anarchists, more political demagogues, and fill the jails and penitentiaries of the country with the dupes to whose credulity they appeal and upon whose hard-earned money they often subsist. Untold tons of coal have remained in the West Virginia hills for thousands of years, and they never furnished the brains, the energy, or the money with which to remove a ton of it; and it would remain there for untold centuries yet to come if the world depended upon them to remove it. The children of the country, in whose welfare they pretend to be interested, would go without homes and freeze a thousand times if they waited for actual help from them. They would Russianize the world in a decade if their advice were followed. The greatest thing they possess is irresponsibility. If windmills would produce coal and create industry, they could successfully operate; but since it requires intelligence, energy, and means, the production of coal and the creation of industry are not in their line.

They go into the West Virginia coal fields with their carrion proboscides, and carrion they must find, or else their missions would be failures. Finding the carcass of an ant one-fourth of an inch in length and weighing one forty-eighth of an ounce, they magnify it a few million times, return, and herald the news of their find to the rest of the buzzard flock from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Their baseless reports and irresponsible statements create wrong impressions in the minds of good people and distrust in the minds of the credulous and encourage violence and crime.

If these "reformers" had gone into West Virginia for the purpose of finding facts, they could have found the best equipped coal mines, the most sanitary conditions surrounding coal mines in mountainous regions, and the purest drinking water in the world, the highest paid wages to miners considering the labor required to mine the coal anywhere to be found, and more days' work per year than anywhere in the United States. They could have found all that, and they could have found that these conditions prevail in ten mining towns where what they report prevails in one. They could have found also a contented, happy people in those sections where outside demagogic influences have not interfered.

We do not object to Rabbi Wise and Father Ryan because of their religious affiliations. We object to them because their impractical preachments do infinitely more harm than they do good. Their use of figments of truth creates an atmosphere of poison and hate which has frequently resulted in the death of innocent people. Press reports in the last few days state that Rabbi Wise denies the authenticity of the Ten Commandments. Father Ryan has been discredited by some of the great leaders of his own church.

These bigots go so far as to even defy the courts, as shown by an interview recently appearing in the Washington Times. In that interview one Crane Gartz is quoted as saying in reference to a court order entered by the judge of the Circuit Court of Logan County, W. Va.:

> This injunction is null and void if it is made to apply to us, who are attempting only to exercise our constitutional rights, and we shall ignore it.

Gartz; a name not yet quite Americanized. Why not Fritz or Trotz(ky)? The interview also shows Gartz is from Chicago and California. Being from Chicago he is probably a friend of Big Bill Haywood, convicted of conspiracy against the Government, a fugitive from justice now "serving time" in Russia; and being from California he is probably a friend of the McNamara brothers who served a term in the penitentiary for bombing the Los Angeles Times Building and killing more than a score of innocent men, women, and children.

It is further stated that "with young Gartz will be public officials, ministers, and attorneys." No mission into West Virginia headed by a man like Gartz would be complete without "public officials and ministers," who will probably need the "attorneys." Why the "officials"? Who are they, and whom do they represent? What authority will they have in West Virginia? Why the "ministers" but to give a semblance of respectability to a disreputable gang?

Let the country take notice that West Virginia, defamed and maligned, is to again be afflicted with outside, self-appointed, front-page notoriety seekers coming into the State admittedly with the intention of violating an order of the judge of a circuit court of that State, duly elected by the people of his circuit, which, by the way, is composed of three counties, two of which are farming and not coal-producing counties.

Who are Gartz and his official, ministerial, and legal mob-inciting accomplices that they are above the law of the State? Gartz says: "This injunction is null and void, * * * and we shall ignore it." Who believes that this uninvited bunch of conspirators are going into West Virginia for the purpose of helping conditions in that State? They have no such purpose in mind. After their visit, in which they will accomplish nothing for good, they will broadcast a statement to the country to gain notoriety and to spread their insidious propaganda.

Gartz in 1921 was an assistant organizer of the amnesty committee of the American Civil Liberties Union and served as a picket at the White House in Washington. He has been a frequent consultant with Eugene V. Debs, who served a term in the penitentiary for violating the laws of the land. He has been keeping in close touch with one Roger M. Baldwin, president of the American Civil Liberties Union, and who also served a year in the Essex County jail for violating the draft law. He has been in the western Pennsylvania coal fields, and after his visit there he reported to an executive meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union. He is an active opponent of the California criminal syndicalist law.

This is a brief sketch of the activities of the man who is going into West Virginia as head of a committee composed of "officials, ministers, and attorneys."

I do not know whether or not the injunction order of the judge of the circuit court of Logan County is authorized by the laws of the State of West Virginia. I do not know the facts; but if it is not the law, there is a supreme court in the State of West Virginia composed of able, conscientious jurists, who will promptly correct any error made by any circuit court in the State when properly brought before them.

What would the people of New York or the people of Chicago think if a few infamous plotters down in West Virginia would constitute themselves committees and announce that they intended to go to the city of Chicago or the city of New York for the purpose of enforcing their "constitutional rights" and there violate the order of the courts of those great cities? They could find more poverty, misery, and illiteracy on the East Side of New York or the river section of Chicago than can be found in the whole of the State of West Virginia. If such committees should go into these cities with such avowed intentions as are stated by Gartz and undertake to carry them out they would sleep in the jails of those cities the first night after their arrival, and that is where they ought to sleep.

It is no defense to West Virginia to direct attention to violence, illiteracy, misery, and crime in other States. She does not depend upon such defense. She is justified, however, in calling attention to the character, capability, associates, and activities of her detractors.

The people of West Virginia entertain a very keen and deep sympathy for her people in any sufferings that might come to them. They as keenly and deeply resent any outside interferences that intensify these sufferings. The people of that State as much understand and appreciate their moral obligations and sacred responsibilities to society as do the people of any other section of the country, and they are as ready, willing, and competent to perform those obligations and carry out those responsibilities as are the people of any other section, and they are quite capable of defending the State's good name when maligned by outside political posers, religious fanatics, and social reformers.

Any State is worthy to be classed among the great States of the Union that enforces her laws, preserves order, furnishes adequate educational opportunities to her youth, builds good roads, and provides a reasonable and equitable system of taxation. These constitute the most of government. To the performance of these duties West Virginia is earnestly and successfully devoting her energy.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein certain decisions and cases with reference to the enforcement of prohibition in the various States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection

Mr. STAFFORD. How extensive are those?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Just one page.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the gentleman and I are both leaving Congress I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, under consent granted to extend my remarks, permit me to call attention to the following decisions construing and sustaining prohibition legislation, National and State:

The eighteenth amendment valid: Rhode Island v. Palmer (253 U. S. 350); Dillon v. Gloss (256 U. S. 368).

Power of Congress to define "intoxicating liquor": Rhode Island v. Palmer (253 U. S. 350); Ruppert v. Caffey (251 U. S. 264).

Chief Justice White said, in Rhode Island v. Palmer (253 U. S. 350, 391):

"* * * as the prohibition did not define the intoxicating beverages which it prohibited, in the absence of anything to the contrary it clearly, from the very fact of its adoption, cast upon Congress the duty not only of defining the prohibited beverages but also of enacting such regulations and sanctions as were essential to make them operative when defined. * * *"

State laws prohibiting liquor traffic not repealed and new prohibitory legislation authorized: U. S. v. Barto, Lanza, et al., decided Dec. 11, 1922, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op., 1922–23, No. 5, p. 169; Vigliotti v. Pennsylvania, decided April 10, 1922, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op., 1921–22, No. 13, p. 389; Ewing v. State (Ala.), 90 So. 136; Smith v. State (Ga.), 105 S. E. 364; State v. Campbell (N. C.), 110 S. E. 86; Allen v. Comm. (Va.), 105 S. E. 589; Ex Parte Volpi (Cal.), 199 Pac. 1090; State v. Moore (Idaho), filed Dec. 30, 1922 (not yet reported); Comm. v. Nickerson (Mass.), 128 N. E. 273.

Prosecution under State law not a bar to a prosecution for the same offense under the Federal law: U. S. v. Lanza, Barto, et al., decided Dec. 11, 1922, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op., 1922–23, No. 5, p. 169.

United States revenue laws revived by supplemental prohibition act as of November 23, 1921: U. S. v. Stafoff, Brooks, and Remus, decided Jan. 2, 1923, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op. 1922–23, No. 7, p. 211.

Prohibition act providing for injunction against liquor nuisances valid: Lewinsohn v. United States, C. C. A., 7th Cir., 278 Fed. 421, certiorari denied, 42 Su. Ct. 463; United States v. Reisenweber, C. C. A., 2d Cir., decided January 18, 1923. (Not yet reported.)

Shipment of beverage liquor through the United States prohibited: Grogan v. Walker, Anchor Line v. Aldridge, decided May 15, 1922, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op. 1921–22, No. 15, p. 511.

Liquor may not be withdrawn from bonded warehouses for beverage use in home: Corneli v. Moore, 257 U. S. 491.

State search and seizure laws construed: Banks v. State (Ala.), 93 So. 293, certiorari denied November 13, 1922, U. S. Su. Ct. Adv. Op. 1922–23, No. 6, p. 176; Mike Rosanski et al v. State of Ohio, decided December, 1922 (not yet reported); State v. Wasyl Chuchola (Del.), decided September 29, 1922 (not yet reported); People v. Mayen (Cal.), 205 Pac. 435; City of Sioux Falls v. Walser (S. Dak.), 187 N. W. 821; Watson v. State (Nebr.), 189 N. W. 620; State v. Shaffer (Wash.), 207 Pac. 229; State v. Kees (W. Va.), 114 S. E. 617; State v. Brown (W. Va.), 114 S. E. 372; State v. Snodgrass (W. Va.), 114 S. E. 136; People v. DeCesare (Mich.), 190 N. W. 302; People v. Case (Mich.), 190 N. W. 289; Pasch v. People (Colo.), 209 Pac. 639; Green v. State (Tex.), 241 S. W. 1014; Shaddix v. State (Tex.), 235 S. W. 602; State v. Magnano (Conn.), 117 Atl. 550; State v. Mullen (Mont.), 207 Pac. 634; Brent v. Comm. (Ky.), 240 S. W. 45; Bowling v. Comm. (Ky.), 237 S. W. 381; State v. Simmons (N. C.), 110 S. E. 591; Hughes v. State (Tenn.), 238 S. W. 588.

Conspiracy to violate national prohibition act punishable: Violette v. United States (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 278 Fed. 163, certiorari denied, 42 Su. Ct. 382; Reid et al v. United States (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 276 Fed. 253; United States v. Heitler (D. C. N. D., Ill.), 274 Fed. 401; Alderman v. United States (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 279 Fed. 259, certiorari denied, 42 Su. Ct. 586.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address which I delivered at the Economic Club in New York last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein an appeal purporting to have been made by German trade-unions to the American Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from New York know anything about the authenticity of this?

Mr. LONDON. I said "purporting to be."

Mr. SNELL. We have a lot of just such resolutions sent in to us and we do not put them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, just what is this?

Mr. LONDON. It is an appeal which is reported to have been addressed to the American Congress by representatives of German trade-unions—12,000,000 workers.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. KENDALL, for one week, on account of illness.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, for to-day, on account of illness.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, insist upon the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 33, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speakers' table the Agricultural appropriation bill, insist upon the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 33, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees:

Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. WASON, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. LEE of Georgia.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4469. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River, in the State of Alabama; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3892. An act authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10817. An act to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

H. R. 13593. An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENRY Z. OSBORNE.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme sorrow and regret that I announce to the House the death of that splendid patriotic American citizen and able Representative, Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, of the tenth California district. He passed away at his home in Los Angeles yesterday. Captain OSBORNE was the last and the only Member of the House who was a survivor of the Civil War on the Union side. There is one other Member of the House who is a survivor of the Civil War, but on the Confederate side, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Major STEDMAN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the death of our respected colleague came to us at a time when, by unanimous consent, it had been arranged to take up and consider a measure of very great importance to-day. Under any other circumstances the House, out of its regard to Captain OSBORNE, would have adjourned immediately. We who knew him, however, were convinced that if the wishes of this man, who was patriotic enough to enlist in his country's cause as a boy of 16, and who gained for himself a wonderful record of patriotic service all of his life, could have been expressed, he would have desired us to continue and complete this day's work.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, at some future time I shall ask that a day be set aside for addresses on the life, character, and public services of our late friend and colleague. Meanwhile I send to the Clerk's desk the following resolution, which I ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows.

House Resolution 518.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 10, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

970. A letter from the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional recommendations to the one submitted December 30, 1922 (H. Doc. No. 523), for a Federal building program throughout the United States, and submitting a table showing the number of leases and approximately the amount of rents paid for buildings for Federal use (H. Doc. No. 561); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

971. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $425 to pay a claim which he has adjusted, and which requires an appropriation for its payment (H. Doc. No. 562); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

972. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting summary showing status of claims for reimbursement of losses on account of war conditions of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department; to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. DEMPSEY: Committee on Rivers and Harbors. S. 3968. An act to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1569). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PARKER of New York: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 4358. An act to authorize the American Niagara Railroad Corporation to build a bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada; with amendments (Rept. No. 1572). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. S. 3412. An act for the relief of Mrs. John D. Hall; without amendment (Rept. No. 1570). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6108. A bill to permit the correction of the general account of Charles B. Strecker, former Assistant Treasurer United States; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1571). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McCORMICK: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 8291. A bill for the relief of Trygve Kristian Lode; without amendment (Rept. No. 1573). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 14266) to amend section 4 of the national defense act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 14267) to authorize the Baptist National Hospital Association (Inc.) to use and occupy certain land in the Hot Springs National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DRIVER: A bill (H. R. 14268) to authorize the county of Lee, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge over the St. Francis River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 14269) to authorize the general accounting officers of the United States to allow credit to certain disbursing officers for payments of salary made on properly certified and approved vouchers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 14270) to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HERRICK: A bill (H. R. 14271) appropriating the sum of $25,000 from the Federal Treasury, to match a like sum appropriated by any State legislature, to be used in said State for the suppression of venereal diseases; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 14272) to amend section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 14273) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H. R. 14274) to establish and promote the use of the official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein, and provide for the proper application of such standards, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438) authorizing the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to appoint a subcommittee, to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture, to investigate problems relating to reforestation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ALMON: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) providing for printing additional copies of soil survey of Lauderdale County, Ala.; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FULLER: A resolution (H. Res. 517) to pay Norman E. Ives $800 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the third and fourth sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress by detail from the Bureau of Pensions; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring an embargo being placed on coal shipped from United States to Canada; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota expressing its opposition to branch banking; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring the passage by Congress of legislation placing an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota opposing branch banking; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring the passage by Congress of legislation placing an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts favoring the passage of legislation placing an embargo on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 14275) granting a pension to Lewis Corfman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 14276) granting a pension to John W. Genung; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 14277) granting a pension to John Scott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIFFORD: A bill (H. R. 14278) granting a pension to Abbie D. Washburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 14279) providing for the examination and survey of Great Peconic Bay, at Jamesport, Long Island, N. Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 14280) granting a pension to Lydia Boyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 14281) granting a pension to Margaret Heid; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 14282) granting a pension to Eugenia Hammond; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 14283) granting a pension to Eusiby Peyton Cleaver and Rosemary Cleaver; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7247. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of members of the General Richard Montgomery Council, American Association for Recognition of the Irish Republic, demanding that England pay 4 per cent on her debt; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7248. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., New York City, favoring bill S. 4303, to amend the joint resolution extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, as amended by the resolution of May 11, 1922; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

7249. By Mr. BECK: Petition of W. A. Schreiber and others, of La Crosse County, Wis.; George F. Woerth and others, of Sauk County, Wis.; Frank P. Hemp and others, of Clark County, Wis.; Albert Degener and others, of Clark County, Wis.; J. Mittelstoedt and others, of Monroe County, Wis.; and also letter from Rev. William Parisius, of Neillsville, Wis., urging immediate passage of the joint resolution for the relief of the starving people of central Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7250. By Mr. COLE of Ohio: Petition of executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches, urging the United States to associate itself with the humanitarian commissions of the League of Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7251. Also, petition of executive council, Thirty-seventh Division Veterans' Association, requesting that there be included in the bill which has been introduced in the United States Senate providing for the erection of a monument memorial of the capture of the village of Montfaucon, suitable mention of recorded facts concerning the part played by the Thirty-seventh Division in such capture; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7252. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Knights of Pythias Relief and Employment Bureau, New York City, N. Y., favoring the establishment of a central police bureau; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7253. By Mr. MACGREGOR: Petition of Edgar Braun and other citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring legislation extending aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7254. Also, petition of members of the Political Service Club, of Erie County, urging the passage of the Townsend bill, which provides for a shorter hour for night employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

7255. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, opposing recommendation of the Public Printer in regard to annual leave granted to employees in the Government Printing Office; to the Committee on Printing.

7256. By Mr. WATSON: Petition of the Mothers' Club of North Glenside, Pa., favoring restrictive immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 10, 1923.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 5, 1923.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCormick	Ransdell
Bayard	Glass	McCumber	Reed,Pa.
Brookhart	Gooding	McKellar	Robinson
Bursum	Harreld	McKinley	Sheppard
Calder	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Cameron	Harrison	Moses	Stanfield
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Stanley
Colt	Hitchcock	New	Sterling
Couzens	Johnson	Nicholson	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Oddie	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Overman	Underwood
Dillingham	Ladd	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	La Follette	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
George	Lodge	Pomerene	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Commissioner of Patents for the calendar year 1922, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

TRANSCONTINENTAL FREIGHT BUREAU.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 194, submitted by Mr. PITTMAN and agreed to December 15, 1921, a report of the results of its investigation of the organization, management, and control of the Transcontinental Freight Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State furnishing, in response to the Senate's resolution of January 6, 1923, information concerning the passenger automobile in use by the Department of State.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1923.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to Senate amendment No. 33 to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had agreed to the further conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. WASON, Mr. BUCHANAN, and Mr. LEE of Georgia were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, late a Representative from the State of California, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 10817. An act to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States; and

H. R. 13593. An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROBINSON presented resolutions of the Farmers' National Farm Loan Association, of Fordyce, Ark., favoring the passage of the so-called Strong bill amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KEYES presented resolutions of the congregation of the South Main Street Congregational Church, of Manchester; the executive committee of the Woman's Club of Hanover, of Hanover; and the Sunday School Superintendents' Association, of Manchester, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying an amendment of the Constitution regulating child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by a general council meeting of the White Oak Point Bands of Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi, at Ball Club, Itasca County, Minn., favoring the passage of the so-called Larson bill, providing for a per capita distribution of funds in the Treasury to the credit of Chippewas for the relief of suffering and distress among said Indians, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of the Killdeer National Farm Loan Association, of Killdeer, N. Dak., protesting against the passage of the so-called Strong bill amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of the Ohio State Horticultural Society, favoring the passage of the so-called Purnell bill, for the financial assistance of agricultural experiment stations, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OWEN presented the following resolutions of the House of Representatives of Oklahoma, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, NINTH LEGISLATURE,
Oklahoma City, January 27, 1923.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR OWEN: Inclosed find copy of Engrossed House Resolution No. 16 which was passed by unanimous consent of the House of Representatives.

Very truly yours, C. J. KENDLE, Chief Clerk.

Engrossed House Resolution No. 16 memorializing Congress to give its sympathetic consideration to a basic plan for a return to world sanity through a conference of world war powers under leadership of the United States.

Whereas it is made known by the American press that conditions in continental Europe grow daily worse; that nations, great and small, are tottering, unable to pay expenses; and

Whereas suffering among the people is increasing, famine threatens here and there, unemployment is growing, and a spirit of suicidal desperation has settled down over half the world; and

Whereas if step follows step and a new world war results this conflict by comparison will bleach the red horror of the last one, sweeping us along with the rest; and

Whereas the time to avert the European crisis is before it leads to a new conflict of nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Ninth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to give its sympathetic consideration to the following basic plan for a return to world sanity:

First. That the United States must assume the leadership;
Second. That at the first possible opening President Harding should call a conference of the leading World War powers;
Third. That the program at this conference should be in two sections, economic problems and limitation of armaments;
Fourth. That instantly the conference is called to order America's spokesman should lay before the assembly some specific plan of world rehabilitation which might involve an international moratorium on war debts and an international loan to the worst stricken nations; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.
Adopted by the house of representatives this the 24th day of January, 1923.

CHAS. S. BRICE,
Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives.

Mr. OWEN presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

SENATE CHAMBER, STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
State Capitol, January 29, 1923.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I herewith inclose a copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 8, with reference to the Orient Railroad. As you know, the western part of Oklahoma is very much interested in this railroad, and we want to ask you to use your best efforts to help save it.

Yours very truly, IRA A. HILL,

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to grant aid to the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives concurring), That—
Whereas the Legislature of the State of Texas has memorialized the Congress of the United States to aid the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad; and
Whereas the said railroad traverses the western part of the State of Oklahoma; and
Whereas the abandonment and discontinuance of said railroad would work an equal hardship on the State of Oklahoma: Therefore be it
Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Ninth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That we join with the Legislature of the State of Texas in their memorial to the Congress of the United States in asking for the relief set forth in their memorial, which is as follows:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 8, by Bledsoe and Dudley.

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Texas (the House of Representatives concurring), That the following memorial and petition to the Congress of the United States and prayer for relief from pending disaster and destruction of the Orient Railroad be adopted by the Thirty-eighth Legislature of the State of Texas and presented to the Congress of the United States and to the Interstate Commerce Commission; that—
"Whereas the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad, particularly that part of it built through Texas, is built through a pioneer section of the State susceptible of great development possibilities if given transportation facilities that must come through the proper maintenance and operation of said road, which aid and assistance can only come through the united action of our Federal Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission permitting said road and the physical properties thereof to be taken over and operated under such conditions as will permit said road to continue as a factor for good in the development of that section of the State through which it has been constructed; and
"Whereas the necessity for such transportation facilities in the proper development of the pioneer section of our country has heretofore been recognized and encouraged both by Federal and State land grants; and
"Whereas said land grants can no longer be extended to any road because of the exhaustion of the public lands by such railroad grants; and
"Whereas a great injustice can be done to a patriotic citizenship by permitting the abandonment of said railroad and the discontinuance of its operation: Therefore be it
"Resolved, That the plan heretofore submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States by the Hon. Lynch Davidson, Lieutenant Governor of the State of Texas, and embodied in this resolution as follows:
"'Immunity from and relaxation of both Federal and State transportation laws are solvents to save the Orient railroad from abandonment, the scrap pile, and wreckage.
"'That purpose is to be accomplished by Federal and State legislation. An act to be enacted by the Federal Government exempting any railroad owned, or of which a substantial part is owned, by a sovereign State or by the Nation from all transportation acts and laws other than the ordinary civil laws of the State and Nation.
"'The classification of the Federal acts to provide that the title, or some substantial part of the title, of a road or roads enjoying such immunity shall be vested in a sovereign State or an agency created by a sovereign State.
"'To further provide that any debt or obligation owing to the Federal Government by any road or roads so situated, whose rehabilitation and operation has been assumed by a State, shall be subordinated to all claims and moneys expended by said State in the rehabilitation or operation of such railroad.
"'The measure to further provide that any net profits not essential to improvements, developments, and betterments shall apply 50 per cent to the payment of any sums due the State and 50 per cent to repayment of any sum advanced by the Federal Government.
"'To further provide that such immunity, in the event of sale, transfer, or lease of a road to individuals or corporations, etc., shall continue for a period of 10 or 15 years following such transfer, lease, or conveyance, provided the State shall retain its control of said road and reserve the right to direct its affairs.
"'The Federal act to require the State or States to furnish the necessary capital for rehabilitation and operation of the road to which it has taken title, and such requirements to constitute a substantial guarantee of continuity of operation of such road or roads by the State or those holding under it.
"'Repayment of all moneys due the State or Nation by a railroad under this classification shall be a condition of its relinquishment by the State.
"'The Federal act to be effective only upon the enactment of corresponding legislation by a State or States.'
"be submitted to the Congress of the United States with the request that suitable legislation be enacted carrying said plan into effect and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States to make all suitable and necessary rules and regulations for the maintenance, operation, conduct, control, and management of said road in accordance with the terms of said plan; be it further
"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be presented to the Oklahoma Legislature now in session and to the Kansas Legislature now in session; be it further
"Resolved, That a copy of this concurrent resolution be submitted to the Congress of the United States and copies presented to the Texas and Kansas Legislatures now in session."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6954) fixing rates of postage on certain kinds of printed matter, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1128) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1194) for the relief of Northrop Banks, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1129) thereon.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (S. 4282) for the purchase of the statue "The Pilgrim Mother and Child of the Mayflower" and presentation of same to the Government of Great Britain, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3023) for the relief of Robert F. Hamilton, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1131) thereon.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4156) authorizing the accounting officers of the General Accounting Office to settle the accounts of W. H. Power, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1132) thereon.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 1076) establishing standard grades of naval stores, preventing deception in transactions in naval stores, regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and submitted a report (No. 1133) thereon.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37) proposing to create a joint commission, to be known as the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 9, 1923, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 1016. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States";

S. 1878. An act to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timberlands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value;

S. 1926. An act to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians;

S. 2023. An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes;

S. 3702. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest, in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor lands on the public domain also within such State;

S. 4169. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, Kane County, Ill., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 4260. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge over the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon;

S. 4288. An act to grant the consent of Congress for the special commission constituted by an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to construct a bridge across the Merrimack River;

S. 4341. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Oregon-Washington Bridge Co. and its successors to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or near the city of Hood River, Oreg.;

S. 4346. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Delaware State highway department to construct a bridge across the Nanticoke River;

S. 4353. An act granting the consent of Congress to the highway commissioner of the town of Elgin, Kane County, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River;

S. 4439. An act to revive and to reenact an act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta," approved October 6, 1917;

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of title to certain land within the Shasta National Forest, Calif.;

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of salaries to Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 259. Joint resolution authorizing the President to abrogate the international agreement embodied in certain Executive orders relating to the Panama Canal.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4523) to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in Riverside County, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Br. Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4524) granting an increase of pension to Henrietta Geiger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 4525) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands; for reimbursement of the counties of Grant, Luna, Hidalgo, and Santa Fe for interest paid on railroad-aid bonds; and for the payment of the principal of railroad-aid bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and to reimburse said town for interest paid on said bonds, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 14254. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT SETTLEMENT.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if I can secure a unanimous-consent agreement to-day to adjourn until 11 o'clock on next Monday morning I shall not ask that the Senate take a recess to-night. So I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Washington that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been trying practically all of the week to hold a session. We tried it again this morning; but we could not secure the attendance of Senators, as the Senate met at 11 o'clock this morning. The hearing in the committee was therefore prevented. We have several bills before us, some of them being House bills, and some Members of the Senate are anxious to be heard. One of those desiring to be heard before the committee is the Secretary of Agriculture, who has asked for a hearing.

I have already called a meeting of the Agricultural Committee for 10.30 o'clock on Monday morning next in order to hear Members of the House of Representatives on certain bills which have passed the House and are pending here. If the Senate meets at 11 o'clock, it means that committees will practically be unable to hold hearings or to dispose of any business. Senators will not attend a committee meeting for half an hour, because they know that nothing can be accomplished in that length of time.

Personally, when the Senate closes its business to-day, I do not care whether we shall then take an adjournment or a recess, but I should like to give the committees an opportunity to meet. I have this morning been told that four committees tried to secure a meeting to-day and that they all failed; that none of them was able to secure a quorum. The principal reason for that was that the Senate convened this morning at 11 o'clock, and Members knew in advance that they would simply lose the time if they should go to the committee meeting.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to say that I desire that the committees of the Senate shall meet and consider the legislation which has been referred to them by the Senate. The Committee on Commerce has been at work and has acted upon bills which have been referred to the committee. The session of Congress is nearing its close, however, and it seems to me there is very little possibility of any new business of importance which may be reported from committees, where the subject matter excites any division of opinion, being acted upon at this time. So I do not feel justified in preventing the Senate from meeting sufficiently early in the morning to act upon measures which have been reported to the Senate, in order that committees may consider matters as to which, while, of course, they are important and hearings should be held upon them, no one can hope to have action by the Senate during the present session.

Therefore, Mr. President, so far as I can, I shall insist upon the Senate meeting at 11 o'clock on Monday morning next, either following a recess or by adjournment. I submit the request for unanimous consent which I have made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the request which is now submitted by the Senator from Washington. Personally, I am not interested in the hearings which are now being held before our committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator is not, and I did not suggest anything of the kind.

Mr. NORRIS. I spent a half hour this morning in the committee room waiting for Senators to be present in order that there might be a hearing on the bill which has been introduced by the Senator from Idaho, but we were not able to secure a quorum. I feel in duty bound—and I have never failed to perform that duty—to call a meeting of the committee when any Member of the Senate asks to be heard or when any Member of the other House asks to be heard.

I feel that it is my duty always to comply with such requests. That means that, at least so far as I am concerned, my time is gone, and the time of one of my clerks is taken up, while awaiting the attendance of Senators. The hearings which are proposed to be held before the Agricultural Committee are not on bills which I myself have introduced but on bills which have been introduced by other Senators, and so long as Senators ask for a hearing thereon, it seems to me that they have that right, or at least that the chairman of the committee ought to do the best he can to secure a quorum of the committee and give them a hearing.

For that reason, Mr. President, not because of any desire of mine to object but because of the responsibility which rests on me to obtain a quorum of the committee if I can, much as I dislike to do so, I am compelled to object to the request for unanimous consent which is made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, of course, I hope the Senator will not think anything that I have said is a criticism of his course, for I have not any criticism whatever to make of him.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Nebraska is discharging his responsibility as he sees it and I am discharging mine as I see it. I desire to give notice that at the close of the session to-day I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday, and I hope that Republican Senators will be present so that we may have the quorum necessary to take that action.

Mr. NORRIS. And I hope that those Senators who have been importuning me for hearings and who are anxious to be heard on the various bills, especially those which are pending before the committee of which I am chairman, may also be present at the time referred to by the Senator from Washington. I wish to give notice to those Senators that in making the objection I have done what I believe to be my duty, not in behalf of myself but in their behalf. If they mean what they say, if they feel as though they wish to back me up in taking the position I have taken, I give notice to them that they ought to be here and vote against the proposition that at the close of business to-day the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Washington said that he would move to take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday. I think it would be better if the Senator would move that when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly that would be better.

Mr. ASHURST. Monday being calendar day, I think we should have an adjournment instead of a recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yesterday, when I asked unanimous consent to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-day, I stated that if I could get unanimous consent I would be willing to adjourn until 11 o'clock Monday morning, and I am perfectly willing to move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator would be doing better to move to adjourn until 11 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I say I am perfectly willing to do that when the time comes.

I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on a day certain debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand it is debatable under the rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under that decision, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order because of the precedent that might be established. I make the point that it is not in order at this time to move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to a set date and hour. The only way to do that is by unanimous consent, and the only time to make the motion would be this afternoon, if it shall be desired to make it at that time, but it is premature to make it at this time, and it is not in order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. There is no rule against it; the motion is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not looked the matter up, but I know it has been a very common practice in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Personally, I have no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. WARREN. I know of no rule which precludes the Senator from Washington making the motion which he has made. On the other hand, it has been done very frequently in the practice of the Senate during the course of many years.

Mr. HARRISON. My impression, so far as my short experience in the Senate is concerned, is that when the Senate meets at 11 o'clock it does so by unanimous consent. An order is made at the beginning of each session under the rules of the Senate fixing the hour of meeting at 12 o'clock. The rules can not be suspended except by a two-thirds vote, and in order to suspend the rules a day's notice is required, so that the hour of meeting can not be changed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is mistaken about the motion being contrary to the rules, because a motion to adjourn to an hour certain is in order. The standing order of the Senate specifically states that the hour of meeting shall be 12 o'clock unless otherwise ordered, and the motion now pending proposes to order a different hour for meeting on next Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. I probably did not make myself plain to the Senator. I said that it might be in order this afternoon when we get ready to adjourn to adjourn to a definite hour on Monday. Then, if another motion should be made to adjourn to 12 o'clock, that would have priority, but at this time, when we are just beginning the day's proceedings, it seems to me that it is not in order to make the motion.

Mr. WARREN. It is immaterial to me, of course.

Mr. HARRISON. It is also immaterial to me.

Mr. WARREN. I am only making the statement now because I would not like to have it understood that a motion that when the Senate adjourns it shall adjourn to an hour certain is not in order at any time.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit that under the practice and under the rules the only way to do it is by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not exactly understand what the objection is which is made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The motion now is that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall adjourn to 11 o'clock on Monday. Under the rules of the Senate 12 o'clock is the hour fixed for meeting; my point of order is that the only way to change it at this stage of the proceedings is by unanimous consent, and that has been the practice of the Senate. A request for unanimous consent was made, and objection was interposed to it. Now, the motion is made at this particular time when we are not ready to adjourn that when the Senate shall adjourn it shall adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday, and I submit that the motion at this time is not in order, and I have made a point of order to that effect.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that I find nothing in the rules anywhere with reference to the hour of meeting. My recollection now is that an order is made at the beginning of each session that unless otherwise ordered the hour of meeting shall be 12 o'clock. I find nothing in the rules on the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be true, but it was set as a precedent at the beginning of the session that the rule of the Senate would be to meet at 12 o'clock, as I understand, unless by other arrangement it should be changed. That is my recollection about it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the first volume of the Precedents, page 24, subdivision 6:

> The Senate had under consideration the bill (S. 65) "to authorize the President of the United States to contract for the transportation of the mails, troops, seamen, munitions of war, Army and Navy supplies, and all other Government service, by railroad, from the Missouri River to San Francisco, in the State of California."
>
> After numerous ineffectual attempts to postpone its further consideration and to adjourn, Mr. Johnson of Arkansas moved that when the Senate adjourn it be to Monday next.
>
> The President (Mr. Stuart in the Chair) decided that this motion was not in order while another matter is pending.
>
> From this decision Mr. Johnson of Arkansas appealed.
>
> On the question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" it was determined in the affirmative.

Then the next precedent, under date of May 16, 1860, is—

> The Senate resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, the resolutions submitted by Mr. Davis in relation to the questions of slavery and the rights of property in the Territories of the United States; and, pending debate,
>
> Mr. Hale submitted a motion that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet to-morrow, at 2 o'clock, being made pending another subject; and the motion being objected to as not in order,
>
> The President (Mr. Foot in the chair) decided that the motion was in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What inference does the Senator draw from those two decisions?

Mr. LENROOT. I simply cite them. I would, however, call the attention of the Chair to a precedent that I can not turn to at this moment, but it is with reference to the adjournment sine die of Congress. Senators will remember that two years ago, I think, the question was up as to that motion being in order, that when the Senate do adjourn sine die it be on a certain date. I can not give the Chair a reference to the precedent, but I think the Senator from Mississippi very fully argued that question, and I think an appeal was taken, and the Senate decided that it was in order, as I recollect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The last decision seems to have been made in 1860. The Chair thought the difficulty with the motion would be the one that is decided in the decision of 1860, rather than the one raised by the Senator from Mississippi. The time of day that the Senate shall meet is not fixed by rule but by resolution. It is not a question of changing the rules, as the Chair understands; so the Chair is going to rule that the motion at the present time is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Chair state the motion now, so that all Senators will understand it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday at 11 o'clock. On this motion the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. He is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which I transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIAL. I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and voted "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] having appeared and voted, I withdraw the transfer of my pair with that Senator, and being unable to secure a transfer I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has not voted. I have a pair with him for the day, which I find I can transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER]. I do so, and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bursum	Johnson	Moses	Ransdell
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Reed, Pa.
Cameron	Kellogg	New	Stanfield
Colt	Keyes	Nicholson	Sterling
Curtis	Lenroot	Oddie	Townsend
Dillingham	Lodge	Page	Warren
France	McCormick	Pepper	Willis
Harreld	McKinley	Poindexter

NAYS—26.

Ashurst	George	Ladd	Robinson
Bayard	Gerry	La Follette	Sheppard
Brookhart	Glass	McKellar	Trammell
Capper	Harris	McNary	Underwood
Couzens	Harrison	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Heflin	Overman
Fletcher	Hitchcock	Pomerene

NOT VOTING—39.

Ball	Fernald	Norbeck	Spencer
Borah	Frelinghuysen	Owen	Stanley
Brandegee	Gooding	Phipps	Sutherland
Broussard	Hale	Pittman	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed, Mo.	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kendrick	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	King	Shortridge	Watson
Edge	McCumber	Simmons	Weller
Elkins	McLean	Smith	Williams
Ernst	Myers	Smoot

So the motion of Mr. JONES of Washington was agreed to.

POWER OF STATE LEGISLATURES OVER ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce that on Thursday next, as soon after the convening of the Senate as I can get recognition, I shall address the Senate on the subject of the power of the State legislatures over the Electoral College.

JACOB F. ROSENBERGER.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Out of order I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business 1051, being the bill (H. R. 12887) granting a pension to Jacob F. Rosenberger. The bill, I am quite sure, can be disposed of without any debate at all. It merely corrects a clerical error in the omnibus pension bill of September 18, 1922. The clerk of the committee, I understand, put in the wrong first name for one of the claimants, and this bill merely corrects that error. I will be compelled to be absent on Monday, or I would not ask for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Jacob F. Rosenberger, helpless and dependent son of Frederick Rosenberger, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month from the 18th day of September, 1922.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARGET RANGE OF LINCOLN COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. HARRELD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6204) to grant the military target range of Lincoln County, Okla., to the city of Chandler, Okla., and reserving the right to use for military and aviation purposes. This is a bill which has been passed by the House and reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. It will take but a moment to pass it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With the understanding that it will not lead to discussion, I shall make no objection; but we are going to have a morning hour on Monday, and in the meantime I hope Senators will not call up any more bills from the calendar than are necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. The report on the bill by the Committee on Military Affairs is unanimous.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I said, if it does not give rise to debate, I shall not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title and fee to the military target range of Lincoln County, Okla., described in words and figures as follows, to wit: The south half of the south half of the northwest quarter of section 9, in township 14, north of range 4, east of the Indian meridian; except the land described as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of said northwest quarter of section 9, running thence west 363 feet; thence north 445 feet; thence east 363 feet; thence south 445 feet to the place of beginning. Also, except the right of way of the Choctaw, Oklahoma & Western Railroad, now the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, being a strip of land 100 feet in width across said land, extending 50 feet on each side of the center of the roadbed or main track of said railroad company. Also, except a strip of land 16 feet wide across the south line of the northwest quarter of said section 9, extending from the west line of the right of way of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad to the west line of the said northwest quarter of the said section 9, said tract so conveyed containing 34.48 acres, according to the survey thereof. And the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter of section 8, in township 14, north of range 4, east of the Indian meridian, containing 40 acres, according to the Government survey thereof. And the south half of the northwest quarter of section 8, in township 14, north of range 4, east of the Indian meridian, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the city of Chandler, Okla., to be used as a public park, subject, however, to the right of the United States to at any time reenter and occupy the same for military purposes or as an aviation field; or the same may be used for said purposes by the militia of the State of Oklahoma under such terms and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War of the United States of America: Provided, however, That in the event the said lands are not used by the municipality for the purposes specified in this act the same shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That said lands shall be subject to the right of the United States at any and all times and in any manner to assume control of or use and occupy the same or any part thereof, without license, consent, or leave from said city or State for any and all military purposes, including use for a target range or aviation purposes, free from any conveyance, charges, incumbrances, or liens, made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon by said city or State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a petition from representatives of commercial organizations, Commonwealths, and cities, assembled in convention in this city on February 7, urging that the pending bill be brought to a vote before the end of the present session of Congress. I ask that the petition, which is very brief, and the signatures of some 65 commercial bodies, be printed in 8-point type in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petition, with the signatures, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type and to lie on the table, as follows:

The honorable the VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the undersigned, representatives of commercial organizations, Commonwealths, and cities of the Nation, in convention assembled in Washington, D. C., this 7th day of February, 1923, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to pass speedily the pending legislation, with any necessary perfecting amendments, designed to establish permanently an adequate American merchant marine.

Failure on the part of this Congress to act promptly and constructively will in our judgment constitute an abandonment of our interests on the seas and will result in the disintegration of the great bulk of our present merchant fleet, because of the inability of our ships, unaided, to meet the competition of cheaper-built and cheaper-operated foreign tonnage. Without adequate shipping facilities under the American flag, not only our commercial prosperity, but the Nation's safety as well, will be endangered.

Delay in acting on the pending legislation will mean the surrender of an opportunity for the national welfare that may never return. We therefore urge, with the utmost earnestness, that the shipping bill be brought to a vote before the end of the present session of Congress.

National Merchant Marine Association, Jos. E. Ransdell, president; Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, per Robt. S. Alter, director; Middle West Merchant Marine Committee, by Malcolm Stewart, chairman; United States Ship Operators' Association, by Charles H. Potter, president; National Association of Manufacturers, 50 Church Street, New York, by Nathan B. Williams; Maj. Andrew W. Feuss, delegate; Washington Board of Trade, Washington, D. C., by Frank P. Leetch, delegate; Neptune Association of Masters and Mates (Inc.), John F. Milliken, secretary; Pacific American Steamship Association, per Edwin H. Duff and H. S. Scott; State of Maryland, W. H. Stayton, Wm. H. Matthias, and James E. Abbott, delegates; Geo. M. Shriver, per F. J. C.; American Manufactures' Export Association, Myron W. Robinson, president; Galveston Commercial Association, by T. R. Hancock, director; New Orleans Association of Commerce, by William Allen, special representative; City of Tampa, Fla., by J. T. Lykes; Board of Harbor Commissioners, Wilmington, Del., Fredk. W. Hersey, operating division; C. A. McAllister, vice president American Bureau of Shipping; Memphis (Tenn.) Chamber of Commerce, S. H. Butler, president; Manufacturers and Jobbers' Association of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Avery G. Clinger, secretary; Muscatine Association of Commerce, C. E. Fox, secretary; Iowa State Chamber of Commerce, of Des Moines, Iowa, by Jos. F. Leopold; Gulf Shipping Conference (Inc.), S. O. Pedricky, president; South Atlantic States Association, Matthew Hale, president; American Steamship Owners' Association, by Winthrop L. Marvin, vice president and general manager; St. Joseph (Mo.) Chamber of Commerce, Harold S. Foster, secretary; Davenport Chamber of Commerce, C. R. Miles, secretary; Winona (Minn.) Association of Commerce, C. A. Bolton, secretary; the City of Philadelphia, by Emil P. Albrecht, delegate by appointment of Mayor J. Hampton Moore; the Philadelphia Bourse, by Emil P. Albrecht, president; Philadelphia Board of Trade, by Anthony S. Haydin, chairman foreign and coastwise commerce committee; Minneapolis (Minn.) Civic and Commerce Association, J. S. Cady, secretary; Kansas City (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce; Huron Commercial Club, Huron, S. Dak., J. Valentine, secretary; Lacrosse (Wis.) Chamber of Commerce; the St. Paul Association, Herman Mueller, traffic division; Fort Dodge (Iowa) Chamber of Commerce, R. O. Green, secretary; the Leavenworth (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, E. G. Blum, secretary-manager; New Orleans Board of Trade (Ltd.), Thomas V. Cunningham; special committee representing the city of Boston, J. W. Bruce, chairman, Lewis K. Thurlow; Illinois Chamber of Commerce, by John H. Camlin, president; Civic and Commerce Association of Superior, Wis., by W. H. Tyson, secretary; Chamber of Commerce, Mobile, Ala.; Manufacturers and Merchants' Association, St. Louis, Mo., Albert J. Davis; Lumberman's Club, Memphis, Tenn., J. H. Hines; Memphis Chamber of Commerce, J. H. Hines; Chicago Board of Trade, John V. Stream, president; Association of Commerce, Madison, Wis., Don E. Mowry; Dubuque (Iowa) Chamber of Commerce, H. R. Hanger, acting secretary; Oklahoma Chamber of Commerce, T. C. Thatcher; Oklahoma Millers' Association, T. C. Thatcher; Oklahoma Grain Dealers' Association, T. C. Thatcher; Des Moines (Iowa) Chamber of Commerce, L. B. Jeffries; Chicago (Ill.) Association of Commerce, P. W. Kunning; Chicago World Trade Club, Chicago, Ill.; Institute of American Meat Packers, Chicago, Ill.; Topeka Flour Mills Co., Topeka, Kans., H. D. Yoder, vice president; Southwestern Millers' League Export Committee, Topeka, Kans., by H. D. Yoder, chairman; Millers' National Federation, Topeka, Kans., H. D. Yoder, director; Mobile (Ala.) Clearing House Association, Thos. M. Moore, secretary and manager; Fond du Lac Association of Commerce, Wis., E. T. Markle; the City Club of Decatur, Ill., Geo. A. Williams; Association of Commerce, Decatur, Ill., Geo. A. Williams; Chamber of Commerce, Evansville, Ind., J. S. Johnson, secretary; Chamber of Commerce, Huntington, W. Va., O. S. Frick, secretary; Toledo Chamber of Commerce, Toledo, Ohio, L. G. Macomber, traffic commissioner; St. Paul Association of Public and Business Affairs, St. Paul, Minn., J. A. Seegar, president; Milwaukee Association of Commerce, by M. A. W. Bably; H. W. Lawrie, representative Portland Chamber of Commerce, Portland, Oreg.

Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator to state that Government ownership had never been given a fair trial. Is it not a fact that the Government lines which have been conducted by the Shipping Board have been a financial success? I would like to have the Senator tell us what he means by stating that it has not been given a fair trial, and whether or not, to the extent to which it has been given a fair trial, it has been a success.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to do that. Perhaps I ought to qualify what I said about the Government operation never having been given a chance by saying that in the instance of the Panama Steamship Line, where there has been Government operation all along from Panama——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. For how long?

Mr. FLETCHER. Some 20 years. They have made an abundant success. Out of the whole 20 years they have had a deficit in only two years, and those deficits amounted to a very small sum when we consider all the circumstances surrounding them. For instance, last year the deficit has been stated to be $587,000. If we allowed them credit at commercial rates for the supplies and employees carried down there for the Government, their deficit would not amount to $125,000. In other words, they have been carrying supplies and employees to Panama at much less than commercial rates have been all along.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And, of course, last year overseas freight cargoes reached the bottom as to rates.

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, undoubtedly. Even the Shipping Board put the Government-owned ships in competition with the Government's own line.

Mr. CALDER. But did they do that in the case of the Panama Steamship Co.?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes. The routes and service covered by the Panama Steamship Co. were also covered by the Shipping Board.

Mr. CALDER. Direct to Panama?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Shipping Board ships, I think, operated touching possibly at Porto Rico and Haiti, and perhaps some ports along the West Indies to Panama, and were in the same service.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Panama line did not touch those ports?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; it went direct to Panama. I do not think the service by the other company was direct to Panama, but was the same service the Panama line had been engaged in.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, for a number of years the Panama Steamship Co. operated its ships direct to Panama and did not stop at those outlying West Indies ports, but a few years ago, under Secretary of War Baker, it was determined to have the vessels stop at the West Indies ports. Now the shipping interests of the country have contended that the Government-owned vessels were actually put in competition with privately owned vessels on those routes run by private lines before, and that they have almost completely destroyed the opportunity for private lines to operate to the West Indies.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume the Senator's statement is correct, and I expect he is better informed than I am on the subject. I did not mean to offer any criticism with reference to using Shipping Board vessels in that service as against the Panama line. I think the Shipping Board vessels were operated by private operators and not by the Government itself in that service. It is possible that some years ago the service was direct between Panama and New York. I do not know just when it was broadened to take in the other ports.

Mr. CALDER. I think it was about three years ago. I know at the time that representatives of shipping companies in New York and some from the Gulf States came to see me here, and I went with them and protested to the Secretary of War against the operation of the Government-owned ships competing with privately owned lines which had been operating the lines to the West Indies for years, and that they were being destroyed because of Government operation. I tried to induce Secretary Baker to give an opportunity to those people to continue their business rather than have it destroyed by the Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. If it is true that Government shipping destroyed them, is not that a pretty strong argument for the efficiency of Government operation?

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator from Florida will permit me to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, of course the Government can operate in competition with private companies where the Government has no insurance to pay, where the Government does not figure any interest on capital expenditure, and very often does not figure depreciation. Let me say to the Senator that the Government can not operate vessels in competition with privately owned lines if they do not have those extraordinary expenses to pay, as the private operator has.

Mr. BROOKHART. If they do not have them to pay, that means there is greater efficiency in Government operation.

Mr. CALDER. From my investigation of the subject, I quite disagree with the Senator. From every investigation I have made and every inquiry I have been able to make, it is just like the matter of the operation of the railroads by the Government during the war. When we got through with that operation we discovered that we had worked out a deficit of $1,800,000,000. We could go on paying such deficits, of course, but it would be unwise to do so.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let me call the attention of the Senator to another fact which he forgets, and that is that the first year after the roads were turned back to private ownership, which would be the best year for comparison with Government operation, the operating expenses increased about $1,485,000,000 under private operation. Does the Senator consider that fact? The people have to pay all that money.

Mr. CALDER. It cost us nearly $2,000,000,000 to operate the railroad lines under Government operation.

Mr. BROOKHART. Even if that were true, of course all of it was expense that private sources took from the railroads when they were not entitled to do it. One trouble with American business is that they are all the time shouting about better government, all the time saying to the Government, "You are inefficient, you can not do anything, you had better turn everything over to us." I think their attitude toward the Government of the United States is the most unpatriotic attitude in the country. Instead of trying to help the Government be efficient, they take the unpatriotic position that they want to get all these things themselves and do not want the Government to perform its real functions.

Mr. CALDER. Of course, we are getting far afield from the shipping business, but I want to say to the Senator that I utterly disagree with him on the question of Government operation of utilities like railroads and steamship lines. I am quite convinced that in the matter of the operation of Government-owned steamship lines there is just one thing or the other for us to do if we hope to maintain an American merchant marine, either through the Government saying to private shipowners to go ahead in that direction, or else, as the Senator apparently proposes, let the Government operate the vessels itself. There are just those two lines of thought.

Mr. BROOKHART. When it reaches the stage that we must take Government money out of the Treasury so it will make millionaires out of private shipowners, then I protest that as a matter of principle the Government, under those conditions, ought to operate the ships.

Mr. CALDER. That is the Senator's opinion, but my judgment, after a wide study of the subject, convinces me that Government aid and private operation can be worked out with much less expense to the Government and much more efficient operation.

Mr. BROOKHART. I do not like the Senator's line of argument. When I am talking about my Government and saying my Government is the best institution in the world, I do not like to be met with the argument that the Government is inefficient and that it can not do these things. If the Government is inefficient, it is the fault of the Senate and the House and the President and the officials who are running it, and that fault ought to be corrected so the Government could do its duty in that matter as well as in other matters.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to finish the answer to the Senator's first question about Government operation. The other instance of Government operation is the United States Lines.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was going to ask about that line.

Mr. FLETCHER. That has only begun comparatively recently. It has been of short duration. They had to take over a bankrupt concern that undertook to buy the ships and could not carry out the contract. They collected money ahead of time on passenger fares when they never could carry out their contracts with the passengers. The Government took over one line and, not having any private operator available and not having been offered a MO–4 contract, they had to take the ships, and so they put Mr. Rossbottom in charge of the line. That is the only other instance, and that has been a success.

Mr. McKELLAR. One of the lines has made considerable money, has it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The other, running to London or to Southampton, is not paying so well, but they are more than breaking even, taking them together.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are doing splendidly wherever the boats are adapted to the service. There are some ex-German 25-year-old tubs, as Mr. Rossbottom called them, that ought not to be in the service at all. They could not be operated profitably by anybody. They might be used on the Pacific in certain kinds of service over there, and with profit. I do not mean that they ought to be given away or scrapped. They are not worthless, but they are not suited for the Atlantic service, and consequently they are losing money. Outside of that the line is a great success.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As I understand it, the Government has pursued two policies in reference to Government-owned ships. It has maintained lines of its own, ships owned and operated by the Government. The other policy is one of loaning ships to private interests and making contracts with those private interests for the operation of them. Under the bookkeeping system of the Shipping Board, is it not a fact that the bookkeeping of the Shipping Board showed a profit in the activities of the Government operating its own ships and a substantially great loss in the operation of loaning ships to private interests and making contracts for their operation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite true.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So that, so far as the financial statement of the Shipping Board goes, the more profitable operation for the Government has been of the two experiments operating ships under Government operation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Unquestionably.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And the great financial losses that have come have been as a result of the MO–4 contracts, which are contracts entered into with private concerns to operate Government-owned vessels.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I think the Senator states that correctly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator this question: Is it not true that the confused policy of the Shipping Board is hurting the operation of its ships very greatly? In order to make myself clear, I desire to say that I understand the Shipping Board is very anxious to put all the ships into private hands, and as soon as practicable to sell them, if possible; and, if not, otherwise to get rid of them. If the Government were to pursue a policy of making our shipping a success and, say for a period of years, establish the policy of building up our shipping, under those circumstances would it not, in the Senator's opinion, cut down the losses very greatly, if not remove them entirely?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think undoubtedly that would be so. I have tried to state during the course of my remarks here today that where they are handling the ships on the basis of liquidating the business they can not expect to succeed. It is entirely different from operating the ships as a going concern.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, they have put themselves in the position of a receiver for a private corporation who is winding up the corporation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And it is not intended to build up the business, to make it a paying business, but the purpose under those circumstances is simply to get as much cash out of it as possible and then to quit?

Mr. FLETCHER. And to hold out to the world the idea that it is a temporary emergency concern.

Mr. McKELLAR. That it is a temporary emergency concern which is going to be put out of business at the earliest moment possible?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under those circumstances, I desire to ask, did the Senator from Florida ever know any business to make a success?

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be impossible. I think the Shipping Board has done remarkably well under those conditions in establishing what routes they have established and in the amount of business they have done.

Mr. McKELLAR. To my mind that is the cause of the trouble that the Shipping Board is now in. If they would go out and get business in order to build up a permanent and successful merchant marine for our country, instead of showing a $50,000,000 a year loss they would show an enormous profit in the business.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me just there?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. I think the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the response of the Senator from Florida are substantially correct. I think it is undoubtedly true that such operation of a shipping company, like the operation of any other business with the intention of liquidating the business rather than making it a going concern ultimately to be operated at a profit, undoubtedly tends to destroy the effectiveness of the organization. Undoubtedly that is true. We should have done much better if we had gone ahead on the theory that the business was to be a Government-owned and Government-operated business of running ships overseas.

Mr. McKELLAR. At least until we had made it a success and could in a proper way turn the business over to private interests.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator from Florida will permit me a little further, I desire to say that from my investigation of the subject—and coming from New York City, I have opportunities of inquiring into these matters—I know that it is true that in nearly every case overseas voyages made by the vessels which are operated by private lines under contract with the Shipping Board result in a loss to the Government. I know of instances where the operation of vessels to various ports in Europe by shipping companies results in losses of $2,000, $3,000, $4,000, and even $10,000 a voyage to the Government.

I have in mind the statement made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in connection with the United States Line. I have taken the trouble to have some of their figures analyzed, and I shall print in the RECORD, at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Florida, if he has no objection to my asking permission now, the statement, which has been worked out by some gentlemen who are shipping men and who know the circumstances. They tell me when one comes to consider the maintenance and repairs for the vessels of the United States Line, the really genuinely operated Government line, that the aggregate losses will run into the neighborhood of $500,000 a month; in other words, the loss to the Government in the operation of the United States Line for the past year will total nearly $6,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator take any other lines into consideration except the lines which are running from New York to Plymouth and from New York to Bremen?

Mr. CALDER. I am considering the operation of the vessels which are under control of the line referred to.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, those are the two lines of which Mr. Rossbottom has charge, and they are run purely as Government lines. As I understand, the line which runs to Bremen is a success and made last year a profit of something like $700,000, and while the other line, running to Plymouth, has not paid, the losses do not amount to as much as the profits which were made on the route to Bremen.

Mr. CALDER. The gentlemen whom I have in mind point out that on some of the round trips of the United States Line vessels the losses to the Government total as high as $40,000.

I submit, Mr. President, that we are not going to continue that sort of business forever. We are going to do one of three things: Give Government aid; establish the policy of Government operation and pay the losses out of the Treasury; or, as the Senator from Utah said the other day, put the ships up on the auction block, sell those which we can sell, and those which we can not sell take out in the ocean and sink.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Government can not make the business a success, with no insurance, as was said awhile ago, and with no interest on capital, and with other carrying charges less than a private individual could possibly have, does the Senator think that an individual could make it a success? How does the Senator figure that out?

Mr. CALDER. I think with Government aid such as is proposed to be provided in the pending bill it may be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, of course, if we make the aid large enough; but if we ever start the aid, as we know from having previously given aid in other instances, whenever a particular interest gets its hands into the Public Treasury it puts them down deeper and deeper and deeper and gets more and more as the years pass by.

Mr. CALDER. I do not think so. I think when it gets to the point where the American people will feel the burden is too great, and that satisfactory results are not being obtained, the whole thing will be abandoned; just as I believe—if the Senator from Florida will permit me to interrupt him further—that if we go on as we have in the last year or two under Government operation, we will proceed for a while with losses aggregating $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 a year, as the case may be, and some day, in view of the spirit of economy and the demand for a decrease in the cost of government and the lowering of taxes, we will sell the ships, as the Senator from Utah has suggested, on the auction block, to whomsoever wants to buy them, and go back to the condition we were in in the days before the war, when Europe had over 90 per cent of our carrying trade.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, the Senator does not think that America will ever be able to build up her merchant marine?

Mr. CALDER. I do not think it will ever be possible for America to build up her merchant marine in competition with nations abroad which can build ships and operate them cheaper than Americans can.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, how can the Senator get his consent to vote for a subsidy if the payment will never be of any lasting benefit or good to the American people?

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that I do not believe it is possible for us to maintain a privately operated merchant marine in competition with Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, France, Germany, England, and other nations without sufficient Government aid to make up the difference in operating our ships as compared with the operating costs of European ships. If it is against the policy of the Government to give that sort of aid, then we might as well abandon the whole thing, and go back to the pre-war arrangement.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, he says that even if we started the subsidy plan and expended $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 a year at first, and even if we increased it later, he does not think even then we could make it a success?

Mr. CALDER. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood the Senator to say that we would soon go back to pre-war conditions.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no; but I am fearful when we start out giving the subsidy that some day the American people may become tired of contributing money in that direction. I admit to the Senator that it is a pretty serious matter; the taking of money out of the Public Treasury and giving it to private interests to operate a business directly for their benefit as well as for the benefit of the country is a question as to which men may honestly differ; but it seems to me that shipping is a little different from anything else; it is a splendid auxiliary for our Navy, a second line of defense, as it were, and a good means to bring about the expansion of our business abroad. I think that the farmers of Iowa and of Tennessee and of all the other sections in the interior of the country away from the seacoast will be directly benefited by having a merchant fleet carrying their products all over the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. I, too, think so; I believe in building up the merchant marine; and I think that the Government should aid in every way in securing business for our merchant marine, in securing cargoes for American vessels; but the Senator knows that wherever any fleet of ships, say, those of the Standard Oil Co. or of the United Fruit Co. or of the United States Steel Co. or of any other business corporation, have cargoes both ways they make money. They do not need any subsidy. What the Government ought to do, in my judgment, is to make the conditions as favorable to our getting cargoes as it is possible. I differ from the Senator about the future of our merchant marine. I believe if the Government would secure favorable conditions under which our ships could get cargoes to carry our products abroad and to bring foreign products to our shores we would have as prosperous a merchant marine as any other nation, and probably more so, because we have more business.

Mr. CALDER. We have our commercial attachés throughout the world, and I think, perhaps, they are doing some good for us; but we will, it seems to me, never get all of the foreign trade which we ought to get until we have a merchant marine of our own.

Now, let me say to the Senator it was my privilege to talk at length to a gentleman who represented our Shipping Board in Buenos Aires for several years and until very recently. He told me when he went there he found our Shipping Board interests in the hands of a European—I forget whether the agent was a German, a Dutchman, or of some other nationality—but he found no real sympathy there on the part of the men acting for our Shipping Board in our business. He said we have not thought in terms of shipping. In the very recent past people from the Argentine and Brazil went to Europe in order to reach the United States, and naturally traded in Europe; we were not getting all the trade we could in those countries; whereas if we had had our ship lines running up and down the east and west coast of South America and to the principal ports of the world we would increase our business.

I do not question the Senator's desire to do the best thing for his country; I am sure he means to do the best thing; but I am confident that if he agreed to my theory of the shipping business he would support my position, as I would support his position if I believed in his theory. However, I am convinced from my observation, from long residence in New York and long experience with shipping interests, and from intimate first-hand knowledge, that we will not be able to operate a fleet of vessels in competition with European nations unless we give Government aid to them; otherwise we will, as the Senator's argument seems to indicate he favors, be compelled to resort to Government operation of the vessels.

Under Government operation, let me say to the Senator, American private competition is driven out; the operation of American vessels is then put entirely in the hands of the Government. Is the Senator for that? Does he believe that to be the best policy for the future merchant marine in this country? If he does, then the question is merely one of Government operation as against private operation. The lines are then directly drawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator I am inclined to believe that if we imposed a discriminating duty of 5 per cent upon the goods brought to our shores in American bottoms and required, of course, that goods which are on the free list should be brought in in American bottoms, that would give us the business. The Senator knows that there are a number of old treaties, one of them made in 1815, more than a hundred years ago, that greatly discriminate against American trade and commerce and that have discriminated against them ever since they were made; but for some unimaginable reason they have been allowed to remain as they are by the inaction of our executive department. I say let us abrogate those treaties and put in a discriminating duty, and then all American ships, private and public, would get all the business that they could do and make a great success of it.

Mr. CALDER. In response to that statement let me say to the Senator that with the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in charge of this bill, and several other Senators I helped prepare the so-called Jones Shipping Act of 1920. We provided in that bill substantially the very thing the Senator suggests. I recall that the Senator from Florida was quite enthusiastic about how that would work out. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I fully concur with him; if we had been able to put the discriminating-duty provision into effect, it would have had a splendid effect and might have solved the problem. I am inclined to believe that it would have solved it; and if that had been done I do not think we would be here to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would have been better than any subsidy, would it not?

Mr. CALDER. But, as the Senator knows, a Democratic President did not agree with that. He did not agree with it when it was incorporated in the Underwood Tariff Act. I did not vote for that tariff act, but I did vote for that particular provision in it. It was a splendid thing, and I thought it would be helpful to our merchant marine; and then it was incorporated in the Jones law.

Neither President Wilson nor our present President was willing to put it into effect, however. One of the things our present President is enthusiastic about and exceedingly anxious to see, one of the great things he has always urged, is the development of a merchant marine; but, for some reason, both President Wilson and President Harding were fearful that our treaties would be violated if we attempted to put that provision into effect. I think that would solve the problem. I should like to see it done.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, the Senator knows that Congress itself has the right to annul and abrogate these commercial treaties. We did it in the case with Russia and in other instances. We have the right to do it. I have already prepared and offered an amendment to this bill to abrogate those treaties, and if that is done there is no reason in the world why we can not put the discriminating duty in force; and I want to ask the Senator this question: With the treaties abrogated, and the discriminating duty in force, does not the Senator believe it would be very much better than any cash payment?

Mr. CALDER. I am not certain of that; but it might be, and I am willing to try it if it can be put into effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will vote for the amendment that I shall offer in order to try it.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator permit me to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter analyzing the cost of operating the United States Lines?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield for that purpose. Of course, it will follow my remarks, and not appear as a part of my remarks——

Mr. CALDER. Certainly; it will follow the Senator's remarks.

Mr. FLETCHER. Because I differ with the Senator's view, and I have no doubt with his correspondent's view, about the estimates as to these losses; and I have already put in the RECORD some data furnished by Mr. Manson and Mr. Rossbottom showing the contrary—that those lines have been successful.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

The Journal of Commerce of January 10 contains a statement by Mr. T. H. Rossbottom, general manager of the United States Lines, in which he claims that in the statement from which Mr. Lasker derived his figures the United States Lines was compelled to carry a financial burden which a privately owned company would not be called upon to bear in its operating account. This statement leaves the erroneous impression that the United States Lines' losses are largely paper losses and that Government operation is efficient and likely to prove profitable for the Government. That such is not the case should not require demonstration. If it did require demonstration, the list of voyage losses sustained by the United States Lines' vessels should make a complete refutation. However, as the United States Lines form the best presently known example of Government operation an examination into their accounts is pertinent.

The period I shall cover will be from July 1 to December 1 of 1922. This is the most favorable period of earnings that could be taken. On July 1 new immigration quotas are opened up. In August, September, and October the spring tourist trade eastbound is returning home. The three critical months in the passenger business, namely, January, February, and March, are excluded:

The net profit of the United States Lines for the month of July was $61,809.43.

The net loss of the United States Lines for the month of August was $187,707.79.

The net loss of the United States Lines for the month of September was $124,031.24.

The net loss of the United States Lines for the month of October was $74,276.17.

The net loss of the United States Lines for the month of November was $436,004.83.

The net loss of the United States Lines for a period of five months was $760,210.60.

Mr. Rossbottom objects to the financial burden of reconditioning ships. Let us examine these costs—

Maintenance and repairs for July	$55,339.50
Maintenance and repairs for August	283,479.78
Maintenance and repairs for September	218,228.39
Maintenance and repairs for October	95,233.82
Maintenance and repairs for November	297,465.14
Total	949,746.63

This $949,000 is not merely a book transfer, it is money that has been actually paid out by the Government. How it would relieve the situation to charge this amount to a capital account I am unable to understand. However, advocates of Government ownership seem to object to taking it into account. As a matter of fact, it is excessive.

Under prudent operation and following normal commercial practice maintenance and repairs for this fleet would probably cost in the neighborhood of $450,000.

But raising the question of a capital account works both ways. The fact that the United States Lines' accounts do not include capital charges is the reason that they are able to make any showing whatsoever. The fleet of ships under control of the United States Lines costs the Government between $70,000,000 and $100,000,000. These ships are conservatively worth $17,000,000. Insurance, depreciation, interest, and other capital charges would certainly amount to 2 per cent a month. This would mean an additional loss of $340,000 per month, or for the period of five months an additional loss of $1,700,000 if a capital account were considered.

An examination of these figures shows that the Government in operating United States Lines is sustaining a loss of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 a year. Even assuming that $1,000,000 is extraordinary and unnecessary, the figures are still startling. In one operation alone the Government is losing about one-sixth of the total amount of the subsidy asked for, and these losses are not confined to one line alone. Scarcely a ship is sailing for the Shipping Board to-day that is showing a profit. I know that every month ships are sailing for the account of the Shipping Board showing losses ranging from $2,000 to $40,000 a voyage. This is not the fault of the Shipping Board. They have done a stupendous task in reducing the losses to what they are. The fault lies in the fact that the Government can not succeed in so personal a business as is shipping. Furthermore, as I have clearly shown before, operating costs under the American flag and the extraordinary expenses incident to the development of a pioneer industry are too great for private enterprise to overcome.

There is only one alternative if the merchant marine is to survive. Government aid in some form must be given. The method provided in the ship subsidy bill is the most businesslike and workable plan that can be devised.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator spoke of the benefits of ship subsidy to the farmers of Iowa and of the United States generally. At present, according to the letter from Mr. Lasker, under Government operation of these ships the rates on grain are perhaps about 40 per cent less than they were before the war. That is a direct benefit to the farmers, and grain is the biggest of our export cargoes. What advantage can there be to the farmers of Iowa and the rest of the United States if we turn this matter over to private companies, who will fix the rates then without regulation of the Government, and they will surely be raised, and the farmers will pay them? They always pay the freight, whether coming or going. They pay it both ways. There is no way for them to add it in. Now I will ask the Senator if that will not destroy the benefit we are getting out of the Government operation of these ships right now?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to answer that question——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. The farmers are getting low freight rates on their grain to-day not because of Government-operated vessels or Government-owned vessels of the United States Shipping Board or anything else but because of the competition in carrying overseas tonnage of every character. There is a dearth of cargo for the amount of space available, and, of course, the freight rates are down, and that will happen whether the vessels are operated by the Government or by private concerns; it does not make a bit of difference.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Government is a real competitor. It competes. It is not afraid to compete; but as soon as we turn over these ships to private parties there is nothing in the world to prevent them from making a combination that will end the competition. That is what usually happens with the financiers of New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the financiers of New York are just as patriotic as the splendid people the Senator represents. They are interested in getting the best they can for what they have to sell, just like the farmers of the West, upon whom we of the East depend so much, and who, I agree with the Senator, are more in need of help than the financiers of the East; but the Senator evidently has not informed himself upon the practice of dealing in freight charges for oversea tonnage, because if he had he would know that it has been the practice for decades that whenever there is a dearth of tonnage the freight rates come down.

Our own Shipping Board has sat in conferences and agreed upon rates for its shipping, just the same as private people have; but to-day, because of the need of freights, the rates have been cut, and the farmer is getting the advantage. I am glad he is, because he needs it; and while the Senator lives nearer the farmer than I do, because I live in a big city, I want to tell him that anything that will help his farmer I will join with him in getting, because I think the farmer belongs to the one class of producers in America that needs help, is entitled to help, and ought to have it more than any other.

Mr. BROOKHART. But the thing that will help the farmer will be to continue this Government operation, and, if a deficit occurs, levy a tax on these high percentages of earnings to pay the deficit.

Mr. CALDER. That is just a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself. I am against Government operation of steamship lines. He is for it. That is our division of thought, and I doubt if we ever can get together on it.

Mr. FLETCHER resumed and concluded his speech, which, entire, is as follows:

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to refer to some of the arguments offered yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. JONES of Washington], and to certain impressions which seem to have gone forth regarding the pending bill and the attitude of Senators with reference to it, and to consider generally the whole subject. The statement is made in the press, and the idea seemed to be somewhat emphasized by the address of the President to Congress on the 7th of this month, that those opposed to the pending bill have been employing obstructive tactics, wasting time, and indulging in what is commonly called a filibuster in an effort to prevent a vote being taken on the bill. I do not feel called upon to consider the circumstances in which a filibuster would be justified in either branch of Congress or to discuss the merit or demerit of such practice as the occasion may call for, but I refer to it simply by way of getting at the truth and stating the facts with regard to what the Senate has been doing in connection with the legislation which it has been considering.

It will be recalled that the President called an extraordinary session of Congress last year for the purpose of having the ship subsidy bill considered. The object was to secure the passage of that legislation at the extraordinary session. No obstructive tactics were employed on this side of the Chamber in connection with that movement. It was found that there was no strong support of the measure in either branch of Congress, at least not sufficiently strong to warrant an attempt to press the measure to a vote, and it was finally decided that hearings should be had, and after that that Members of Congress would better return to their homes and get the views of their constituents. When they came back, they were no more impressed with the importance of passing such legislation than they had been before, and in fact, less so. The reaction of the constituency in each case seems to have been just the other way, and if we can judge from the election, whatever bearing that question had on the issues the country is opposed to this kind of legislation. In the recent election, the result of all inquiry and submission of the question to the people, wherever it has been presented and considered, has been to confirm the old-established policy of the country against subsidy.

During this session of Congress there has been no marked delay in the consideration of this bill. The chairman of the committee, always frank, candid, and fair, yesterday stated expressly that the appropriation bills had been put through the Senate with a speed unprecedented. If there had been in operation in the Senate any filibuster against the pending bill, it would have been perfectly easy to pursue dilatory tactics in connection with every appropriation bill presented, but, as a matter of fact, as the chairman of the committee has said, every appropriation bill has been passed without delay, and with only such inquiry and discussion and debate as were necessary to inform the Senate of the contents of such bills.

The pending bill has been laid aside by the chairman in pursuance of a program which, with or without his consent, was agreed upon on the other side. I believe he said on yesterday that he did not quite agree, but that his will was overcome by others, and it was determined that the ship subsidy bill should be laid aside and the appropriation bills taken up and considered as they came forward. For nearly a month that has been the procedure, not by any design or as the result of any effort on the part of those who oppose the bill, but in pursuance of a program approved and fixed on the other side of the chamber, where the bill is being supported.

As the result of that, the bill has not thus far had the consideration and the discussion to which its importance entitles it. My idea is that it should be fully and freely discussed and considered here upon its merits, and whether any filibuster may develop hereafter or not remains to be seen, and I take it that when it does develop, if it does, it will be of such sort and in such shape as to be fully recognized.

The impression has been created that the fact that the bill has not been considered and kept constantly before the Senate is the result of efforts on the part of the opponents of the bill, which is not true at all. That impression was emphasized by the address of the President delivered to the Congress on the 7th of this month. The President used this language:

I am unwilling—the public is unwilling—to continue these appalling losses to the Public Treasury when we know we are operating with no prospect of relief or of ultimate achievement. Congress owes to itself, to the executive branch of the Government, and to the American public some decisive action. Mere avoidance by prolonged debate is a mark of impotence on a vitally important public question.

Those are quite significant words, and the question naturally arises, what has given the occasion to the President for this lecture of the Congress or either branch of the Congress? Has it been shown that those who oppose the bill have indulged in such tactics as to warrant the observation that it is demonstrating impotency on the part of Congress to act?

In the first place, I have always questioned, and I think with full justification, the claim about the appalling losses arising from the operation of the ships. I have pointed out on numerous occasions that there is no Government operation of the ships except in the case of one line that is of recent establishment, the United States Line, in charge of Mr. Rossbottom, and except in the case of the Panama Steamship Co., which has been in charge of the Government, of course, from the beginning and long before we ever had ships built by the Government. Those are the only two instances of Government operation.

What is called Government operation by the Shipping Board has been in pursuance of what we know as the MO-4 contract, whereby private operators have charge of the Government ships, under which arrangement the Government stands all the losses, and pays a commission of 5 per cent on the gross amount of business done. That contract was denounced by Mr. Lasker in July, 1921, as vicious and inexcusable, and as constituting a means for raiding the Treasury, and yet it is continued up to this minute. Although he has been in charge since that time and he found the contract thoroughly indefensible as he did, yet he has continued it up to the present time.

That has been called Government operation. Of course it is not Government operation at all. It is the handling of Government-owned ships by private operators where the Government stands all the lossess and the private operator makes a commission on the business no matter what it is.

In addition to that the private operator is allowed what is called a husbanding fee, a fee in addition to the commission allowed him as a sort of bonus or contribution toward covering his expenses for the care of the ship, and that is paid by the Government. Under this plan there is no approach to Government operation. It has not any of the essential features of Government operation except the Government furnishes the ships. It is a kind of operation that must mean utter failure, no matter by what agency or power or authority it is undertaken, so far as the Government is concerned. Any individual using his property in that way would suffer loss inevitably and could not make a success in the way of establishing the business which he was undertaking to establish.

The whole trouble has been that the Shipping Board never has meant seriously to undertake to operate the ships as a Government enterprise. The whole plan and idea and thought has been to conduct the business as a liquidating process, not as a going concern. There is no chance of success where the aim and effort has been not to succeed. But that does not mean that there can be no such thing as successful Government operation of merchant ships in overseas trade. It has never had a trial by the Shipping Board except when they were driven to attempt it in the one instance of the United States Line and that succeeded beyond and contrary to their expectations as I shall show.

I have questioned the alleged excessive losses even under those circumstances and conditions. The figures of the total expenditures of the Shipping Board last year show they amounted to $30,046,584. How can it be said that they lost $50,000,000 operating the ships? The testimony before the joint committee of the House and Senate on this very bill showed that the losses then figured and established by their books and the records, as testified to by their witnesses, amounted to less than $3,000,000 a month. Their own statement in the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill just recently passed shows that the losses have been less than $3,000,000 a month. Why keep proclaiming here over and over again and reiterating, and having the President adopt it—and, of course, the President is dependent upon these gentlemen for his information—that the loss is $50,000,000 a year? That may have been the case under the MO-4 contract at a time when they were sailing three times as many ships as now. The board claims to have effected many economies since then and reduced the losses. So that these losses, great as they are and inexcusable as they are in my judgment, do not approach the figures which have been given to the President and which the President designates as appalling.

The President might have in mind when he goes to scold Congress or either branch of it, what the Congress has done and called on him to do by express enactment, which he has refused to do. Because his views on this subject do not seem to be readily accepted here he is scarcely warranted, I think, in holding up to the country the idea of impotency on the part of either branch of Congress or lecturing either branch of Congress because of its inaction or prolonged debate. It must be remembered that Congress has heretofore expressed its conclusions and adopted a policy with reference to the proper way of establishing an American merchant marine.

In 1920, after a thorough study of the whole subject and after some considerable experience extending over a period of at least four years, Congress reached a very definite conclusion about the policy to be adopted by the country looking to the establishment and maintenance of an American merchant marine and wrote it into the law. This policy was announced as contained in section 34 of the act of June 5, 1920, page 60, as follows:

That in the judgment of Congress articles or provisions in treaties or conventions to which the United States is a party which restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminating customs duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States, and which also restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminatory tonnage dues on foreign vessels and on vessels of the United States entering the United States should be terminated, and the President is hereby authorized and directed within 90 days after this act becomes law to give notice to the several governments, respectively, parties to such treaties or conventions that so much thereof as imposes any such restriction on the United States will terminate on the expiration of such periods as may be required for the giving of such notice by the provisions of such treaties or conventions.

The chairman of the committee, pressing this bill, yesterday frankly admitted that if this policy had been carried into effect, if this law had been executed, if we had only put into force the policy adopted by Congress in 1920, it would have accomplished far more in the way of establishing and maintaining an American merchant marine than the most ardent friends of the pending measure could hope for under it if it should become a law.

Now, Congress has, not only with the approval of the present President, who was then in the Senate and indorsed this action, but with the approval of the then President of the United States, enacted a law declaring the policy, declaring the principles upon which an American merchant marine must be built, which not only authorized but directed the President to do the things set forth in section 34.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator advised why President Wilson did not execute the similar provisions contained in the tariff act of 1913, enacted at a time when his own party was in power?

Mr. FLETCHER. The courts held the act of 1913 was in violation of treaties and conventions, and therefore could not be enforced. As to the act of 1920, I only know, Mr. President, that one of the grounds assigned was that it was not considered advisable or advantageous in any way for the country to undertake to terminate the conventions as therein provided. For certain economic reasons, on account of certain conditions as to the world situation, and so forth, it was thought to be an unwise policy to proceed to put into effect the law or to do the things specified in the act of 1920. Then there was, as I recall, another argument and there may be something in it—it is worth considering in this connection—that here are certain contracts, commercial agreements, conventions, or treaties, or whatever we may call them. We are parties to them. The other countries, respectively, are parties to those contracts.

The general rule of contracts, as the Senator knows, is that neither party may modify a contract by striking out certain clauses in it, either taking from or adding to the language expressed and agreed upon in the original contract, without the consent of the other party. If a party to a contract should undertake to do that, and the other party does not agree, the only thing which may be done is to end the whole contract and make a new one. The language of the act is:

To such treaties or conventions, that so much thereof as imposes any such restriction on the United States will terminate on the expiration of such periods.

I am inclined to believe that we were a little unfortunate in using language indicating a purpose to denounce only portions of those treaties, so much of the treaties as interfered with our free liberty and right to impose discriminating duties. What we should have done in the act of 1920 was not to undertake to denounce certain portions of the treaties but to denounce the treaties in their entirety according to their terms; for I very much question whether the party to a contract may select certain portions of it and say that as to those portions it shall not be longer binding. The truth is that the requirement should have been that each one of the treaties should be denounced according to its terms in toto and new treaties entered upon. At any rate, without going into the reasons why that was not done, it was not done in the previous administration and it has not been done in this administration, and I think for the same reasons that prompted and that were given in the last administration; but, for some cause or other, it has not thus far been considered advisable to denounce those treaties. It may be that it would impose a great deal of hard work upon the State Department to enter upon new negotiations and to contract new treaties; but suppose it should do that, suppose it should involve a considerable amount of effort and work on the part of the State Department. These old treaties are out of date and are obsolete anyway, their terms provide how and when they may be terminated, and we should not be violating any of them by adopting the course provided for and expressly set forth in the treaties in denouncing them. Either party to them, respectively, has that right by their very terms.

What I am claiming now is that the President, while refusing and declining absolutely to execute a mandate of Congress, undertakes to lecture Congress because it indulges in debate on a measure which he proposes; in other words, he says in his address:

> I am trying to emphasize a responsibility which can not be met by one branch of the Government alone. There is call for congressional expression, not mere avoidance. I am not seeking now to influence the Senate's decision, but I am appealing for some decision.

He says that Congress ought to go along with him, but he is unwilling to go along with Congress. Here is a law authorizing and directing the President to do certain things. The President refuses to do those things. The law lays down a definite, clear, expressed policy which Congress feels ought to be pursued with reference to this whole question, but the President says, "I do not agree with you about that." He then goes further and in effect says, "This is not a matter for the Executive alone, but it is a matter for both legislative and executive branches of the Government to take hold of, and you must do as I say in connection with it. I am unwilling to do what you decide is the proper thing to do; I refuse to do it; but you must cooperate with me by doing what I want; and if you do not cooperate with me, I will take you to task about it; I will call you 'impotent'; I will say you are indulging in obstructive tactics; I will say that you are unreasonably wasting time in handling these great public questions; in other words, "you must go along with me as I go, but I am unwilling to go with you in the direction which you determine is the right road to travel." I merely mention that in connection with the position which seems to be emphasized by the President's observation.

I also call attention to his further remark, which is quite serious either in the way of a notice or a threat. In any case, it is quite significant when the President says:

> Then, if Congress fails in providing the requested alternative measure, the executive branch of the Government may proceed as best it can to end the losses in liquidation and humiliation.

Does that mean that if the pending bill shall not be passed, then the President is to give orders to the Shipping Board, and the Shipping Board shall immediately tie up all the ships, abandon all the routes and discontinue all the services, and absolutely and entirely cease all kinds of operation? Is that what we are to understand by that observation?

Again, we are confronted with what Congress thought was the wisest thing to do. It is true that in the act of 1920 the policy announced at the beginning of the act is stated in this language:

> That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency.

I quite agree with that. There is no use to argue with anybody, it seems to me, on that proposition. There is no use publishing articles in the newspapers and taking up a lot of time trying to impress that upon the country. But I think we were unfortunate in the act of 1920—I did not think so at the time, for I did not think it would be construed as it apparently is about to be construed—when we used this expression:

> Ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States.

To-day I would strike that language out; I would not promise that the Government was to retire wholly from the ownership and operation of merchant ships. Even if I expected that to be done I would not say so. The effect of that language has been to give the excuse to the Shipping Board for a half-hearted make-believe Government operation; the effect of that has been to enable them to claim justification for pretended, temporary, soon to be discontinued, Government operation, which has been a liquidating process, as I have said, and not operation as a going concern. How could they expect ever to build up the business when they announced to the world, "in a short time we expect to be entirely out of it, and we are only doing this now as a temporary measure because we have got the ships on our hands and we do not know what else to do with them except to operate some of them; but we do not seriously mean to make a business of operating ships; we are doing this simply as something we can not avoid doing for a short period, but expect and intend to get out of in a very short time?"

The result has been, of course, that the whole process has been unsatisfactory and the whole undertaking has fallen down, largely by reason of the lack of effort to make it a serious work and to make a success of operating ships. Even then we used the word "ultimately"—not now, not at once, not immediately, but ultimately we expected that these ships would pass into private hands. The act continues:

> And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine; and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws, keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

In addition to that, in paragraph 4, on page 2, the act provides:

> The board shall have full power and authority to complete or conclude any construction work begun in accordance with the provisions of such acts or parts of acts if, in the opinion of the board, the completion or conclusion thereof is for the best interests of the United States.

We gave the board power to go on and complete ships, showing that we did not intend at once to abandon all Government ownership or control or operation.

Then, in reference to the sale of vessels, we provided:

> SEC. 5. That, in order to accomplish the declared purpose of this act and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell as soon as practicable—

Not now; not at once, necessarily—> consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, at public or private competitive sale, after appraisement and due advertisement—

And so forth.

Further on in the same section it is provided:

> The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of, the available supply of, and the demand for vessels; existing freight rates and prospects of their maintenance; the cost of constructing vessels of similar type under prevailing conditions, as well as the cost of the construction or purchase price of the vessels to be sold; and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell.

That is the policy, that is the principle upon which we have instructed the Shipping Board to proceed; yet, if I can read between the lines here, the President indicates very clearly that it has been apparently the policy of the Shipping Board all along, and is now their purpose, to cease Government operation entirely, tie up the ships, abandon the routes, and give up the services in which they have been heretofore employed if Congress does not pass this bill.

That would be a clear violation of the law which we have laid down. If this bill fails, and does not pass, the previous acts of Congress are not thereby repealed. The alternative is, "Live up to the laws which are before you, and which you have been required to execute and ordered to execute; carry out the policies heretofore adopted by Congress." That is the thing to do if we refuse to do something else. They are not without statutory authority and power. Congress has expressed itself, determined this whole question, put it into the law, and directed the President to execute the law.

The responsibility is on him. He refuses to carry out a mandate of Congress, and now he proposes to disregard what has been set forth in the legislation where we said we expected the ships ultimately to pass to private ownership, but in the meantime we would not part with them except under conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell.

We said further, in section 7:

> That the board is authorized and directed to investigate and determine as promptly as possible after the enactment of this act and from time to time thereafter what steamship lines should be established and put in operation from ports in the United States or any Territory, district, or possession thereof to such world and domestic markets as in its judgment are desirable for the promotion, development, expansion, and maintenance of the foreign and coastwise trade of the United States and an adequate postal service, and to determine the type, size, speed, and other requirements of the vessels to be employed upon such lines and the frequency and regularity of their sailings, with a view to furnishing adequate, regular, certain, and permanent service. The board is authorized to sell, and if a satisfactory sale can not be made, to charter such of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board, as will meet these requirements to responsible persons who are citizens of the United States who agree to establish and maintain such lines upon such terms of payment and other conditions as the board may deem just and necessary to secure and maintain the service desired; and if any such steamship line is deemed desirable and necessary, and if no such citizen can be secured to supply such service by the purchase or charter of vessels on terms satisfactory to the board, the board shall operate vessels on such line until the business is developed so that such vessels may be sold on satisfactory terms and the service maintained, or unless it shall appear within a reasonable time that such line can not be made self-sustaining.

Then on down in other clauses of the same section, we said:

Provided further, That where steamship lines and regular service have been established and are being maintained by ships of the board at the time of the enactment of this act, such lines and service shall be maintained by the board until, in the opinion of the board, the maintenance thereof is unbusinesslike and against the public interests: And provided further, That whenever the board shall determine, as provided in this act, that trade conditions warrant the establishment of a service or additional service under Government administration where a service is already being given by persons, citizens of the United States, the rates and charges for such Government service shall not be less than the cost thereof, including a proper interest and depreciation charge on the value of Government vessels and equipment employed therein.

So that, from the language here, the scope and purpose of the act, as expressing the intention of Congress, was that the board should carefully investigate and ascertain the routes and services that needed attention and, if they could not charter the ships to operate on all routes, to put in the Shipping Board ships and operate those routes themselves. Of course, that was not to continue indefinitely if it was an absolutely losing business. I grant that; but two years is a comparatively short time in the life of a great undertaking. This act was passed in June, 1920. Undoubtedly some of these ships have rendered valuable service and with a considerable profit to the Government. All of them are not total failures; not all of them are creating these colossal losses that are talked about. There is ample time yet to determine what the Government will do with reference to these ships. There has not been any sincere, bona fide effort at Government operation up to this time. There has been no test with reference to that.

I say that the law of 1920, the previous legislation, all that the Congress has done in connection with this merchant marine are wholly inconsistent with any purpose to abandon immediately the routes and services and tie up these ships; and if the president of the Shipping Board pursues that course, it will be done in defiance of Congress and in the teeth of the mandate of the legislative branch of this Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator's position is this: The Congress of the United States adopted a specific plan for the development of its merchant marine. The President was charged with the execution of that plan, and, among other things, was directed to serve notice upon the other nations that we preferred to do away with the conventions which provided for reciprocity; and, notwithstanding the fact that that plan was approved by President Wilson when he approved the bill, nothing has been done toward carrying out those provisions, either by President Wilson or by President Harding. In other words, the policy of the Congress of the United States in that behalf has been ignored. Is that right?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. The language was—

And the President is hereby authorized and directed within 90 days after this act becomes law to give notice—

And so forth. It has been ignored, frankly, upon the ground, apparently, that they did not consider it advisable to carry out that law. What I am saying is said with the utmost respect to the President and in all good will; but I am simply mentioning this in response to his scolding, if we may call it that, of the Senate for what he calls delay in action upon this bill and evidence of impotency, when he ought to remember that Congress has expressed in law its policy on the subject, and he, as the Executive, has refused absolutely to carry it out.

I had reached the point of dealing with this subject of Government operation, and I want to dwell somewhat further on that point. I have stated that there never has been any effort made to operate the ships by the Government successfully. Going back beyond the present board, it seemed to be assumed that the Government should not compete with, but only do the things that would help, private owners.

I have recently had some correspondence with a gentleman who is well informed and thoroughly posted on this subject in general, and as to some specific matters in particular, Mr. Nelson Collins, and he has furnished me a very interesting statement covering the history of what he calls "The Government civilian fleet."

I have his permission to make use of these facts, which I consider pertinent, as showing what the Government can do and one reason why it is able to boast of having done so little:

What came to be called in maritime circles "the New York office" was the branch of the Shipping Board that actually ran all the ships—165 of them at the maximum—that the Government held in one great civilian fleet throughout the war. There were many ships operated by private companies—the Army Transport Service also ran ships with civilian crews throughout the war—but this was the separate governmental civilian undertaking. While other offices in Washington and New York and Philadelphia devised policy, or built ships, or assigned cargoes and routes, or tabulated statistics, or investigated and investigated and investigated, this was the office charged with getting the ships in and out of port, storing them, manning them, repairing them, keeping them at sea as much as possible and at piers as little as possible. A hundred and sixty-five ships and 8,000 seagoing men was what the term "the New York office" came to mean in the clipped speech of the shipping world, with a perfected arrangement of piers and offices and repair yards and manning headquarters ashore.

Capt. Charles Yates was the head of the organization, Capt. E. P. McCaulder the marine superintendent, Walter Scott the supervising engineer, W. H. J. Reynolds the commissary superintendent. They operated nearer to the normal civilian basis than anybody else; than even the private companies, dominated and interefered with as the private companies were throughout the war by numerous governmental war agencies.

The ships of "the New York office" were on the runs to France and England and Italy and Russia; went coastwise to Atlantic South America and through the Panama Canal to Pacific South America; ran down to Cuba and Porto Rico, carried coal from Newport News to New England. Its ships carried 20 per cent of all the supplies taken to Europe under the United States flag for both our own armies and our allies. The office devised and executed its own repair system for both the incidental voyage repairs and the semiannual general overhaul. It had its own legal bureau. It maintained a system of guarding its ships in port, under W. H. Moore, that kept its great fleet throughout the war without a single serious fire or theft. Its commissary operated in 1918 at 86 cents per man per day with satisfied crews and a variety and value in its food that led to many inquiries from private companies. It handled its own manning problems and its shipping office at No. 5 Greenwich Street, under John J. Daly, never failed to keep the ships supplied with crews, in regular routine or emergency call. This shipping office was used as the basis of the Government's shipping-office system when the Shipping Board reorganized its operations in a peace-time program. It established a complete system of medical inspection and treatment under Dr. W. H. Meiners.

"The New York office" got started early in April of 1917. Captain Yates came over to New York from Washington with only a slip of paper that certified his authority from the Shipping Board. He at once organized the protection and the overhaul of the interned German liners until the Navy was in shape to take them over. Within a week Captain Yates let $7,000,000 of verbal repair contracts on the German ships, the great dockyards proceeding upon his simple assurance that the Government would, as time permitted, put the engagements he made into formal instruments. Weeks were thus saved in getting the great German liners to sea.

The first three ex-German ships were repaired, manned with civilian officers and crews, and at loading berth for cargo one month after the declaration of war, and before Congress passed the resolution authorizing the President to take over the ships and operate them. The Clara Mennig, renamed the Yadkin, was the first ship got to sea. She was out within three weeks. The first ship to make a European port was the Maia, in command of Capt. Louis Lefevre. Captain Lefevre was shortly after transferred to command the Artemis, a big ship and a fast one, and in her he added to his record of getting the first Shipping Board ship to a foreign port, the bigger record of making the fastest turn arounds, and the greatest number of them in the fleet throughout the war.

But this necessary offhand and verbal method of handling the ex-German ships at the outset immediately gave way to careful and economical organization. The Atlantic fleet of "the New York office" started with six ships only and a dead-weight—that means, roughly, cargo-carrying—tonnage of 28,828 in May of 1917. A year later, when the United States was swinging into the fullness of its war effort, the fleet was 128 ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 810,562. It was the greatest fleet of merchant ships that ever has been gathered into one operating unit under the United States flag. Besides these that the office actually operated thirty-odd more were in its possession at times for repair or for a single voyage. An idea of the operating problem is afforded by the fact that the fleet in May of 1918 was twice the number of ships that it had been three months before, in February. As a matter of crews and supplies and repair yards and office force, that increase is a strain on an organization. In March of 1918 there were 88 ships, and the next month, April, there were 122, which meant more than a ship a day during the entire month assimilated by the Government's operating office for manning and running. Back in May, 1917, the second month of us in the war, the ships under the New York office steamed 6,963 miles, all of it to Europe, for there was no time as yet for ships to be headed home again. In May of the next year, 1918, the ships under the New York office steamed 345,244 miles.

The record for actual war service of this fleet will stand at approximately 3,000,000 ship miles, 200,000,000 ship-ton days (the number of days a single ton of shipping might be imagined as sailing the seas), and 20,000,000 ship-ton miles (the number of times a ton of cargo-carrying shipping went a mile). It employed 8,000 civilian ship officers and men at sea. It standardized the commissary of ships, it solved important manning problems and labor relations and it systematized repairs.

It lost 13 ships, 8 destroyed by submarines, 1 destroyed by internal explosion of its TNT cargo, 2 sunk in collisions, and 2 lost in storms.

The way the work progressed is typically expressed in a telegraphic report to Washington July 14, 1917, three months and a week after the state of war was declared:

"Summary work New York office close of this week as follows: 17 ocean-going ships and 4 harbor craft now in full commission. Fourteen ocean-going ships to be commissioned during month August. Three ocean-going ships to be commissioned after August. Sixteen large passenger-ships with repairs from 5 to 90 per cent complete chartered to Navy Department as transports. Four ocean-going ships loaned Panama Railway Steamship Co. Seven ex-Austrian ships not yet purchased by Government. Total, 65 ships, over 500,000 gross tons, or approximately 750,000 tons dead weight."

* * * The one advantage that the New York office had then and inescapably would have had in a peace-time existence over any private shipping corporation was the prestige of the Government for financial and operating accommodations, particularly in foreign ports. That is bound to attach to it, but again the advantage is more apparent than real, for the financial prestige of any successful office handling so many ships is quite sufficient for all purposes and carries with it the operating accommodations and courtesies, such few as may from time to time be exacted in relations with jealous foreign competitors.

Nothing can be conceived in which the Government fleet was not on all fours with the private companies, the bigger of them. Aside from routing and stevedoring everything had to be done by the particular office that had the ships assigned to it, and in the case of the New York office it meant a hundred and fifty ships. The scaling of ship's boilers is a good illustration. This is a dirty job that has to be done each voyage with each ship, and the office had to keep its force of men competent and willing for such a task in a state of constant efficiency.

The ships went on all the routes, the great trunk thoroughfares of the liners and the little poking side trips of the tramps. They sailed constantly from New York or Newport News or Baltimore or Philadelphia or Halifax. Sometimes a new ship—just finding herself in stress of seas—came around from Seattle or San Francisco. * * *

The greatest service of the New York office was in fighting the fight for civilian life in merchant ships throughout the war, in keeping the pride of the civilian system alive for growth in times of peace by showing that it did not break down in morale and organization in time of war. How much that was needed is shown by the care of countries greater at sea than we are to keep the civilian aspects of life in their merchant marine intact throughout the war, and how it might have failed is shown by the ease with which such a problem was ignored by every other agency of Government or private shipping. The New York office by its size and equally by its effectiveness was the center of the whole civilian maritime system. Here also, of necessity, was the only great experiment in Government ownership and operation of ships. The New York office, by the very fact that it became willy-nilly a great example, was under all kinds of experienced technical observation. Some were hopeful of its success, many were hopeful of its failure.

I want to say right here, Mr. President, in answer to a suggestion made by the Senator from Washington yesterday to the effect that those who oppose this bill are speaking the language of British shipping, that nothing would bring greater joy to British shipping and to our other competitors on the high seas than for the United States Government to cease to own and operate merchant ships. There is no question about that. If the United States lines now operating across the Atlantic were turned over to private enterprise, if those ships were sold to individuals, and they undertook to operate them in that service, it is within the power of the British and our other competitors on the high seas to put the entire line out of business within 30 days, and I have no question but that they would do it. They would proceed to do that now if it were not for the fact that the United States Government owns those ships and is behind the operation of that line. That is the only thing that saves us at all. There is no doubt, in my judgment, that if this bill passes—though I do not believe it will—within a few years, possibly 10 years, after subsidies have been paid for that length of time, the American flag will disappear from the seas so far as foreign commerce is concerned, and we will find ourselves just where we were in 1914. The only way to make certain that American ships, owned by Americans, flying the American flag, and serving American commerce, shall be continued, and that that flag shall wave from port to port around the world as the talisman of a world commerce, is for the United States to own and operate a sufficient number of ships to secure protection to our commerce through just and reasonable rates and the service which our people need in their overseas trade. There is no doubt at all but that Great Britain would like to see this shipping bill fail, provided the President proceeds, as he indicates in his message he may do, to tie up all the ships we own and cease to operate a single ship in a single service or over a single route already established.

That is exactly what Great Britain would like to have done; but if this bill is not passed, if the Shipping Board will proceed as we authorized them in the act of 1920, which is still in force and never has been repealed, to operate those ships where they are needed, where they can serve our commerce, tie them up where they incur losses of a serious character, and wait for the time when they can be put out into the trade profitably, but hold them and not give them away and pay somebody to take them—if they will pursue that policy and continue to operate the United States Lines, because it is a profit-making line, as I propose to show, so as to serve our overseas trade and build up and develop our markets, it will be the saddest day and the day of the greatest apprehension and disappointment that ever came to British shipping. That is a thing they do not want. They do not care anything about the subsidy. They do not care anything about any other process that looks to liquidating these ships. They want us to liquidate. What they dread and what our competitors everywhere dread is the assurance that this Government proposes to own and operate merchant ships in sufficient quantity to serve our trade.

I do not mean that I advocate the Government taking over all shipping from individuals, or to discourage private enterprise. On the contrary, the very policy which I have outlined, if put into effect, would encourage private enterprise, would help individuals to build ships and develop trade and privately owned shipping. The Government would merely supplement what is needed and take care of our people in reference to foreign markets and overseas trade.

Mr. Collins further says:

Every month of increasing effectiveness in operation seemed to make Captain Yates, its managing head, less confident of permanence for the great organization he was welding. "It is safe for a reasonable length of time, if it is mediocre," was his intimate reply to any congratulations. "Real success will give it too many enemies." Reared in the Coast and Geodetic Survey Bureau at Washington, he knew the red-tape dangers of any Washington overlordship upon the office. "I dread the bureaucrats more than I do the American Steamship Owners' Association," he used to say when objection of shipping corporations to it as a growing example of Government operation was repeated to him. His whole policy was to make the New York office the autonomous center of Government ship operation, responsible to Washington, the division of operations of the Shipping Board there, for results, but not for day-by-day procedure.

A great seaport not a great national capital was the right seat for full and final practical operating authority. At Washington the concern was and could profitably only be with ship construction and with general questions of administration, the relations of the Shipping Board with the President, with the two Houses of Congress, with foreign shipping, with the War Department and the Navy Department, with the contacts that any governmental department must maintain throughout the country. Washington was the natural seat of nearly all such activities, though as a matter of fact Mr. Schwab finally secured the transfer of shipbuilding headquarters offices from Washington to Philadelphia, because the greatest shipbuilding plant, Hog Island, was there and along the Delaware also were the greatest private shipbuilding plants of the country. By the same sound reasoning the management and operation of ships needed headquarters at New York, the chief port of the country, and management and operation in other ports of the country, in Philadelphia, Boston, Savannah, Newport News, New Orleans—everything on the Atlantic and the Gulf or that came around to these ports from the Pacific coast and from the Great Lakes—needed to be in relation to New York first of all and in relation to Washington only secondly through New York. For more than a year this autonomy of the operating office was maintained. It was the principle of Captain Yates's entire administration of the office. But the bureaucrats he feared and the private shipping men in the Washington offices saw alike in this matter. The general accounting office of the Shipping Board in Washington insisted upon including the New York office accounts in its general mess of financial records, and so the orderly financial showing of voyage by voyage was lost. The next vitiation came when Washington decided along in the summer of 1918 that all other ports should be shorn from New York, and instead of operating with New York and through the New York office to the other functions of the Shipping Board in Washington should report direct to Washington, which would then communicate with New York. It was like telling ships in convoy to wireless direct to their owners and then notify the flagship in case something suddenly happened aboard or as though the shipping control committee had elected to function from Washington instead of from New York, where the ships centered. Captain Yates protested this shearing away and offered his resignation, but the resignation was refused; we were in the middle of the war, and he kept at his post.

Now, what finally happened? This venture was a success. Its very success was its undoing. I am showing now that back in 1917 and 1918, as well as all along, the Shipping Board never intended to have the Government operate the ships with any degree of permanency or success.

He said further:

In the late autumn of 1918 and cumulatively on into the spring of 1919 announcement was made from Washington that every appointment to a ship must be referred there for approval, that no appointment must be considered made, however minor the post to be filled, until Washington had passed on it. It was becoming apparent, too, that no friendliness for the fleet as a fleet existed anywhere, either in private shipping offices or in Shipping Board circles. Incapable it could have been commended and dismissed, but successful it became too formidable an argument for Government ownership and operation, with all the disliked supervisions and comparisons that might mean for private companies owning and operating. The President was busy with peace conference plans and could not be appealed to. The knowledge that the fleet was doomed seriously discouraged the men at sea in the fleet and their inquiries as to their future were anxious. On January 21, 1919, Captain Yates sent a letter to the Director of Operations at Washington, Mr. J. H. Rossiter, part of which was as follows:

"Under dates of January 10 and 11 Mr. Hitchcock wired, instructing us to take over various steamers from Navy management and reman with Shipping Board crews. This was also confirmed by letter on January 11 by Mr. Clegg (of the shipping control committee). * * * We immediately made arrangements to provide men * * *, as you will appreciate it is impossible to pick up first-class officers at the last moment. * * * As the vessels were practically new it was our desire to man them with officers whom we knew were efficient, also having in mind, in order to avoid dissention, promotion for the men to a better-class vessel. We therefore transferred men from some of the smaller steamers under our management, replacing them with others. After all arrangements had been made we were advised that the steamship Willimantic and the steamship West Kyska would continue with Navy crew.

"We also desire to call your attention to the circumstances in connection with the steamship Sacarappa. We were requested by your office to man this vessel, and the necessary arrangements were made accordingly and a crew placed aboard. We were informed that the steamer had been assigned to the Red Star Line to load from New York to Antwerp, and, under instructions from the division of operations, the vessel was ordered to this port. Yesterday morning we were advised that this assignment had been canceled, and to-day we are advised by your office that the ship had been assigned to A. H. Bull & Co. for management and operation. In other words, after we had placed crew aboard and made every arrangement, the vessel was withdrawn from our management.

"Officers and men who had been in our employ for a long time were picked by us to man these ships, and most of these men prefer to remain with this organization rather than go with private companies. On the other hand, if they do go, it causes dissatisfaction on their part, and, as far as we are concerned, it means that private operators are given the advantages of the pick of our organization, which has taken us some time to build up. We are then obliged to fill their places with new men with whom we have had no previous experience or check as to their efficiency.

"We fully appreciate that there are a good many problems involved in the allocation and assignment of vessels; but the officers and crews do not appreciate this, and, after all, the success of the future American merchant marine, which we all have in mind at the present time, largely depends on these men.

"We have felt that we should call this matter to your attention, having in mind that it might be possible to make some arrangement whereby instances of this kind could be avoided in the future."

This brought back a prompt reply setting forth the policy the Shipping Board meant to follow, though there had been no formal minute of it in any proceedings, no open announcement of it, no authorization of it that had been made public or submitted to Congress. It meant the end of the Government civilian fleet and was followed within a few days by the resignation of Captain Yates, whose far-sighted policy for the fleet had been thus thrown to the discard.

Captain Yates was an experienced shipping man, a civil engineer by profession, highly educated and trained, and served in the Coast and Geodetic Survey for some years as commander of vessels and in the field work and was in charge of this business in New York by direction of the Shipping Board.

Now, listen to this reply from Mr. Rossiter, director of operations for the Shipping Board:

* * *, it is the declared policy of the Shipping Board to assign all its tonnage to private concerns, both for operation and management, as rapidly as possible. This with the view of building up and assisting private enterprise in organization for the increased American merchant marine.

In view of this fact, direct management of ships from the New York office of the Division of Operations must be considered only an emergency measure, and assignment of ships to that office for management is only temporary and to be terminated as rapidly as these ships can be assigned for private management.

It should be the policy of your office, in conformity with the policy of the board, to assist officers and men who have been directly in the employ of the Shipping Board to posts with private companies and explain to them the policy of the board in order to prevent dissatisfaction. * * *

Just think of that. There is an order issued by the director of operations of the Shipping Board to the official in charge of the New York office and this great civilian fleet which he has been trying to build up, that—

It is the policy of the board to assign all its tonnage to private concerns, both for operation and management, as rapidly as possible. This with the view of building up and assisting private enterprise in organization for the increased merchant marine.

That was the policy back in 1918. It has been the policy ever since. How could we ever hope to succeed under such conditions as that? No matter what the men in charge of the ships did in order to increase business and to build up trade and to make a success of their undertaking, here they were on notice all the time that the policy was simply an emergency measure, that they would be expected to help private enterprise, really, on every occasion to serve private enterprise, and that they must yield every kind of advantage that they might gain by efficiency and energy and skill in order that private shipping might ultimately be in command of the whole situation.

Mr. Collins concludes:

That letter really formally marked the end of the Government civilian fleet and the beginning of a policy, informally and rapidly put into action late in 1918, to prevent a successful Government-owned, Government-managed, and Government-operated fleet from being in evidence as a working possibility in devising permanent maritime policy. The unexpected slump in shipping business came and the Government was the owner of four-sevenths of the tonnage afloat under the United States flag, so that it was not so easy as had been hastily assumed for private shipping corporations to take possession of the whole field again, but the great fleet laboriously organized to a position of complete competence was at least out of the way.

Now, that is an illustration of what has been done in the past and it shows also what has been the continued policy and effort up to the present time, and yet we are told that the Government can not efficiently and successfully operate merchant ships.

After this was brought to my attention, which only confirmed what I had before every reason to believe had been the policy and course with reference to Government operation, I became absolutely convinced that there never had been any purpose or effort made by the Government to operate successfully the ships.

The present board by its own admissions and record makes a showing that it never intended that the Government should own and operate ships except temporarily and to as limited an extent as possible. Whatever has been accomplished in the way of approaching public satisfaction has been done in spite of their plans.

Another correspondent expresses this view:

Now, what will the passage of the subsidy bill mean? First, the tying up of possibly all of our 1,200 freight vessels, which are the real backbone of any merchant marine, for no private company will take over a losing proposition.

This is his conclusion regarding the results if the bill is enacted into law:

Second. The grabbing of all our fine passenger vessels which are now earning revenues and in addition will draw large amounts from the Government, and toward this end certain of the heads of the Shipping Board have already laid plans, along with certain shipping men who are pushing the bill, and if there are not enough plums to go around then money will be borrowed from the Government at 2 per cent interest to build more fast passenger vessels that will participate in the subsidy. Third, the Government will have to either destroy the freight vessels, scrap them, or maintain a force to look after them. There will have to be a large accounting force to distribute funds to the various steamship companies and vessels.

The writer further says:

Under the subsidy bill the George Washington will draw from the Government approximately $500,000 per annum in addition to the enormous revenues shown, while the freight ships can only draw at the very most—figuring 220 days at sea during the year—$11,000; or, in other words, a first-class freight vessel will draw from the Government in a year less than she is now losing on one single voyage, while the Leviathan can draw as much as $3,000,000.

* * * * * * *

Another example, the steamship Minnekahda, of the Atlantic Transport Co., a subsidiary company of the International Mercantile Marine, a British-owned vessel, partially, under American registery, will draw more money on this one vessel from the subsidy than the Pacific Mail will draw on all 11 of their vessels, and the Pacific Mail is a pure American steamship company.

* * * * * * *

Can any reasonable man think that our merchant marine can become dependent on fifty million or more of the people's money for a number of years and then be dropped flat and still hold up? No; because a subsidy places a premium on waste, extravagance, careless operation, while to let the steamship companies go after their own profits as other classes of business, forces economy, thrift, ingenuity, and hard work to survive in competition.

He continues:

I am not considering the question of whether this is a raid on the United States Treasury or not, but simply whether it will be a benefit or a detriment to our merchant marine, and I can without hesitation say I feel sure it will be the greatest blow to a real substantial merchant marine and shipping industry of any legislation that could possibly be concocted, because it turns our steamship men into a bunch of swag grabbers, and the ones who are not in on the loot are forced out of business altogether.

The United States Lines and the Panama Line are two Government-owned lines and both are making money, while all the private lines that are handling our vessels are losing for the Government—not themselves—millions. Why not either operate the vessels for the people and by the people, sell them outright and let the purchasers compete with foreign shipping, assisted by sane shipping laws, or, if we must turn them over to private companies, do so on bareboat charter and not continue to encourage American shipping men to look for their profits from the pockets of American taxpayers rather than from the legitimate profits made on the carriage of cargo and passengers in competition with other nations, who have no better ships—not as good, for most of ours burn oil—have not as good crews, though ours are paid a very little more, and have no better facilities, though they have better shipping laws, and that is their sole advantage.

I have discussed this bill with the heads of various departments who really know the shipping business and are familiar with the bill, and they all agree that the bill will work contrary to the real purpose Congress and the people think it is intended.

* * * * * * *

There are certain routes on which we run our vessels, which have been a dead loss to us, and certain private American steamship companies have offered to take over these runs with their own vessels, but for reasons better known to those higher up these offers have been declined, viz: Black Diamond Steamship Co. operates vessels to European ports at heavy loss, the Luckenback Steamship Co. offered to take over this run.

That illustrates some ways in which mistakes are being made in reference to this matter.

I have an interesting letter from another correspondent who states:

It appears that in shifting of vessels from one operator the crews are almost invariably changed, offering no inducement or incentive to the crews to keep their vessels in good condition. These changes have been made shortly before sailing, giving the new crews insufficient opportunity to get familiar with the condition of the machinery, etc., resulting in breakdowns, towage, interrupted schedules and worse than all a bad reputation for the ship with shippers. This could and should have been prevented and remedied by the Shipping Board itself. Their reason for not doing so, so I am informed, is that they want the managing agent to have a "free hand." Therefore, this loss is not properly chargeable to Government operation but a lack of it.

Suggestions have been put forward from time to time of devising a bonus schedule for officers and crew as an inducement to economical operation—these have likewise been rejected on the ground that the board expected to abandon its operations.

This is a pertinent suggestion which any intelligent, well-informed citizen would feel is worth considering, and the people of this country are thinking about that.

How can it be said, then, that these ships are being operated as economically as possible under Government supervision? This announcement and repeated assertion on the part of the board itself that it proposed to abandon its operations has tended to discredit it with business men, who desire something permanent and dependable to assure them of proper service. The shippers of the world would be glad to do business with us if, in their own hearts, they felt that the service would be permanent and dependable. The reports of Shipping Board foreign agents emphasize this fact.

There is no reason why a bonus scheme could not be made workable for officers and crews as an inducement to economy. The Shipping Board has established similar schemes to induce operators to save money. I refer to allowances made to ships for stores and food consumption. Capt. W. E. Griffith, manager of the operating department, an ex-shipmaster of considerable experience, could, if permitted and free from the influences prevailing in the board, give valuable information on this matter.

It may be broadly stated as true that our losses have been due more to a failure of the board to exercise its authority than to its exercise of that power.

He says further:

I am inclosing herewith clipping from the New York Herald of January 29 showing how the German ships are profiting by present exchange rates. The object and purpose of the subsidy bill, as claimed by its proponents, is to equalize operating costs between American ships and British ships. How are they going to equalize so as to enable American ships to meet German, Swedish, and other maritime nations' competition? It is obvious that they have embarked upon a road that leads to an impossible end.

That clipping says:

The announcement that the big German steamship companies—the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg American Line—are to redeem on April 1 bonds that originally brought about $25,000,000 for about $3,500, on the basis of 28,000 marks to the dollar, serves to bring into sharp relief the great advantage in competitive operation given shipowners of countries with depreciated currencies.

Of course a subsidy can not be provided that will equalize such a difference as that in the value of the dollar.

My correspondent continues:

Capt. Daniel A. J. Sullivan, last fall before a convention of the American Naval Architects and Engineers in New York, "bluntly told shipowners that more efficiency in the conduct of their business would place them on a par with their foreign rivals in point of operating costs"—quoting from the New York Herald.

A closer study of efficiency methods, he said, would develop valuable data which could be placed in the hands of the shipmaster, and he should be made directly responsible for economical operation and encouraged by a bonus system. This scheme has been employed by the Swedes and Norwegians with marked success.

* * * * * * *

Again referring to the "economy" of the present administration of the board, you might profitably ask why they had the barge Wasayga towed from the Azores in December, 1921, resulting in the stranding of the Manatee, tug Butterfield, at Bermuda, a loss to the board of upward of $100,000, when the barge was not worth more than $20,000. They performed this towage at the worst season of the year against the advice of seagoing men.

You might ask them why they sent the West Cotomska out from Baltimore on trans-Atlantic voyage June 3, 1922, with only 2,400 tons cargo, revenue $13,434.93, without any return cargo in sight, well knowing the expense of that voyage would approximate $30,000. I am merely citing this not as an isolated instance but as a sample of what has been happening under this so-called economy program. Many others could be enumerated.

This is somewhat in line with what happened back in 1918, and this correspondent especially emphasizes what I have already mentioned that they can not expect to succeed or to make money or to avoid losses in operating ships so long as they are doing it not as a going business, but as a temporary emergency matter, with notice to all the world that they propose to throw it up and quit just as soon as they can get somebody to take the ships off their hands.

The Senator from Minnesota intimates that politics of a partisan character is promoting those opposed to this bill. I candidly believe that a majority of Senators are opposed to the bill, but, considering the majority of 22 on the Senator's side, it would seem unwarranted to address his appeal to this side as if all the opposition existed here and no support.

He says a vote against this bill means a vote to scrap our ships. I have great respect for his judgment and confidence in his sincerity, but as in the case of any conscientious, capable man his conclusions will be erroneous if his premises are wrong, and his premises will likely be wrong if he has been misled as to the facts—if he has failed to get them all before him. I apprehend the Senator has reached a hasty conclusion based upon an incomplete examination of all the facts. For instance, if I own a vessel and decline to sell it for about one-third its real value under a contract by which I would have agreed to pay the purchaser annually many thousand dollars, depending upon the size and speed of the vessel, to operate her for a period of 10 years, which he might have extended for 5 years more, I do not thereby lose or destroy my vessel; I still have the vessel to use, enjoy, charter, or sell as my interest may determine. If I decide to sell the vessel in the instance stated, then I would not only lose her, but bind myself to pay out a certain annual benefit to the purchaser. Furthermore, if I keep my vessel I am relieved of that obligation and burden, and I have the vessel to dispose of or employ as I see fit so long as she lives.

I can tie her up if no one wants her, or I can put her in service as conditions warrant. In the first instance, if I sell her, she is worse than scrap, because she carries with her a towline on my purse for 15 years. In the instance when I hold her she is still mine and is not scrapped at all, but is available for service when needed.

I can very well see how those who have a selfish interest to serve—those who get some benefits under a bill like this—should make every effort to have it passed, and those are about the only people who are lobbying here and bringing pressure to bear on the administration and Congress to have it passed.

It is reported, for instance, that the marine engineers, numbering 22,000, have withdrawn from the American Federation of Labor because that organization opposes the bill. The shipbuilders, some of them, believe it will help them. The ship operators believe it will help them. The United States Chamber of Commerce, composed of large manufacturers, think it will help them, and they are for it. They opposed the building of the ships. They have always opposed steps leading to the first thing to be done in the way of establishing an American merchant marine—getting the ships. Now they want to turn over the ships to private enterprise and have the Government discontinue its operation and cease to own the ships. That organization is mainly an aggregation of large manufacturers, and they favored the high protective tariff bill, the latest monstrosity of that kind, known as the Fordney-McCumber bill, which provides that whenever repairs are made in a foreign country on any American ships the owner must add 50 per cent of the cost of those repairs to his taxes in this country. He must pay 50 per cent of the cost of the repairs into the Treasury of the United States under the tariff act which we passed last year. That is a distinct handicap to American shipping. It means a tremendous burden on the American shipowner. He must either have all his repair work done in American yards at the prices which prevail here, or if he is obliged to have any of it done in foreign yards, he must add 50 per cent to the cost of it in the way of a tax upon that amount of expenditure. Repairs are very important on all these ships. They can not all be done in American yards. With any shipowner the item of repairs is the chief, the primary, source of expense and outgo, and that has to be watched very carefully. These people were in favor of that tariff bill which puts that additional handicap and burden on American shipping, and I am not surprised that they favor the ship subsidy bill.

Foreign interests have no objection to this bill. What foreign interests want to see accomplished is for the United States to go out of the shipping business. What disturbs foreign interests is the ownership and operation by the Government. The sooner you can dispose of your ships, cease to own them, and quit operating, the more you please foreign interests. That is the thing to be accomplished by this bill, as alleged by its supporters. It gets rid of the ships. It gets rid of the Shipping Board. That does not bring many tears to my eyes. My plan would be to turn over these ships to the United States Lines and to the Panama Steamship Line, in such proportions as might be determined to be wise as to passenger and cargo ships, and let these organizations take charge of them. If you want to get rid of the Shipping Board, another suggestion is, you can enlarge somewhat the Transportation Bureau in the Department of Commerce, and let that bureau get together a force of competent men and a sufficient organization to handle the ships.

If the Shipping Board wants to bid us good by, God-speed! It was never intended, however, that the Shipping Board should be abolished now, even if the ships are to be sold. There is work for them to do. I have tried to point that out in previous addresses here. There is plenty of work for the Shipping Board to do; but if they are determined that they are going to resign or quit, there are ways of surviving that great catastrophe. We can do one of the things that I mentioned, or we can do another thing: We can apportion these ships that are idle, add to them those that are losing money, if there are such, stop this "colossal loss" spoken of so proudly by the Shipping Board, tie up more of the ships, and then distribute them to the 20 or 21 or 22 harbors and ports along the Atlantic and the Gulf and the Pacific, where they have a sufficient depth of fresh water in which the ships can be anchored, taken care of, and preserved.

Apportion to these different ports these vessels that need to be tied up in order to avoid loss, and see that three or four of them in each port are kept in condition so that they may be put into service on a week's notice. Take care of them, keep them up so that they can sail on a week's notice, and as commerce revives, as business escapes from this period of intense depression, demand for ships will appear and the ships will be wanted and needed, and as they are called for they can be put into service. In the meantime we have them. The expense of taking care of them is almost nominal. It will not cost over $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 a year to care for all these ships in this way and keep up ready for service at least 10 per cent of them; and they are there, available to serve the needs of this country in their overseas trade, to carry their supplies, to bring to them the things they need, and to respond to the demand which will develop as conditions become more normal and light again begins to break for the future.

There are various ways of handling this situation that are perfectly feasible, keeping in mind that we are not compelled to dispose of these ships. We are not in the position of a debtor who is forced to dispose of his property. The act of 1920 says we shall not dispose of them as if we were forced to sell them; we shall sell them only as a prudent business man would dispose of his property. Who ever heard of a prudent business man undertaking to dispose of his assets at a time when there was no market, when there was no demand? Granting that there are no purchasers now for ships, why do you insist that we must now sell our ships? Any prudent business man would hold his property in those circumstances until the demand was created or developed. That demand is bound to come. We need about eight or ten million tons of merchant shipping to carry 50 per cent of our overseas commerce.

Everybody concedes that who knows anything about the subject. We have only about 3,000,000 tons in operation. There will be demand for the remaining 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 tons of this shipping we own now. There is no demand for it at this time. That demand is bound to come, and the sensible thing to do is not to give away our property, and, in addition to practically giving it way, pay somebody an annual amount to take it off our hands. This bill provides for a permanent appropriation of $30,000,000 in one instance, and it provides for various other indirect benefits in various other respects that I need not take time now to relate.

Under this policy then is to be taken from the Treasury every year the annual tonnage dues now forming part of the general revenue, about $4,000,000, and 10 per cent of customs receipts, estimated at $42,500,000, thus necessitating other direct taxation on the people equal to the amount thus taken. Shipowners will receive $4,000,000 without adding a ship or purchasing a single Shipping Board vessel. Not interfering with private business, which some people stress so much, may be carried too far. It may be carried to such an extent that it would prevent people from having sufficient food in a land where food products rot in the fields. It may force them to suffer for lack of fuel with wood and coal within a few miles of them. It may oblige them to do without shelter when good lumber is burned at the mills. It may paralyze all means of distribution where production is abundant. It may shut off production where the means of distribution are sufficient. I conceive it to be worse for the country to be without carriers than for the Government to own and operate the conveyers of our commerce.

There has been some comment to the effect that certain great business interests support this measure, and it has undoubtedly met with the favor of a good many newspapers, apparently. It is conceivable that an advertising fund of over a million dollars, furnished by Congress, adroitly used by an expert, can be very effective in securing publicity of the kind desired. A paid advertisement placed in newspapers will produce returns. The opponents of this bill have had no such fund, no means of conducting a propaganda campaign; and grounds of their opposition, their reasons, their facts, and arguments receive generally but little space, where any at all is given. They have no interest behind them but the public interest, which is slow to develop in the absence of the means of reaching the public. The old saying applies, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. But it would be a mistake to suppose that the public is in ignorance of what is proposed and what is happening.

I have here a statement from the American Farm Bureau Federation, by Mr. Gray Silver, Washington representative, reciting that at the annual convention of the American Bureau Federation this resolution was passed:

Inasmuch as it has been the general policy of this county to subsidize railroads by land grants, bonds, and granting special privileges; manufacturers by a protective tariff, and it is now proposed by those in charge of our general policy to subsidize our shipping interests by the payment to them of a bonus, for all of which the consuming public must foot the bill; we emphatically protest against the continuance of a policy that has become confiscatory instead of protective.

I have a letter here from Mr. T. C. Atkeson, Washington representative of the National Grange, in which he sets forth a copy of a telegram furnished by the master of the Washington State Grange, Mr. A. S. Goss, in reference to the ship subsidy bill, as follows:

WESLEY L. JONES:

Have just read your statement of December 12 that ship subsidy will help farmer more than any other class. Since the farmers are practically certain that this is the opposite of the truth, I would appreciate letter from you for publication showing on what you base your statements.

A. S. Goss,
Master Washington State Grange.

I could furnish other expressions from similar sources of opposition to this bill.

I have a press statement, dated Indianapolis, Ind., February 7, to this effect:

SUBSIDY BILL DENOUNCED.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 7.—After Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, had addressed the board of governors of the International Allied Printing Trades Association, in session here, denouncing especially the contract feature of the ship subsidy bill, the board adopted a resolution indorsing the Federation's stand against the subsidy bill.

* * * * * * *

Every farmers' organization in the country that I know of has expressed itself as opposed to this legislation. The Middle West Merchant Marine Committee reported resolutions which appear to have been adopted at the second annual meeting of the committee, held at Milwaukee, Wis., November 27, 1922, that committee representing 90 of the leading commercial organizations in 17 States, formed for the purpose of getting the producers and consumers of the Middle West in direct and untrammeled touch with the consumers and producers of all other countries.

I ask that these resolutions may be inserted as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICHOLSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 1.)

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a communication here from a gentleman in the Northwest who has made a great study of this matter, Mr. C. C. Gilliland. He says:

I believe in subsidies if necessary, but I want to know when a loss is realized where the money went; and I believe in subsidies if honestly and fairly administered so that the North and the South, the East and the West, will all be treated alike. The present bill before Congress is not truly a subsidy bill; it is masquerading "under false colors." Because of the vicious conditions contained therein, it is my opinion that if passed it will mean the absolute destruction of our merchant marine, and which will also deprive us of our Naval Reserve and transport ships.

That is an expression from a thinker, a patriotic citizen, which I think is worthy of consideration.

In addition to that, Mr. C. E. Bell, of Hillsboro, Ohio, under date of December 15, 1922, speaking about some of the difficulties shippers have and bearing on the question of the effort to make Government operation a success, said:

To-day, as a result of an agreement on the part of what is known as the Atlantic conference, of which the Shipping Board is a part, the rate from New York to Rio de Janeiro is $11 per ton, while freight has been carried on an open rate from Hamburg to Rio de Janeiro for $4 per ton. The Shipping Board some months ago had a boat in the Hamburg-Rio trade and carried freight for $4.50 per ton, at the same time demanding $10 per ton from New York to Rio, so that the American taxpayer made good the deficit on the Hamburg-Rio boat for the benefit of the German manufacturer.

The Shipping Board said if we had freight for Rio they would be glad to make a satisfactory rate, and, as we had a carload going there, we asked them to name a rate, and through their representative we were quoted $10 per ton, but told them we would be unable to use that rate as our agent in New York already had a rate of $8 per ton on a Shipping Board boat.

The Shipping Board also claims that this country is at a disadvantage because of return cargoes from Mexico, Central and South America, but as a matter of record the reports show that this country exports and imports from those countries a higher percentage than does any European country.

He attaches a statement giving the freight rates and the business between these countries. I think it worth while to ask to have the statement attached as a part of my remarks. There is some valuable information in it.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Distribution of February shipments, 1922, of coffee from Santos.

	Bags.
London	216,331
New Orleans	118,885
Galveston	12,250
New York	75,711
Boston	23,400
Rotterdam	45,501
Hamburg	44,887
Havre	41,265
Antwerp	16,574

Coffee from Rio de Janeiro, February, 1922.

	Bags.
Hamburg	21,002
Antwerp	17,125
New Orleans	13,450
New York	9,250

Hides from Rio de Janeiro and Santos, February, 1922.

New York	17,529
Hamburg	4,000

Bales of wool from Uruguay, October 1, 1921–February 28, 1922.

	Bales.
Hamburg	16,502
United States	19,962
United Kingdom	2,455

January shipments of coffee from Rio de Janeiro.

	Bags.
New York	73,359
New Orleans	20,873
Trieste	56,451
Havre	12,821
Antwerp	16,821
Hamburg	11,756

Manganese from Rio de Janeiro for the year 1922.

	Tons.
Baltimore	238,850
Philadelphia	18,400
Rotterdam	11,400
Hamburg	2,521

Wool from Uruguay for the months October, November, and December.

	Bales.
United States	13,353
Hamburg	3,518
United Kingdom	908

Ocean freight rates.

Ports.	Miles.	Per ton.	Reference exhibit.
Liverpool to Rio de Janeiro	5,158	$13.20	A.
Hamburg to Rio de Janeiro	5,519	3.97	K.
		4.07	C.
New York to Rio de Janeiro	4,748	10.00	B-1.
Liverpool to Vera Cruz		8.80	A.
		12.00	B.
New York to Vera Cruz	1,973	14.56	B.
		20.16	B' B-1
New Orleans to Vera Cruz	788	11.65	D.
		16.80	D.
Hamburg to Vera Cruz		[1]6.60	F.
Hamburg to Barranquilla		6.90	M.
New York to Barranquilla		16.50	D C A.
Hamburg to Port Limon		6.90	M.
New York to Port Limon		21.00	D C A.

[1] 30 shillings.

Exports and imports.

BRAZIL.

Year.	United States.	England.	Germany.
	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
1913 (to)	394,493	153,406	211,103
1913 (from)	870,497	2,618,412	505,252
1920 (to)	967,233	113,117	98,469
1920 (from)	1,259,807	253,795	17,213

COLOMBIA.

1920 (to)	161,862	.....	.....
1920 (from)	101,538	.....	.....

VENEZUELA.

1913 (to)	174,040	17,453	25,818
1913 (from)	63,107	30,559	16,296
1914 (to)	111,846	7,250	12,920
1914 (from)	54,900	20,614	11,083
1920 (to)	84,161	.....	.....
1920 (from)	60,099	[1]	.....
1921 (to) [2]	49,843	669	3,337
1921 (from)	20,643	4,328	1,105

[1] No reports. [2] 6 months.

Imports and exports.

MEXICO.

[Dollars.]

Year.	Imports from, by—			Exports to, from—
	United States.	England.	Germany.	United States.	England.	Germany.
1913	77,543,842	9,116,807	5,958,000	54,383,424	10,830,448	11,422,000
1914	92,690,566	8,969,125	.....	38,748,793	3,123,958	.....
1920	179,331,755	65,205,791	.....	207,858,497	21,070,350	.....
1921	119,145,533	.....	.....	221,854,304	.....	.....
COLOMBIA.
1913	15,979,912	5,280,278	3,796,000	7,397,696	8,209,824	4,289,000
1914	16,051,120	5,287,295	.....	6,786,153	5,654,571	.....
1920	53,641,738	13,040,006	.....	59,133,277	30,016,703	.....
1921	43,976,205	.....	.....	17,734,662	.....	.....
VENEZUELA.
1913	10,852,331	2,716,873	4,913,000	5,737,118	4,101,519	2,216,000
1914	9,763,069	1,066,845	.....	5,401,386	2,775,233	.....
1920	22,388,862	4,387,965	.....	29,204,396	16,395,425	.....
1921	11,295,159	.....	.....	9,498,257	.....	.....
BRAZIL.
1913	120,155,855	48,540,580	59,008,000	42,638,467	60,455,808	47,546,000
1914	101,329,073	38,696,365	.....	29,963,914	30,387,447	.....
1920	227,587,594	58,323,083	.....	156,740,365	117,803,658	19,443,000
1921	96,326,200	.....	.....	58,106,414	.....	[1] 6,776,000

[1] May to December.

There is no question, Mr. President, but that there has been a falling off of overseas commerce, necessitating the tying up of ships everywhere. It is not expected that that will continue. Germany is building fast, and other countries are keeping up their merchant shipping.

In the New York Times of December 31, 1922, I find this statement with reference to foreign trade:

[From the New York Times, December 31, 1922.]

FOREIGN TRADE OF THE COUNTRY.

In all the calculations for the future the country's foreign trade comes up as an important element. Despite the allurement of the promises of capturing far-off markets, the fact remains that those which were the best before the war still remain so. Canada, Mexico, and Cuba on this continent and the countries of central and western Europe are the ones which take most of American products. In pre-war days Europe took from one-half to two-thirds of all this country's exports, and for the first nine months of this year more than one-half of them went thither. On the other side of the ledger there has been some change. European countries, which used to send here about one-half of the total imports, sent this year less than one-third. Cotton and certain foodstuffs are the big items in the exports to Europe. Of the latter, a considerable portion comes under the head of charitable contributions. Of cotton, it is well known that much more would be taken if the European countries could pay for it. There would also be less need of charitable relief from this country if certain European countries could be made self-supporting by being enabled to ship their products here in exchange. At present financial conditions in all the countries on the Continent are at their ebb. The next few months are bound to show a betterment in this respect, because it is impossible for present conditions to continue much longer. Some modus vivendi will have to be established in order to escape chaos.

STATISTICS ARE TOO BELATED.

Not very long ago Secretary Hoover was quoted as expressing the opinion of a very favorable shift in the foreign commerce of this country. This was based on the statements of imports and exports of a single month and was speedily shown to be erroneous. The other day Mr. Hoover was again the authority for statements of a similar kind made to President Harding. He was reported as saying that both imports and exports had been increasing since the new tariff went into effect and as reiterating his belief that the "invisible exports" might soon result in causing exports of gold. The data for these statements are not available. No official statements of imports have been published that go beyond September 20. The complications of the new tariff are said to be the cause of the delay. But there must be something more than this. All the monthly summaries of foreign trade have been behindhand for a year or more. This may be due to a lack of facilities, in turn caused by too small appropriations. But the fact remains that American statistics of foreign commerce are usually at least five weeks behind the detailed British ones and are not of much value when they do appear because of this very delay. It is only a few days ago that the export figures, in detail, for October were published. On December 12 the complete British import and export statistics for November were available. Under such circumstances any and all kinds of opinions may be expressed by those in authority without fear of contradiction. When complete data are available it may again be shown that Secretary Hoover's conclusions are based on hope rather than on reality.

That is an important statement in connection with what we have seen as bearing on the point.

In Commerce Reports of January 8, 1923, there is a statement by the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce concerning the foreign trade situation, which

I would like to have inserted as a part of my remarks as an appendix. The article appears on page 72 and is entitled "Survey of Industrial and Economic Conditions at the End of 1922."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 2.)

Mr. FLETCHER. There was another article in the New York Times of January 7, 1923, which I would like to have inserted as a part of my remarks. It deals somewhat with the tariff situation and bears upon the thought that there are ways of helping an American merchant marine without paying out subsidies from the Treasury of the country. There are also ways of hurting the American merchant marine. I mentioned awhile ago the provision in the tariff law about adding 50 per cent to the cost of repairs made in foreign yards. That tariff law further affects our volume of trade, and there can be no question about it. The statement in the New York Times refers to that situation. With reference, for instance, to one item, it is said:

Dealers have been taken to task by customers because of higher prices asked and have had to do much explaining. One State association of retail dry goods men is sending to its members, for their use in connection with this, a letter written "by one of the largest manufacturers and importers of gloves in New York City."

It shows the duty imposed in the tariff bill on gloves, where there is one manufacturing concern in one county in one State of the United States, as given here, to be as follows: The old duty on certain kinds was $2 and the new duty $6.20; the old duty on certain other kinds $2.25, new duty $7; on some other kinds the old duty was $2.25, the new duty $8.20; on some other kind, 16-button Seville, for instance, the old duty was $4.75 and the new duty $13.80; on 20-button overseam the old duty was $5.70 and the new duty $22. To the rates just cited as new rates there is added an item of 1.1 per cent exportation tax.

This case is one of many which caused high-tariff men to gnash their teeth in impotent rage when asked to explain their favorite theory that the foreigner pays the tariff. I ask to have that article inserted in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks, together with an article entitled "How the tariff law operates" and still another article entitled "The vicious circle."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 3, Appendix 4, and Appendix 5.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I mentioned the fact that it would cost comparatively little to keep these ships, to keep them tied up as they are or distributed to the different ports, as I have suggested. I have some information that they are not properly painted and the machinery is not properly leaded and tallowed. That, of course, ought to be looked after. It would be a crying shame to have them go down and depreciate in value, when it is perfectly easy to keep them reasonably preserved. A foreigner would take care of his property, and when there was a call to put it into service the owner would get an engineer and the captain and mate on board and put it in shape, test it out, and sail. While we take our ship for instance, that needs repairs out to a dry dock and there have it repaired and spend $25,000 or $30,000, the foreigner would have the crew and the people in charge of the ship do most of the work.

We can learn all that by experience. We have been making progress. Mr. Lasker stated in the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the House, considering the independent offices appropriation bill:

I believe that the operation of the present Shipping Board is the best operation ever made by any business department of the Government.

Then he went on to say:

In the face of the way the fleet had deteriorated and the decline of freight rates, if it had not been for this particular Shipping Board, and particularly in its operations through the Emergency Fleet Corporation, instead of the present Shipping Board having cut a loss of from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000 a month down to $4,000,000 a month and still keep the routes going, the losses would have been kept up and probably increased.

That is a statement to the effect that the board is growing more and more efficient and putting into force more and more economy from time to time. That would indicate that this is no time to be discouraged about Government operation.

Furthermore, in another statement Mr. Lasker said they have now got the overhead down from some $16,000,000 a year to about $7,500,000. There is every reason to believe from Mr. Lasker's own statement that, so far from proving Government operation impossible, he is able to demonstrate that it is entirely feasible, entirely practical, and that the board is all the while getting upon a sounder and better basis.

There was an item which appeared in the Washington Star of December 31, 1922, entitled "Shipping Board acts to cut insurance cost in half." They were proceeding in that direction, and that is another very commendable thing to do, to reduce the losses. The losses stated, for the purpose of influencing the passage of this bill, to be $50,000,000 are quite differently stated on other occasions.

In a statement called No. 437, July 24, 1922, which I happen to have at hand, it is said:

The next excess of outlay over income on voyage operations for May—excluding overhead, repairs, and insurance—was $376,445.84. In June for the first time income exceeded outlay, the excess of income over outlay amounting to $204,531.75. This improvement is due partly to the increase in passenger revenues, which for the month of June showed an excess of income over outlay—excluding overhead, repairs, and insurance—of $354,630.78, which is an improvement of $137,261.65 over the preceding month.

Since then that has been decreased. I ask to have that statement put in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 5½.)

Mr. FLETCHER. That all bears on the question of the losses and, as I have before shown, the testimony before the committee indicated the losses would not exceed $3,000,000 a month, that in many months less than that. This statement to which I have just referred shows that the losses have not nearly approached $50,000,000 a year.

Now, Mr. President, a moment ago I was proceeding to dwell on the repair problem. There has been some boast on the part of the Shipping Board with reference to economies effected by reducing wages and reducing the number of men. I am very much impressed with the thought that that is not real economy. To economize by reducing the pay of skilled men is false economy. The real question of economy is missed entirely. In that connection I wish to refer to an article which was published in the Seaman of January, 1922, by Mr. Andrew Furuseth, which is entitled "Reduction of crews means increase of cost." I ask to have that article inserted in the RECORD at the close of my remarks as an appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 6.)

Mr. FLETCHER. This issue of The Seaman carries a striking illustration also. I wish I could put the illustration into the RECORD, but the rules of the Senate do not allow it. It shows "The repair shops devouring the merchant marine," and the comment is:

The repair shops on shore and insufficient or inefficient crews on board ships represent a system of mismanagement which is certain to accomplish the complete wrecking of any merchant marine to which it is applied.

The illustration shows a ship with a serpent leading out to boiler scalers and boiler makers; another one leading out to electricians and blacksmiths; another to sailmakers and riggers; another to longshoremen and hoisters; another to carpenters and painters; another to pipe fitters and machinists; and over all are hovering vultures representing the International Shipping Federation (Ltd.), the I. W. W., and the American Steamship Owners' Association; all indicating the enemies of American shipping. It is a very graphic illustration, but, of course, I can not ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, but I have asked that the article by Mr. Furuseth, who is thoroughly well informed on this whole subject, be printed as a part of my remarks.

My contention is that there is no reason whatever for the showing that Government operation is a costly experiment and has proven to be a failure, and therefore is not further to be thought of.

In that connection I offer and ask to have printed as an appendix at the end of my remarks a couple of short editorials from the Titusville Star-Advocate bearing on that particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 7.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Here is the lesson. The Master said to Simon, "Put out into the deep and let your nets down for a draft."

The idea was they were fishing along the shore, taking no risks, making no serious effort, where there were no fish. Consequently they caught nothing. Simon answered, "Master, we toiled all night and took nothing." Of course, they were half-hearted, indifferent, expecting the fish to come to them instead of going after them. But "when they had done as directed they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and Simon and James and John were amazed."

What the Shipping Board should have done and should yet do, is "Put out into the deep." If they made an earnest effort with a sincere purpose and a genuine determination to succeed in a great business enterprise they would get returns in the establishment of an American merchant marine.

Mr. President, it has been recently asserted that the Panama Steamship Co. as a Government enterprise has suffered heavy losses and that there have been serious deficits, particularly for the last year. Heretofore in discussing this bill I referred to the success of the Panama Steamship Line as an evidence of what could be done under Government operation. I was taken to task about that by the New York Tribune and the Philadelphia Inquirer. The New York Tribune in its issue of December 12, 1922, undertakes to say:

The Panama Railroad Steamship Co., which, with the Panama Railroad, is owned by the War Department, had a net deficit during the fiscal year ended June 30 of $587,332.45, according to the annual report made public yesterday. This figure compares with a loss last year of $700,810.22. The company attributes the poor showing to the depression that has affected all shipping industries and particularly to the rate war waged between the United Fruit Co. and the Shipping Board service operated by the Clyde Line.

This company is the one to which Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, in his minority report on the ship subsidy bill, referred to as an instance of profitable operation under Government ownership. He advocated turning over the entire fleet to the Panama Line and the United States Line, which is operated directly by the Shipping Board, as an alternative to a subsidy.

The editorial then proceeds to compare the losses, and so forth.

The New York Tribune also had an editorial in its issue of December 13, 1922, which was entitled "Thrifty Spendthrifts," referring to what it calls the record of the Panama Steamship Line. Mr. Phillip Manson, of New York, wrote a communication to the editor of the Tribune dated December 16, 1922, and also another one dated January 5, 1923. I have never seen those communications published, and I doubt if they ever were published. I have, however, the permission of Mr. Manson to use them in any way I see fit, and I ask to have the two communications by Mr. Manson to the editor of the New York Tribune printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks and as a part thereof. They completely answer the critics of Government operation. I need not reiterate what Mr. Manson so conclusively sets forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendixes 8 and 9.)

Mr. FLETCHER. The communications give the facts. Mr. Manson has been a student of this subject for a long while; he has kept up with the hearings and all the developments in and out of Congress, and also with the reports which have been made by the officials of the departments, and he knows what he is talking about. He expresses himself rather plainly, and, perhaps, rather too strongly at times in characterizing representations which have been made by people in and out of Congress. As to those portions of his communications I need not commit myself one way or the other, but I have no hesitation in indorsing the facts stated by him and the soundness of his arguments and the logic of his reasoning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Are there attacks in those letters upon the good faith and motives of Members of Congress?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no; they contain nothing of that sort.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not think the Senator would put a letter of that character in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I know the temper of Mr. Manson and the character of the language he uses, not only when he is testifying but also in letters which I have seen, and I wondered whether he could write letters of the length the Senator indicates without attacking the integrity of Members of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. No. These communications do not undertake to question anybody's motives. They simply represent efforts on the part of Mr. Manson to correct statements made by the Tribune as to the facts which developed in the hearings and as shown by the reports of the Panama Steamship Co. He has, I think, no comment to make regarding any differences with Members of Congress. I have read over the communications, and I do not find anything in them which the Senator could regard as objectionable in that respect.

We are not, of course, confined to the views of others or the arguments of others, but here is a report of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Co. to the stockholders for 1922. At page 23 it refers to the steamship line, and says:

The total operating revenues of the company's steamship line were $2,723,985.58, a decrease of $2,268,765.54 as compared with the 12 months ending June 30, 1921; operating expenses for same period were $3,443,490.39, as against $5,850,407.22 for the preceding year, a decrease of $2,406,916.83. The net operating deficit resulting therefrom decreased $138,151.29 as compared with loss for prior year.

Passenger traffic shows a decrease in revenue of $115,591.71. Revenue from the transportation of mails and treasure decreased $75,442.01 and $20,099.33, respectively.

Then the report gives the total tonnage transported in the 12 months ending June 30, 1922, and shows that 197,099 tons were carried by the company's steamers and 55,767 tons by chartered steamers.

Then under the head of "General remarks" this statement is made:

The operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, although more favorable than for the preceding year, resulted in a deficit of $587,332.45, after charging to operating expenses $358,429.44, account of depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs. The primary cause for loss was the continued worldwide depression in business, with its consequent heavy decrease in tonnage transported; the marked lowering of rates of freight owing to the severe competition of direct lines operating between south Pacific and east coast Colombian ports and New York; the unsettled exchange situation, which, with the curtailment of credits previously granted by American merchants to South American merchants, compelled the latter to buy and sell in Europe instead of, as formerly, buying and selling in the United States, and the continued high cost of foodstuffs, stores, and material.

In pursuance of the company's policy all freight and passengers carried for account of the United States Government during the year were charged for at material reductions from regular tariff rates. Had the steamship line received tariff rates for such services its deficit of $587,332.45 would have been reduced to approximately $125,000.

That is the report itself; so that the loss is really reduced to $125,000 in spite of these most depressing and unusual conditions, and yet they are charged here with having suffered a deficit of over $500,000 up to June 30, 1922!

In that connection I am allowed to offer a letter of December 15, 1922, from Mr. W. R. Pfizer, assistant to the president, to Mr. Manson, which gives a statement concerning this alleged deficit, and the reasons and occasions therefor. I think it is due the Panama Steamship Line, and will be simply furnishing the truth on this subject, to have that letter printed as a part of my remarks, and I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 10.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this letter says—and I simply refer to that part of it—

The combined operations of the Panama Railroad and its steamship line while under Government control from 1904 to 1921, resulted in a net surplus of approximately $23,000,000 (of which the steamship line contributed $5,500,000).

That is one of the results. The fact is that for something like 20 years they have had only 2 years when there was a deficit, and this letter explains the circumstances under which that occurred. There was a slight deficit last year—2 years in 18.

Regarding the operation of the United States Lines, in these letters which Mr. Manson has written to the New York Tribune, he refers to that undertaking, and I think sufficiently meets the claim that the United States Lines have been suffering a loss. In a letter to me of June 30 Mr. Manson adds some comments to what he has heretofore said about that, and without taking time to read that letter I should like to have it inserted in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix 11.)

Mr. FLETCHER. There is another experience by another country to which it seems to me we ought to give attention. It ought to have some weight with those people who are insisting all the while that the Government is incompetent and inefficient, and can not get honest men and capable men, and can not manage an important enterprise because of its impotency and helplessness and supineness, or for other reasons. I refer to the experience which Australia has had.

As bearing on that, I have before me an article from The Round Table of December, 1922, entitled "The Commonwealth Line of Steamers," and without taking time to read very extensively from it I should like to read from a portion of it, beginning at page 189. It says:

In 1917 and 1918 the Federal Government took over 21 ex-enemy vessels and ran them as part of its line. These ships are still being used, Mr. Hughes having claimed them as part of the war indemnity. It is noteworthy that these vessels have earned much more than any other ships of the Government line, possibly because they were originally intended for the Australian trade and are more suited for it.

Of the steel steamers announced by the Government as ordered in Australia 12 were built and 6 were building at the end of 1921. Three more had been ordered and were to be built, and contracts for 2 were canceled. Of the completed steamers 6 were of the D class, 5,500 tons; and 4 of the E class of 6,100 tons. Of the steamers building all are of the E class. Two of the 8 vessels ordered are much larger ships of 12,700 tons. To these must now be added the 5 "bay" liners built for the Commonwealth Line in England. As all the world knows, Mr. Hughes went to the peace conference in 1919.

While there he became alarmed at further rumors of consolidations of the shipping ring, and apparently after consultation with Mr. Larkin, the general manager of the Commonwealth Line, persuaded his cabinet to order five large steamers of 13,850 tons, with passenger accommodation, refrigerating space, and a speed of 15 knots. In July, 1919, contracts were let for three of them to Vickers's yards, and for the remaining two to Beardmore's yards. Once again Parliament was not taken into the Government's confidence, the excuse being that the matter had to be arranged swiftly and secretly lest the shipping conference should hear of it and intimidate the English shipping yards into refusing to contract for the ships. One of these liners is expected to be finished by the end of this year, while four of them have been completed and have made their maiden voyages to Australia. These are the ships that attained notoriety this year through the action of the Australian Seamen's Union in refusing to allow the English crew to man them on the return journey and in attempting to enforce its right to select the crew in advance from among its own members. The latter claim was, in the end, successfully resisted.

This completes the actual list of the vessels of the Commonwealth Line. It comprises:

In commission—
Australs (remaining from original purchase in 1916)	12
Ex-enemy ships	17
D-class steamers (5,500 tons)	6
E-class steamers (6,100 tons)	4 or 6
Bay liners (13,850 tons)	4
Building or ordered—
E-class (6,100 tons)	8 or 7
For cargo (12,700 tons)	2
Bay liner (13,800 tons)	1

It is difficult to estimate the venture from a business point of view, because very little information is available in the way of intelligible balance sheets. Accounts of the Austral Line, as it is called, have been furnished with the budget papers from year to year, and these show the following profits: In 1917, £327,335; in 1918, £576,164; in 1919, £1,160,055; in 1920, £137,959. The amount of the profit made in the year ending June, 1921, was stated by Sir Joseph Cook to be £300,000, after allowing 10 per cent instead of the usual 6 per cent for depreciation.

The ex-treasurer also complained that both the Commonwealth Bank and the Commonwealth Line were keeping their profits from him. The bank carries them to reserves and the line to depreciations. Whether Sir Joseph Cook's estimate refers to the whole line or only to the Australs is not clear. The nearest approach to a complete statement of the financial position of the whole line was given by the Prime Minister to Parliament in November, 1921. He dealt with the existing financial position of each branch of the line, and then gave an aggregate estimate of the whole position. From this the following figures have been extracted:

Dr.

Original capital cost 11 remaining Australs	£1,621,578
Original capital cost (valuation) 18 ex-enemy ships	909,315
Original capital cost 17 D and E class ships (built and building)	3,176,083
Original capital cost of 5 bay liners (built and building)	5,000,000
Total capital cost of fleet built and building	10,706,976
Add interest not charged on capital	382,000
Grand total	11,088,976

Cr.

Total profits earned by Australs	2,993,245
Total profits earned by sailers (since sold)	41,382
Total profits earned by D and E ships	84,588
Total profits earned by ex-enemy ships	4,066,266
Brokerage and commissions	181,995
Net gain on sale of 2 Australs and 2 sailers, plus insurance on 2 Australs and 1 sailer lost	74,343
Net profits to June 30, 1921	7,441,819

This leaves a net capital of £3,647,157 after devoting all profits to writing down stock. Thus the Commonwealth has its fleet on the one hand and a liability of over £3,500,000 on the other. This means, according to Mr. Hughes, that the ships stand in to the Commonwealth at £9 5s. a ton dead weight. If, however, the total loss in wooden ships (£2,615,513) be carried by the line, the total net capital would amount to about £6,250,000, and the ships would stand in at £16 2s. 2d. per ton.

It is worth noticing that the present Federal Treasurer, Mr. Bruce, criticized Mr. Hughes's statement very acutely in the House, especially drawing attention to the age of the Australs and the ex-enemy ships. After valuing and writing off the Australs, ex-enemy ships and the D and E class at a figure considerably lower than their purchase price, Mr. Bruce reduced the tonnage to 62,500 tons, capitalized at £1,375,000. This means that the five big Bay liners, now costing the Government about £80 a ton to build, are held by the Commonwealth at £22 a ton. It is interesting to observe that the Commonwealth Line from its inception has followed the policy of not claiming in any country the immunity from the jurisdiction of the courts commonly accorded to government-owned vessels. It pays for all services, such as pilotage, including such as are charged for in the form of a rate, but does not pay income tax either in the Commonwealth or the United Kingdom.

If, then, the line is satisfactory from a financial viewpoint, what can be said of its usefulness? Its defenders make several claims for it, the chief being that it has provided further opportunities for direct shipment from all United Kingdom main ports; it has amended outward bills of lading to the advantage of Australian shippers; it has helped to enable Australian producers to get rid of primary products throughout a critical period; it has relieved the congestion of coastal shipping, making phosphates, coal, and wheat available in times of scarcity in the various Australian States; it has fostered shipbuilding in Australia; and it has prevented material increases in freights similar to those which have taken place in other trades during and since the war. All these claims probably would be conceded even by its opponents, with the exception of the last one. It is very difficult to express an opinion on this question. On general cargo the Commonwealth Line has charged the same rates of freight as the conference lines, but what has been the effect of its competition in restraining freights now and during the war is a question that can only be answered by the directors of the conference lines. In the case of wheat the line does appear to have kept freights down. Its charges have never exceeded £7 10s. per ton to London. When this rate was fixed, in February, 1918, the ruling rate for full cargoes for British vessels was about £11 10s. per ton, and neutrals were refusing £13 15s. Whether the Commonwealth Line has actually restrained the shipping conference from becoming burdensome to Australia or not, there can scarcely be any doubt that the majority of the Australian people think it has done so.

And toward the end of 1921 this impression was very generally confirmed by the offer of Lord Inchcape to buy out the line on behalf of the shipping conference. The offer was quite clear and unequivocal, and was forwarded to Mr. Larkin, the general manager, who at once transmitted it to the Prime Minister. "I recognize and admit," the offer ran, "that the Australian Government with the taxpayers behind it can go on indefinitely, and that the conference lines may eventually be ruined. I am prepared to recommend the conference to come to an agreement with the Australian Government, either to buy its ships on reasonable terms or to suggest that they should sell their ships to the Australian Government and leave the latter a free field." Mr. Hughes, with his usual acumen, hurled this message into a committee of the federal house on the estimates. He had previously taken the House into his confidence for almost the first time in regard to the position of the Commonwealth with respect to shipping and shipbuilding, and had made the statement from which the preceding figures have been extracted. A full-dress debate on Commonwealth shipping took place, and it showed quite plainly that the majority in Parliament was strongly of opinion that Lord Inchcape's offer revealed his uneasiness at the prospect of the line's continuance, and proved that it had acted as a shield to Australian interests. On previous occasions, when Parliament had debated our shipping affairs, its main criticism had been directed against the unconstitutionality of the methods by which Mr. Hughes founded the Commonwealth Line and bought ships without consulting Parliament. Members of the opposition have always, of course, availed themselves of the wooden-ship fiasco and other administrative errors to launch attacks on the Government. But the debate of November last revealed that, despite these things, members were convinced that the line was a good thing, and that the fact that the shipping conference wanted it was only an additional reason why the Commonwealth should not give it up. The only opposition came from convinced opponents of State enterprise of any kind among the country and national parties. But the majority of these parties and the whole of the Labor Party were solidly behind the enterprise, and a motion to reduce the estimate in order to indicate that the continuance of the line was inadvisable was overwhelmingly defeated.

There is no doubt that, on the whole, this vote represents the national feeling with regard to the ships. At the same time there is a considerable distrust of the efficiency of State undertakings. So far the line has not only justified itself sentimentally and politically but also financially. Yet it is still a Government department under the Prime Minister. It needs to be freed and set under some independent authority, as has been done with the State railways and the Commonwealth bank. Mr. Hughes has indicated that this will be done, and the Governor General's speech at the opening of the second session of the current Parliament promised legislation along these lines. But the legislation has not yet been passed. The status of the general manager is apparently obscure. And there is an uneasy feeling that the line is too costly and too powerful an instrument to be subject to the risk of any kind of dictation at the whim of a political party.

That shows that the Government of Australia has made a success of the operation of ships in that country, and that the question whether the Government should give up its ships was an issue recently in the campaign in which Premier Hughes was reelected. Most of his colleagues were beaten. He has stood all along for Government ownership and Government operation of the merchant marine of Australia, and on that question the people stood by him, and the showing is that it has proven a wise policy on the part of Australia.

As to Canada, in the Canadian Annual Review I find a clipping, at page 414, to this effect:

The shipping interests of Canada had a year of difficulty in 1921; there were political troubles for those associated with the Government and in most cases reduced rates and traffic. There was, also, keen competition between Government and private lines and strong opposition expressed on behalf of the latter against Government aid being given to one set of ships at the country's expense.

* * * * * * *

There are 6 vessels yet to be delivered; the complete program of 66 vessels will provide a total of 380,000 tons. These vessels provide cargo and liner services all over the world.

Meantime, Mr. Ballantyne in the Commons, on March 29, had reviewed the C. G. Merchant Marine conditions during 1920 with sailings by different ships to Liverpool, London, and Glasgow, Cardiff, and Swansea, the British West Indies, Cuba, the Mediterranean, Straits Settlements, Java, India, Australia, and New Zealand. The minister claimed substantial gains to Canada's export trade as a result; the fixed assets were stated at $49,243,604 (vessels at cost less depreciation), the current assets at $3,535,653, the gross earnings at $10,210,442, the operating expenses at $8,733,917, and the total net earnings at $781,460.

That is not a bad showing. On page 416 appears the statement:

At the close of the year four Government vessels were laid up in Montreal for the winter season; the final report of operations for the year showed a substantial deficit. The operating revenue for the year ended December 31, 1921, was $10,768,828 and operating expenses $12,979,553, with a deficit of $2,210,724. To this had to be added interest accrued on notes to Government during the year of $3,351,500 and reserve for depreciation of $2,374,410, which, with minor items, made a total deficit of $8,047,635. Mr. Hanna, in submitting this report, stated that "conditions existing in the steamship business throughout the world made such a result inevitable. Admittedly, from an economic standpoint, 1921 was the worst year in recent shipping experience. In addition to a general falling off in tonnage, ocean rates were reduced in some cases as much as 50 per cent. Steamship rates that would bring in a proper return did not exist, and the best rates would only pay operating expenses. While tonnage outward was fairly well maintained, the inward business, especially from the United Kingdom, continental ports, and South America, fell away to such an extent that home-bound cargo was practically impossible to obtain. On this account many voyages resulted in losses. The total loss had been substantially increased by charging depreciation at 4 per cent and interest at 5½ per cent per annum on the original cost of the vessels. The difficulties of the situation were further increased by the addition of 18 new vessels to the company's fleet during a most severe business depression."

There was no doubt as to the world conditions in shipping. Mr. Hanna explained some of the advantages of operating the C. G. M. M. in face of these losses. To Canadian trade in general and to the national railways in particular the gains had been considerable: "Large shipments, which have been handled by the merchant marine at the low rates prevailing, have provided traffic return to the national railways. Much business of this character would have been handled through foreign ports and by other or foreign railways if the company's vessels had not been available. Boards of trade throughout Canada and exporters of many products have placed on record their appreciation of the assistance the merchant marine has rendered to them, without which they claim a large amount of export business secured would have been lost to other countries."

* * * * * * *

The Canadian Pacific Railway Steamship Service held its course in 1921 along the usual lines of successful and profitable operation.

On page 419 it is said:

The Canada Steamship Lines (Ltd.): The report of this company for the year of December 31, 1920, showed fixed assets—ships, real estate, docks, etc.—of $35,468,716, with $6,261,584 allowed for depreciation reserve; current and working assets of $8,017,693; leases, contracts, and good will, $8,424,646, and a total of $48,894,394; the liabilities included capital stock, $24,500,000; funded debt and bonds of $6,501,483, and current or accrued liabilities of $7,547,999; the revenue was $20,248,611, the expenses $16,220,337, the net earnings $4,028,274, and the profits of the year $1,932,772, with a surplus of $8,611,147.

I can not see where there is anything discouraging about that. Again, on page 420, it is stated:

The Government mail subsidies and steamship subventions for the year beginning March 31, 1921, totaled over $700,000 for the following services not of a local nature:

Canada and Newfoundland	$35,000
Canada, the West Indies, and South America	340,666
Canada and South Africa	146,000
Canada, Australia or New Zealand, or both (Pacific)	130,509
Prince Rupert and Queen Charlotte Islands	21,000
Victoria, Vancouver, and Skagway	25,000
Victoria and West Vancouver Island coast	15,000
Vancouver and northern ports of British Columbia	24,800

This shows the total amount of aid given by Canada and the purposes for which it was given, mainly mail subventions.

Some comment has been made about what Italy was doing, and I have here a statement from Fair Play, the issue of December 14, 1922, as follows:

ITALIAN SHIPPING NEWS.

GENOA, December 8.—Provision has been made by the present cabinet for the suppression of some of the subventioned steamship services. According to the Tribuna, published in Rome, the services to be suppressed are: The Trieste-Odessa, the Trieste-Curzola, the Trieste-Japan, an Adriatic service having Bari as its starting point, an Adriatic service having Ravenna as its starting point, a service known as the "Periplo della Penisola," and a Gulf of Naples service.

By the suppression of these services and a considerable reduction of the number of ports of call in the services that are maintained it is claimed that the Government will save a considerable amount of money, which will be further increased in the future by a stricter application of the Government's policy for confining to a minimum the number of services to be subventioned and for cutting down the subvention rates.

According to the Tribuna, not more than about 40 vessels will be amply sufficient to meet the requirements of the subventioned services, these 40 vessels including many of rather limited tonnage. This first step under the new "economy policy" will mean a saving to the mercantile marine budget of about 73,000,000 lire.

The market values of the principal steamship companies' shares are showing of late a considerable improvement, which is undoubtedly ascribable to brighter conditions of the country generally, the stricter discipline of the crews, and the increase in the exports.

That bears on the question that has been raised as to the alleged enormous subventions paid by Italy. I have heretofore mentioned that whereas Italy was, in pre-war times, quite generous in the matter of aid to shipping and shipyards, the policy has recently been changed, and Italy is reducing the services and the subventions, although Italy owns the ships and directs the operations of some of these services herself, and she has been keeping that up. In that respect her efforts have not been unsatisfactory or too costly. She gives another illustration of what can be accomplished by Government operation. Government operation means the extension of markets and the opening up of new trade.

In the Commerce Reports of February 5, 1923, at page 372, we find an illustration of that. Beginning at the top of the page, I read as follows:

The decrease in cargoes destined for the Hamburg-Havre range resulted from the depreciation of the German mark and the consequent elimination of Germany as a market for American wheat. Shipments to Germany during the first seven months of 1922 were 435,000 tons less than during the corresponding period of 1921. The Belgian market showed a decrease of 116,000 tons, France's share decreased 16,000 tons, and Holland's increased by 4,000 tons.

South Atlantic Europe decreased principally in shipments to the Bordeaux-Brest region of France and to Spain. This section does not normally absorb much of the United States wheat, and the falling off is largely a return to normal conditions.

The decrease of almost 800,000 tons to the west Mediterranean region occurred mainly in shipments to Italy, southern France, and Spanish Mediterranean ports. During the first seven months of 1922 shipments to Italy decreased over 644,000 tons, to southern France 47,600 tons, and to Spanish Mediterranean ports 104,600 tons. The principal causes of this decrease are unfavorable exchange rates and return of these countries to agricultural pursuits, with the consequent cultivation of large quantities of grain.

SHIPPING BOARD VESSELS OPEN NEW MARKET.

Shipments of wheat to the east Mediterranean and Black Sea region showed an increase over the corresponding period of 1921. As in the case of shipments to the Baltic region, relief measures were responsible for the increase, cargoes to Greece decreasing 45,000 tons in 1922, while those to Russia and Turkey totaled 72,000 tons—an increase of 100 per cent.

The increased shipment of wheat to the Orient is notable, indicating the establishment of a new market for American wheat through extended services by Shipping Board vessels. Heretofore this market has relied on the Australian and Indian crops. Japan is consuming more wheat than before, as a result of the efforts of its Government to establish wheat and wheat flour as an adjunct to the national diet of rice. China, which received no wheat cargoes in the 1921 period, received 22,547 tons in 1922. The Philippines and Asiatic Russia took 6,978 tons and 3,000 tons, respectively, in 1922, with no comparable shipment in 1921.

SHARE OF WHEAT CARRIED BY AMERICAN VESSELS.

The total oversea movement of wheat during January–July, 1921, was 3,883,500 tons, of which United States vessels carried 27 per cent (1,031,000 tons) and foreign vessels 73 per cent (2,852,500 tons). During the same period of 1922, oversea shipments of wheat totaled 2,459,500 tons. American vessels transporting 28 per cent (679,500 tons) and foreign vessels 72 per cent (1,780,000 tons). The employment of American bottoms in the carriage of relief supplies in 1922 increased the percentage of wheat carried under the American flag by 1 per cent.

That shows how, by the use of these vessels, we are extending our trade and opening up new markets.

The more I learn of what was done in the past and of the policy of the Shipping Board, the more I learn of what is being done and of present policies, the more I am convinced that Government operation never had a chance to prove itself. There has never been any opportunity allowed that it might succeed. Pains have been taken all along to make it a failure. When I note what has been accomplished in every instance, even by piecemeal, in chance attempts here and there under Government operation, the more I believe in it.

Heretofore I have felt that private enterprise ought to own and operate our merchant marine, although I was aware how they failed us for 50 years. Now, when it is attempted to encourage them by a draft on the taxpayers of $30,000,000 for 10 years, and probably for 5 years more, besides granting other important benefits, I can see plainly that we can never rely on private enterprise to establish and maintain an adequate American merchant marine, and we are headed straight for the situation in which we found ourselves in 1914, when less than 10 per cent of our overseas trade was carried in American bottoms.

[At this point Mr. FLETCHER yielded to Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts and a colloquy took place, in which several Senators participated.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall be glad to continue now.

I was proceeding to say that in view of our experience, and as a result of my study of this whole question, I am satisfied that if we are ever going to have an American merchant marine of any consequence the Government must own and operate merchant ships. I do not say it must own and operate all of them; I do not mean that the Government must have an absolute monopoly; but I mean that it must have a fleet that is supplemental to the privately owned fleet—a fleet that will serve us when we most need it, that will protect our people in their rates and their commerce and open our markets, and that we will be able to bring into play as we did when we had to bring coal from England and when we had to send wheat to Russia. We were able to take those cargoes in our own ships. If we had not been, our people would have been taxed two and three times the going rates on those commodities just because we had no ships and had to be dependent upon foreign vessels to move them.

I maintain also that the fact that the Government owns and operates merchant ships does not mean that private enterprise must abandon the field or be driven out. On the contrary, private enterprise can be encouraged and helped and benefited by the activities of the Government in this field. In my judgment, we should hold to that policy of the Government's owning and operating merchant ships and set about sincerely and honestly and earnestly to have it succeed. There is no question that it can be done. There is less question that it is best for the country. Sell those ships that we do not need to carry out this purpose and plan when we can sell them at fair prices based on market value.

Tie them up meanwhile when they are not needed and care for them. Operate directly by the Government those that are needed to serve our overseas commerce, and to put into full execution that policy looking to future needs and requirements. It will be time enough hereafter, when the plan shall have been given a fair trial, and we have settled down to stable conditions, and development shall have taken place, to consider and determine whether or not the policy should be changed or modified.

As illustrating the point that individuals will not be driven out of the business, and that it will not stifle enterprise to have the Government operate ships, I refer to the Commerce Report of January 29, at page 302:

CURRENT AMERICAN SHIPBUILDING.

On January 1, 1923, American shipyards were building, or under contract to build, for private shipowners, 218 steel vessels, of 251,858 gross tons, compared with 216 steel vessels, of 257,328 gross tons, on December 1, 1922.

Then it gives the number of vessels completed in December, showing that now, while we are claiming to be operating by the Government and while we are owning these ships, and have been for more than two years, yards are busy building for private owners, and the building is increasing all the while.

At page 170 of the Commerce Reports of January 15, 1923, the following is stated:

CURRENT AMERICAN SHIPBUILDING.

On December 1, 1922, American shipyards were building, or under contract to build, for private shipowners, 216 steel vessels of 257,828 gross tons, compared with 197 steel vessels of 258,373 gross tons on November 1, 1922.

These figures do not include Government ships or ships building or contracted for by the United States Shipping Board.

Following is a summary of reports of shipyards to the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, showing the number and gross tonnage of steel vessels under construction or contract for private owners on December 1, 1922:

Companies.	Number.	Gross tonnage.
American Bridge Co., Ambridge, Pa	83	38,050
American Car & Foundry Co., Wilmington, Del	6	350
American Shipbuilding Co., Cleveland, Ohio	6	46,100
Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	1	800
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation (Ltd.):
Baltimore Dry Docks Plant, Locust Point, Baltimore, Md	1	920
Harlan Plant, Wilmington, Del	6	2,736
Sparrows Point Plant, Sparrows Point, Md	4	4,200
Union Plant, San Francisco, Calif	4	29,682
Chas. Ward Engineering Works, Charleston, W. Va	3	1,820
Dravo Contracting Co., Pittsburgh, Pa	18	6,465
Dubuque Boat & Boiler Works, Dubuque, Iowa	1	125
Federal Shipbuilding Co., Newark, N. J	6	15,000
Great Lakes Engineering Works, River Rouge, Mich	2	8,550
Howard Shipyards Co., Jeffersonville, Ind	2	995
James Rees & Sons Co., Pittsburgh, Pa	1	175
Johnson Iron Works, Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co., New Orleans, La	2	750
Kyle & Purdy (Inc.), City Island, N. Y	2	710
Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Corporation, Los Angeles, Calif	2	3,500
Manitowoc Shipbuilding Corporation, Manitowoc, Wis	1	175
Marietta Manufacturing Co., Point Pleasant, W. Va	11	4,050
Nashville Bridge Co., Nashville, Tenn	2	500
Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Newport News, Va	2	13,000
New York Shipbuilding Corporation, Camden, N. J	7	29,990
The Pusey & Jones Co., Wilmington, Del	6	7,740
Riter-Conley Co., Pittsburgh, Pa	10	9,000
Staten Island Shipbuilding Co., Mariners Harbor, N. Y	5	2,738
Sun Shipbuilding Co., Chester, Pa	12	14,150
Tebo Yacht Basin Co., Brooklyn, N. Y	3	657
Todd Dry Dock & Construction Corporation, Tacoma, Wash	1	3,000
Toledo Shipbuilding Co., Toledo, Ohio	2	8,200
Union Construction Co., Oakland, Calif	1	1,100
Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Co., Philadelphia, Pa	3	2,100
Total	216	257,328

DETAILS OF NEW CONTRACTS.

Following are the particulars of new contracts entered into during the month of November, 1922:

Vessel.	Approximate gross tonnage.	Speed.	Owner.	Trade.	Probable date of launch.
American Car & Foundry Co., Wilmington, Del.:
Hull No. 565	[1]	[1]	Chas. Warner Co.	Sand and gravel.	Spring, 1923.
Hull No. 566	[1]	[1]	do	do	Do.
Hull No. 567	[1]	[1]	do	do	Do.
Hull No. 568	[1]	[1]	do	do	Do.
Hull No. 569	[1]	[1]	do	do	Do.
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation (Ltd.), Harlan Plant, Wilminton, Del.:
Hull No. 3483	[1]	[1]	F. S. Fish	Yacht	[1]
Sparrows Point Plant, Sparrows Point, Md.:
Hull No. 4216	[1]	[1]	B. & O. R. R	Car float	[1]
Hull No. 4217	[1]	[1]	Hudson River Day Line.	Passenger.	[1]
Federal Shipbuilding Co., Newark, N. J.:
Hull No. 76	1,700	9	Pittsburgh Steamship Co.	Lakes	Apr. 16, 1923.
Hull No. 77	1,700	9	do	do	May 1, 1923.
New York Shipbuilding Corporation, Camden, N. J.:
Hull No. 278	3,100	12½	Red "D" Line	Passenger and cargo.	Summer, 1923.
Pusey & Jones Co., Wilmington, Del.:
Hull No. 1026	920	14	Philadelphia & Reading R.R.Co.	Ferry	[1]
Hull No. 1027	920	14	do	do	[1]
Sun Shipbuilding Co., Chester, Pa.:
Hull No. 62	[1]	[2]	American Dredging Co.	Oil	Dec. 10, 1922.
Hull No. 63	[1]	[2]	New York Central R. R. Co.	do	February, 1923.
Hull No. 64	[1]	[2]	do	do	Do.
Hull No. 65	[1]	[2]	Standard Transportation Co.	do	March, 1923.
Hull No. 66	[1]	[2]	Tide Water Oil Co.	do	Do.
Hull No. 67	[1]	[2]	do	do	Do.
Hull No. 68	[1]	[2]	do	do	Do.
Toledo Shipbuilding Co., Toledo, Ohio:
Hull No. 175	[1]	12	Huron Transportation Co.	Cement	June, 1923.

[1] Not given. [2] No power.

VESSELS COMPLETED IN NOVEMBER.

Following are the particulars of the new steel vessels completed during November, 1922, for private owners:

Vessel.	Gross tonnage.	Speed.	Owner.	Trade.
American Shipbuilding Co., Cleveland, Ohio:
Fred G. Hartwell	9,166	11½	Franklin Steamship Co.	Freight.
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation (Ltd.) Union Plant, Bethlehem, Pa.:
Shasta	1,782	[1]	James Rolph & Co., Trustee.	Ferry.
Kyle & Purdy (Inc.), City Island, N. Y.:
Bird S. Colier	190	10	Department of Public Welfare.	Do.
Nashville Bridge Co., Nashville, Tenn.:
Wm. P. Fiske	96	[1]	Nashville Supply Co.	Sand.
Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Newport News, Va.:
Ohio	513	[1]	E. W. Scripps	Yacht.
New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J.:
Rock Harbor	943	[1]	Rockland Transportation Co.	Freight.
Rock Haven	943	[1]	do	Do.

[1] Not given.

VESSELS COMPLETED IN NOVEMBER—continued.

Vessel.	Gross tonnage.	Speed.	Owner.	Trade.
The Pusey & Jones Co., Wilmington, Del.:
State of Maryland..	1,783	18	Seaboard-Bay Line....	Pass. and freight.
Sun Shipbuilding Co., Chester, Pa.:
"801"	542	(1)	Pennsylvania Railroad.	Grain.
"802"	542	(1)	.....do.....	Do.
"803"	542	(1)	.....do.....	Do

[1] Not given.

SHIPPING BOARD—CARGOES CARRIED IN OVERSEA COMMERCE DURING FIRST SEVEN MONTHS, 1921 AND 1922.

[Prepared by the Bureau of Research, United States Shipping Board.]

This study of the movement of commodities in oversea commerce is based on cargoes carried by vessels clearing United States ports, and not on shipments actually originating within the United States. Shipments in bond, which do not enter into export figures but do form an important part of cargoes clearing our ports in oversea carriage, are included. For instance, Canadian wheat, although not an export from the United States, moves in bond to Portland, Me., for shipment and becomes a part of cargo clearing. In many instances, therefore, the following tables are not comparable with figures from other sources for the same period based on the export of productions of the United States.

The commodity movement in oversea cargoes for the first seven months of 1922, compared with the corresponding period of 1921, shows a steady decrease in the volume of bulk commodities and an increase in the majority of manufactured products, as shown by the following table:

Principal outbound commodities, January–July, 1921 and 1922.

Commodities.	1921	1922
	Long tons.	Long tons.
Coal and coke	9,827,200	1,680,500
Petroleum and products	3,910,100	4,230,700
Wheat	3,883,500	2,459,500
Corn	1,078,600	1,845,000
Rye	208,300	411,300
Barley	188,200	195,100
Other grains	714,600	1,561,400
Lumber	853,100	1,622,700
Iron and steel manufactures	752,000	698,400
Cotton, raw	696,800	672,400
Wheat flour	567,900	696,500
Phosphates	407,600	265,700
Sugar	241,100	613,200
Machinery	168,800	86,200
Meat and dairy products	146,300	116,000
Sulphur	139,300	92,800
Tobacco	120,700	103,300
Chemicals	105,000	98,600
Other and general cargo	5,235,600	3,281,400
Total	29,254,700	20,730,700

Of course, as everybody knows, we have given encouragement to our shipping, and we will keep up the policy of giving American ships the monopoly of our coastwise trade. We have also assisted in other ways, and we will probably keep that up.

It appears from the Commerce Reports of November 20, 1922, at pages 497 and 498, that we have, under the ocean mail act of 1891, provided a system of contract payments at specific rates of American ocean steamers and paid out certain amounts, which I will have inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN OCEAN MAILS.

(Eugene T. Chamberlain, Transportation Division.)[1]

[The statistical summaries regarding United States mails in the following article are compiled from detailed figures in the unpublished report of the superintendent of foreign mails for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, furnished to the Department of Commerce through the courtesy of the Second Assistant Postmaster General.]

The only considerable payments by the Government of the United States at the present time to American merchant ships, outside of those involved in the operations of the United States Shipping Board, are the amounts paid for transportation of ocean mails to foreign countries.

The ocean mail act of 1891 provided a system of contract payments at specific rates for American ocean steamers of given rates of speed and given tonnages; but developments in shipbuilding and ocean transportation during the past third of a century have so changed conditions that the act is of no considerable present service, and during the past fiscal year only four mail routes were maintained under its provisions. The Oceanic, or Spreckels, Line, was paid $186,384 for its contract service from San Francisco to Hawaii and Australia, supplemented by payments from the Navy Department for transportation of naval supplies to American naval stations in the Pacific. The New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., or Ward Line, was paid $55,752 for its mail service from New York to Vera Cruz, but this contract expired on October 31, 1922, and is not likely to be renewed. The Red D Line was paid $65,422 under its two contracts for carrying the mails from New York to Venezuela.

All told, therefore, during the past fiscal year the expenditures under the act of 1891, sometimes called the "postal subsidy law," amounted to only $307,558, while the total cost of carrying the American ocean mails was $5,500,000 in round numbers, not including $379,000 for transporting closed mails of foreign origin.

OCEAN MAIL TRANSPORTATION COSTS—TRANSATLANTIC SERVICE.

The ocean transportation of the great volume of American mails for foreign countries is paid for according to the weight carried, American steamers receiving 80 cents a pound for letters and post cards and 8 cents a pound for other articles, while foreign steamers are paid under the international postal rates 4 francs per kilo, reckoned as equivalent during the past fiscal year to 35 cents a pound for letters and post cards, and 50 centimes per kilo (4½ cents a pound) for other articles. On these bases (including payments under the act of 1891 already mentioned), the cost of transporting American ocean mails for the year ended June 30, 1922, was as follows:

Transportation costs on United States ocean mails, year ended June 30, 1922.

	American ships.	Foreign ships.	Total.
Trans-Atlantic mails	$2,084,400	$1,268,239	$3,352,639
Trans-Pacific mails	744,742	163,634	908,375
Miscellaneous mails	1,022,622	209,656	1,232,278
Total	3,851,764	1,641,529	5,493,292

The trans-Atlantic mails, of course, exceeded in weight those to all the rest of the world, during the past fiscal year, comprising almost 2,800,000 pounds of letters and post cards and a little over 30,500,000 pounds of other articles. The payments to the principal steamship lines engaged in this service were as follows:

American ships:
United States Lines	$1,036,149
International Mercantile Marine	426,001
Red Star	270,751
United American Line	149,014
United States Mail Steamship Co	117,477
A. H. Bull	31,887
All others	52,820
Total to American	2,084,099
Foreign ships:
Cunard	272,230
White Star	271,980
Transatlantique	200,003
Baltic-American	152,893
Red Star	100,717
Holland-American	66,797
United American	29,323
Scandinavian-American	28,921
All others	145,375
Total to foreign	1,268,239

TRANS-PACIFIC AND MISCELLANEOUS SERVICES—CLOSED MAILS.

The trans-Pacific service, of course, is concentrated in fewer lines and the volume of mails is much less—570,000 pounds of letters and post cards and nearly 11,000,000 pounds of other articles. The principal lines and payments for the past fiscal year were:

American ships:
Admiral Line	$396,543
Oceanic (Spreckles) contract	186,384
Pacific Mail Steamship Co	144,684
China Mail Steamship Co	12,930
All others	4,200
Total to American	744,741
Foreign ships:
Union Steamship Co	56,698
Toyo Kisen Kaisha	30,821
Osaka Shosen Kaisha	28,019
Nippon Yusen Kaisha	17,971
Canadian Pacific	12,579
All others	17,545
Total to foreign	163,633

The miscellaneous service includes foreign mails to South America, the West Indies, and foreign countries and islands generally in the American Hemisphere. The weight of letters and post cards in this service was 540,000 pounds, and the weight of other articles 11,260,000 pounds. Except to South America the distances are relatively short, and mails are carried by many steamers and occasionally by sailing vessels (paid whether American or foreign, at the foreign-steamer rates). The principal lines and payments during the year ended June 30, 1922, were:

American ships:
Munson Line	$163,793
United Fruit (New York)	156,676
United Fruit (New Orleans)	138,263
Clyde Line	99,942
Grace Steamship Co	99,803
Panama Steamship Co	94,848
Red D (contract)	65,422
Red D	16,995
New York & Cuba Mail (contract)	55,752

[1] [This is the thirteenth in the series of articles by Mr. Chamberlain on Government subsidies to the merchant marine in various countries. Preceding articles have appeared in Commerce Reports as follows: France, May 8, page 369, August 7, page 398, and September 11, page 737; United Kingdom, July 31, page 326, and October 2, page 41; Norway, August 21, page 551, and October 30, page 302; Canada, September 4, page 679, and October 9, page 114; Japan, September 25, page 837; Australia, October 16, page 170; Denmark, October 23, page 239; Belgium, November 6, page 372.]

American ships—Continued.
New York & Cuba Mail	$46,623
Luckenbach Steamship Co	40,205
Bull Insular Line	19,469
Pacific Mail Steamship Co	13,027
All others	11,804
Total to American	1,022,622
Foreign ships:
Pacific Steam Navigation Co	24,306
Lamport & Holt	24,172
Furness Bermuda Line	18,236
Quebec Steamship Co	14,515
Trinidad Line	10,366
Cuyamel Fruit Co	9,905
All others	108,155
Total to foreign	209,655

The closed mails of foreign origin, of course, are not American mails but transit mails through the United States forwarded to foreign destinations and paid for at international rates already quoted, regardless of whether the ship is American or foreign. These mails for the past year amounted to 498,000 pounds of letters and post cards and 665,000 pounds of other articles carried across the Atlantic at a cost of $203,500 to the Post Office; in the miscellaneous service they made up 176,500 pounds of letters and post cards and 2,610,000 pounds of other articles, with a carriage cost of $175,400.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR FOREIGN MAIL SERVICE, 1914–1922.

The growth of the foreign mail service of the United States during the past nine years and the effects upon it of the war may be judged from the appropriations for each fiscal year, beginning with that which ended June 30, 1914:

1914	$3,900,000	1919	$5,800,000
1915	4,000,000	1920	4,700,000
1916	4,000,000	1921	4,700,000
1917	3,800,000	1922	5,920,000
1918	3,720,900

In comparison, the British appropriations for foreign and colonial mails of the United Kingdom covering the fiscal year ended March 31, 1914, were £640,386; appropriations for the fiscal year 1921–22 were £685,470; and for the current year 1922–23 are £672,260. The weight of the foreign and colonial mails out of the United Kingdom in the year 1913–14 was 6,291,000 pounds of letters and post cards and 42,921,000 pounds of other articles; the foreign and colonial mails to the United Kingdom were 4,990,000 pounds of letters and post cards and 13,055,000 pounds of other articles. No later figures are available.

Mr. FLETCHER. There appears also in the July 31, 1922, Commerce Reports, at page 326, a statement under the head "Ocean Mail Contracts for the United Kingdom," which gives the ocean mail contract system for the United Kingdom in operation practically as in 1913. I ask to have that inserted in the RECORD without reading. This shows how baseless is the argument that we must subsidize shipping because other countries have pursued such a policy with extreme liberality.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS FOR THE UNITED KINGDOM.

[Assistant Trade Commissioner H. B. Allin Smith, London, June 27.]

The ocean mail contract system of the United Kingdom is in operation now practically as in 1913, although there have been several modifications to the advantage of the British Government and contributory to the companies concerned.

SERVICES BETWEEN SOUTHAMPTON AND NEW YORK.

The contract with the Cunard Steamship Co. for a mail service every Saturday from Southampton to New York, with supplemental services, now provides for a payment of £65,390 ($317,795 at normal exchange, or $290,272 at current exchange of $4.44), a reduction, compared with the payment of $330,922 in 1913. The admiralty subvention, which in 1913 was £150,000, has been reduced to £90,000, partly in consequence of the loss of the Lusitania.

The construction of this steamship and of the Mauretania was the result of a special contract (expiring in 1927) by which the British Government assured to the Cunard Steamship Co. for 20 years a mail subsidy of £68,000 and an admiralty subvention of £150,000, together with a Government loan of £2,600,000 at 2¾ per cent to insure the construction of two steamships of higher speed than the trans-Atlantic liners of the North German Lloyd. The total contract payment to the Cunard Line for trans-Atlantic service from the United Kingdom to New York was thus £218,000 in 1913; at the present time it is £155,390, a reduction of £62,610.

This reduction has been offset, however, by a contract with the White Star Line (Oceanic Steam Navigation Co.) for a mail service every Wednesday from Southampton to New York and for transportation of parcel post by all steamers of the line in return for £72,000 annually. The present contract payments by the British Government for the mail services between Southampton and New York are accordingly £137,390 ($667,715 at normal exchange), an increase of about £10,000 over 1913. This expenditure covers subsidiary mail and parcel-post service by other steamers of the two companies.

Under the pre-war Cunard contract the Government secured two auxiliary cruisers, the Mauretania and Lusitania, built in 1907, each of 30,750 gross tons and 25 knots speed. Under the present arrangement the Cunard contract is performed by the Mauretania, as before; by the Aquitania, launched in 1915, of 45,650 gross tons, 24 knots speed; and by the Berengaria (formerly the German Imperator), launched in 1912, of 52,022 gross tons, 23 knots speed. The new White Star contract is performed by the Olympic, built in 1911, of 45,360 gross tons, 24 knots speed; the Majestic (formerly the German Bismarck), launched in 1914, of 56,000 gross tons, 24 knots speed; and the Homeric (formerly the German Columbus), launched in 1913, of 35,000 gross tons, 18 knots speed.

COMPETITION IN TRANS-ATLANTIC SERVICE.

Of quite as much importance to the companies as the mail subsidy and Admiralty subvention is the elimination of German competition represented in the three German steamers noted above that were built for trans-Atlantic passenger trade.

The only trans-Atlantic mail steamers of 22 knots or over now in competition with the Cunard and White Star ships named are the France, launched in 1912, of 23,666 gross tons, 24 knots speed; the Paris, launched in 1917, of 33,700 gross tons, 22 knots speed; and La Savoie, of 11,168 gross tons, or La Lorraine, of 11,372 gross tons, both launched in 1900, and of 21 knots speed. These perform the weekly mail contract service from Havre to New York under agreement between the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique and the French Government. The French budget estimates for 1923 provide a subvention of 2,500,000 francs for this service, the same amount as during the current year. At the normal rate of exchange this would equal $482,500, but at the present rate (8.2) it actually equals only $205,000.

SERVICES TO THE FAR EAST AND AUSTRALIA.

The principal British ocean mail contract is with the Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co. for transportation of mail from Southampton weekly to Bombay and return for £160,000, fortnightly to Shanghai and return for £50,000, and once a month to Adelaide and return for £42,500—in all, £252,500 ($1,227,150 at normal exchange), compared with $1,484,300 in 1913. This reduction is due to the fact that in 1913 the Australian mails were carried fortnightly, instead of monthly as at present, by the Peninsular & Oriental steamships; the Australian line of Government steamers is also beginning to carry the mails monthly, thus maintaining the pre-war regularity of service.

Even before the war, with the full measure of self-government assumed by British oversea Dominions, they also assumed a share of the naval expenditures of the British Empire and of the cost of ocean mail transportation. The colonial mail contracts are not available at the present time, and they are complicated by the fact that, in consequence of the war, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, and British India all own and operate Government fleets of merchant ships.

The letter mails from the United Kingdom for India, China, and Australia are not dispatched at Southhampton on the Peninsular & Oriental steamers, but are sent by rail to Dover and thence by special Indian mail packet to Calais. For this mail-packet service a subsidy of £10,000 is granted, increased for the present to £17,500. From Calais the mails are forwarded by French and Italian railroads to Brindisi, and thence by small, fast steamers to the Peninsula & Oriental ocean liners as they enter or leave the Suez Canal, thus gaining the time saved by the greater speed of express trains over express steamers.

For the same reason, among others, the Italian Government has not provided mail subsidies to Italian lines to the Unitd States, as quicker dispatch for Italian mails is secured by sending them by rail to Cherbourg, Havre, or Southhampton, there to embark on the British or French trans-Atlantic liners.

Incidentally it may be noted that the British Government is considering projects for the transportation of mails by aerial navigation from the United Kingdom to Egypt, India, and Australia; the French Government already has air-mail services to several points in French Africa.

SERVICES TO THE CONTINENT.

Mails from the United Kingdom for the Continent of Europe are dispatched daily by the Dover-Calais ferry of the Southeastern & Chatham Railway, the annual subsidy for this service being £30,000, as before the war. For the daily mail service from Harwich to the Hook of Holland the pre-war subsidy was £850, but this at present is under revision.

SERVICES TO SOUTH AND WEST AFRICA.

The Union of South is charged with the subsidy to the Union-Castle Line for transportation of mails between the Cape of Good Hope and England; the present arrangement, however, is not at hand. The British Post Office Department appropriates £5,070 to the ships of this line for stopping once in four weeks outward and inward bound at Ascension Island and St. Helena.

It also pays, according to the volume of mails, an approximate total of £15,355 to the African Steamship Co. and to the British & African Steam Navigation Co. for transporting the mails every Saturday from Liverpool to British possessions on the West Coast of Africa. These two arrangements are the same as before the war. So far as both British and French possessions in Africa are concerned, it is quite probable that in the near future letter mail will be transported under subvention contracts with aerial navigation companies.

[The report received from London by the Department of Commerce makes no mention of the Royal Mail Packet Co.'s subvention to the West Indies, which has been in effect with varying services and varying subsidies for nearly 80 years. Its contracts for a fortnightly service from Southampton to Trinidad ($306,000) and for fornightly service between Barbados and Guiana ($121,700) expired in 1917. It is possible that they have not been renewed, as Sir Owen Phillips, president of the company, stated on several occasions in the past that the execution of the contract entailed a loss; and under existing shipping conditions that loss would doubtless be increased. It is also possible that the contract is under revision, or that the company has been accidentally omitted from the report. Information on this point will be published in a later issue of Commerce Reports.]

Mr. FLETCHER. I have other references to the Commerce Reports dealing with other phases of the matter and furnishing authority for other matters, which I will not now take the time to refer to.

I will sum up what I maintain would happen if this bill should be enacted into law.

First. It would retard the establishment of an American merchant marine and probably destroy what we have.

Second. It would encourage and promote waste, recklessness, and inefficiency.

Third. It would result in our profit-earning ships, particularly the passenger vessels, passing into the hands of private owners, to whom the Government would pay out of the Treasury and therefore out of taxes collected from the people, millions of dollars each year, as I have specified heretofore. The Government would be deprived of the ships and the profits they would earn. The passenger ships would be the chief beneficiaries under the bill.

I have cited in the minority report various instances to show what the America and what the Washington would be entitled to and what a cargo ship would be entitled to. From $300,000 to $400,000 a year would come to the passenger ship now earning good profits, the best paying of the profit-paying portion of the fleet, and about $11,000 a year would come to the cargo ships, which are the ships which move our commerce and which have always had to be depended upon for the carrying of overseas trade.

Fourth. A few of the other and best vessels would be sold at about one-third what they could be replaced for, and the purchasers of them would be paid large amounts out of the Treasury annually for their operation.

Fifth. Some of the remaining ships would continue to be operated and that would necessitate keeping up the overhead of about $8,000,000 a year.

Mr. Lasker has said he hopes to get that down to $7,500,000, and he thinks that will be a very great achievement. It would certainly be much less than it is costing now. He said, also, in his statement before the committee that this overhead would continue whether we operated 100 ships or 400 ships. Consequently we do not get rid of that overhead, that item which enters most largely into the cost of operating ships, and these other expenses, but we add the subsidy which the bill will carry to the overhead and to the losses now occurring, because we can not expect to immediately abandon all operation when this bill passes, nor immediately sell the ships.

In talking about these losses I want to say now, referring to the letter which the Senator from New York will have put into the RECORD, that it is not fair to charge against operating losses these enormous expenditures for reconditioning and for what are called repairs, but are really structural changes in the ships. We might as well charge to the cost of operating the cost of every new ship added to the line. The type of the ship has been changed at enormous expense at different times, making a passenger ship out of a cargo ship, and all that sort of thing, at enormous expense, and they want to charge that up against operating costs.

It is not fair; it is not right; it is not the truth. It is not a part of the operating cost. So they want to charge against Mr. Rossbottom the complete reconditioning and structural changes of certain ships, and they attempt to show that when that is charged against the cost of operation, along with $360,000 for rent of pier and $600,000 for advertising, we have thereby had certain losses. Many of these items should not be charged against operation; and that remark applies to all the shipping down the line. Wherever there is talk about sustaining losses, those losses are largely due to the fact that the ships have been reconditioned and changed at enormous expense, and that is charged up to operating cost.

Sixth. The other cargo carriers would be tied up at expense and depreciation.

If the bill does not pass, the Shipping Board should continue to operate directly the United States Line, replacing the 25-year-old ex-German tubs with proper ships for the trans-Atlantic business, having the ships always at our command and paying into the Treasury the profits they can undoubtedly make. The ex-German ships can be transferred to the Pacific, where they can be operated at a profit.

Some cargo vessels can be chartered on a bare-boat basis, and that should be done. Others can be operated on routes now well established, where they can be operated at a profit or without loss and serve American commerce, keeping rates reasonable. Where serious losses are occurring, the ships should be withdrawn. Of course, sales should be made whenever possible at a figure approaching world market prices.

These vessels not now in operation without serious losses and which can not be chartered or sold should be distributed to the 22 or more deep-water ports on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific in proportion to the existing and prospective commerce as to each port, anchored in fresh water, and a percentage of them kept in condition to be available for use on a week or 10 days' notice. Either that or turn them over to the United States Lines or the Panama Steamship Co. if we want to get rid of the Shipping Board and its activities in that direction, and let them be responsible for them, and let them find work for them, or take care of them until trade revives and there is demand for them.

The demand will come for them as soon as we recover from the intense depression of the past year or more, when ships were everywhere dragging the bottom. Trade will revive and the ships will be needed—all of them.

Ships have been tied up all over the world, in every country. Every maritime nation on earth has had merchant ships tied up at the piers waiting for business, because there was not trade enough to keep them occupied. But that will not continue.

We should denounce the old, obsolete commercial conventions, as their terms provide, and become free to provide for discriminating duties if we should find within a few years that is advisable.

We should pay such wages, provide such living conditions on board, as will secure well trained and experienced American officers and seamen, and thus keep the ships up and expedite movement and save costly repair bills.

The only Government operation we have had, to wit, the Panama Line and the United States Line, has been successful, and there is no occasion to rush into the policy of subsidizing shipping.

We should save the country from the proposed raid on the Treasury, a step which would be ineffective in accomplishing what the supporters claim, and demoralizing to the whole enterprise.

The Shipping Board should discontinue the M. O.-4 contracts and take over the ships and operate them directly. I have repeatedly shown that Government operation can be efficient and successful. The only illustrations of it are the United States Line, managed by Mr. Rossbottom for the Shipping Board, and the Panama Steamship Line, operated by the War Department, through Governor Morrow, of the Canal Zone. The agency of the Shipping Board, known as "the New York office," under Capt. Charles Yates, successfully operated 165 ships during the war, got them in and out of port, manning them, repairing them, and keeping them at sea as much as possible, and at prices as little as possible. They were operated in the normal business-like manner, and carried 20 per cent of all the supplies taken to Europe under the United States flag for both our own and our allies' armies, and made a record for quick turn around, for quick repairs, for commissary, and in other respects, not exceeded by the Navy or any private companies. It was wiped out early in 1919 by the Shipping Board, for unknown reasons.

I would be in no hurry to terminate Government operation. As a permanent maritime policy I believe it could be made to promote the prosperity of the private companies and develop a real national sea following for all the future.

Mr. President, I have not concluded what I intended to cover in these remarks, but for the present I will not pursue the subject further.

APPENDIX 1.

OCEAN DIFFERENTIALS.

Whereas at present, when distance favors the North Atlantic ports, the Shipping Board allows a differential on the ocean rates in favor of those ports; and

Whereas at present, when distance favors the South Atlantic and Gulf ports, the Shipping Board allows no differential in favor of those ports; and

Whereas such discrimination against South Atlantic and Gulf ports in ocean rates tends to nullify the building up of our trade routes and the equalization of export rail rates from the Middle West, and consequently tends to hamper the establishment of additional outlets to world markets needed by producers of the Middle West: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Shipping Board should forthwith, either abandon the differentials existing in favor of North Atlantic ports or establish a similar differential in favor of South Atlantic and Gulf ports, where distance favors those ports; and be it further

Resolved, That the contact committee appointed at the suggestion of Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, by Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, president of the National Merchant Marine Association, be urged to take this matter up at once with the Shipping Board.

TRAMP SHIPS.

Whereas the export movement of the agricultural and live-stock products of the Middle West and South are largely seasonal; and

Whereas such seasonal movement of bulk commodities require a flexibility of ocean transportation that can not be secured through liner or semiliner service; and

Whereas the experience of the world has demonstrated that tramp ship service operated by companies trained in that particular type of ship operation constitutes the backbone of a successful merchant marine; and

Whereas the Shipping Board has apparently, for reasons of economy, given up or delayed the building up of an independent tramp ship service; and

Whereas the large part of our Government-owned tonnage is suitable only for tramp ship operation, and can not be sold unless a market for this type of service is built up by the immediate encouragement of efficient tramp ship operators: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the interests of the farmers and producers of the Middle West and South we urge the Shipping Board immediately to start the development of an independent tramp service through efficient tramp ship operators; and be it further

Resolved, That if the Shipping Board feels that it has not authority to do so under the provisions of the Jones Act, the pending shipping bill should in that case be amended to give the Shipping Board the necessary authority; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be presented to the President and to the chairman of the Shipping Board, and that a special committee be appointed to confer in regard to this matter with the President, the chairman of the Shipping Board, and, if necessary, with the appropriate committees of the Senate and House.

—

COORDINATION OF RAIL AND OCEAN TRANSPORTATION.

Whereas without coordination of rail and ocean transportation it is manifest that the agricultural producers and interior manufacturers of the country will be at a permanent disadvantage in competing with the seaboard agricultural producers of foreign countries and of seaboard manufacturers at our own ports and at foreign ports; and

Whereas agricultural producers and manufacturers of the interior must know accurately what their transportation costs will likely be to foreign countries in order that the competition of foreign producers can be effectively met, and likewise foreign buyers must know accurately what these costs are from the point of shipment to destination in order to give preference to American goods; and

Whereas the Middle West feels as its fundamental right to ship its export products of farm, factory, and mine via the ports of the United States with as much freedom as is exercised in domestic shipments and in making shipments to and from Canada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Middle West that the rail and ocean transportation media be drawn together and made to function as one transportation system to all ports of the world; and be it further

Resolved, That permission be given to railroads and steamship lines to enter into cooperative agreements to divide their said joint rates in a manner similar to that universally pursued in the division of rates on domestic traffic and traffic with Canada.

—

EXPORT RAIL RATES.

Whereas the congestion of traffic and the consequent paralysis of our transportation and industrial systems, caused in 1919 and 1920 by our continued attempt to ship the great bulk of our exports through the "neck of the bottle" at the North Atlantic ports, cost us large sums of money; and

Whereas in the words of Mr. Elisha Lee, vice president of the Pennsylvania system: "The next time our country has a real revival in business we shall in all probability be confronted with the most severe congestion of railroad traffic and the greatest inadequacy of railroad facilities ever experienced in our history"; and

Whereas this congestion in the northeast has been largely caused by our export rail-rate structure, which has forced the products of the Middle West to be concentrated at or near North Atlantic ports; and

Whereas such concentration and consequent congestion can best be relieved by the building up of trade routes from other ports, which can not be successfully done without an equalization of export and import rail rates to all ports; and

Whereas in order to relieve this congestion the United States Railroad Administration in 1920 established export rail rates to the Gulf and South Atlantic on a parity with those to New York, Halifax, and St. Johns; and

Whereas an attempt is now being made on the part of certain interests to secure a readjustment of those rates to the disadvantage of the Middle West and southern ports: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is now considering the question of export and import rates from all ports, be urged to maintain the equalization already granted in these rates from the Middle West, and to extend this equalization to all export rates from the Middle West not already equalized; and to establish equalized import rates from those ports to the Middle West; and be it further

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to attend the hearings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in Philadelphia on December 11, to present this resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

—

TRADE ROUTES.

Whereas the producers and consumers of the Middle West are vitally interested in the continued development and ultimate success of the trade routes required under section 7 of the Jones Act, from Pacific, Gulf, and South Atlantic ports, as well as from North Atlantic ports; and

Whereas the depression in foreign trade through which we have recently gone makes it impossible for the board to tell as yet which of such trade routes will ultimately prove profitable; and

Whereas the development and ultimate success of these trade routes can not be secured except by having their operation in the hands of independent companies backed by their local communities, as defined in section 2 (a) of the pending shipping bill, and not in the hands of mere agents of companies owned and controlled by other local communities and interested primarily in the development of other ports: Therefore be it

Resolved, That none of these trade routes should be discontinued as "unbusinesslike" under the terms of section 7 of the Jones Act until foreign trade conditions become more normal; and be it further

Resolved, That section 2 (b) of the pending shipping bill be amended so as to prevent monopoly in the operating as well as in the sales policy of the board, by making sure that when two trade routes are for the sake of economy temporarily operated as a unit nothing shall be done during such unified operation which will in any way interfere with the identity or ultimate success of either of such combined trade routes, or which will in any way tend to make one trade route become merely a subsidiary of the other.

—

[From Commerce Reports, Jan. 8, 1923.]

SURVEY OF INDUSTRIAL AND ECONOMIC CONDITIONS AT END OF 1922.

FOREIGN TRADE SITUATION.

[Julius Klein, Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.]

Certain outstanding tendencies are clearly indicated in the figures thus far available on the foreign trade of the United States for 1922: (1) There is a strong movement toward a more normal balance of trade. (2) Our exports have recently been increasing very decidedly. (3) Asia is taking a more prominent place in the whole picture, especially as a market for our exports and also as an increasingly important contributor to our imports. (4) Our purchases abroad seem to be more and more predominantly raw materials and basic commodities for further use in manufacture. In general our purchases of so-called "tropical materials," which before the war made up approximately one-third of our imports, now constitute approximately one-half.

On the basis of statistics now available it seems probable that our favorable trade balance for the year will amount only to about $750,000,000, as compared with nearly $2,000,000,000 in 1921. Deducting the $200,000,000 representing our net imports of gold, and such invisible items as remittances and tourist expenses, it is clearly evident that we have reached the end of our favorable-trade-balance period and that in the immediate future, barring unforeseen developments, our trade balance will be more in harmony with our international economic position.

The value of exports for the 11 months ended December 1, 1922, shows a decrease of about $700,000,000, as compared with the corresponding period of 1921. This falling off is more pronounced in the case of raw foodstuffs and manufactures than in prepared foodstuffs and semimanufactures, and is due to a very large extent to the change in the price level, as indicated by a comparison on a quantitative basis for a considerable number of representative products.

An examination of our export trade from a geographical standpoint indicates a decrease during 1922, against 1921, of about 25 per cent in the value of our exports to North and South America, as compared with a decline of 20 per cent in our total trade. In value our exports to Europe show a decrease of 18 per cent, while those to Asia have decreased only 15 per cent. The tendency toward an improvement in our export trade is quite pronounced; the November shipments amounted to $383,000,000, as compared with about $279,000,000 in January, this representing an accentuation of the usual seasonal rise at this time. The abnormal depression during 1921 showed a decline in monthly export figures for the same period, January to November, from $654,000,000 to $294,000,000.

According to figures for the first nine months of 1922, our imports for that year will probably show an increase of $410,000,000 over 1921. This is made up largely of raw materials and semimanufactures, while foodstuffs and finished manufactures show only a very slight increase. Geographically, the increased import trade is divided almost evenly between Europe and Asia, while the trade with the rest of the world shows very slight change from 1921.

—

APPENDIX 3.

[From New York Times, January 7, 1923.]

HOW IT HITS THE GLOVE BUYER.

Among the items in the tariff law recently enacted, the one concerning duties on gloves came in for considerable attention. Few are employed in the business and nearly all of them are in a single county in this State. Especially high duties, furthermore, are provided for kinds of gloves which have hitherto not been made in this country. Dealers have been taken to task by customers because of higher prices asked, and have had to do much explaining. One State association of retail dry goods men is sending to its members, for their use in connection with this, a letter written "by one of the largest manufacturers and importers of gloves in New York City." This states:

"According to the latest ruling of the glove appraiser at the port of New York, the advance in tariff on our lines of imported gloves is considerably in excess of what we expected. For your guidance, and to permit you to protect your stocks on hand for future make-up, we list the rate of duty that we paid prior to the passage of the Fordney-McCumber bill and the rate of duty we are compelled to pay since September 21, 1922:

	Old duty.	New duty.
Florine, 2-clasp, kid, overseam	$2.00	$6.20
Isoro, 2-clasp, kid, pique	2.25	7.00
Seville, 1-pearl clasp, kid, pique	2.25	7.00
Bandalette, 2-pearl clasps, novelty, kid, overseam	2.00	7.00
Capitol, 2-clasp, lamb, overseam	2.00	5.20
Capitol, 2-clasp, lamb, pique	2.25	5.60
Van Dyke, 2-clasp, kid, overseam	2.00	7.40
Elsinoro, 2-pearl clasps, kid, pique	2.25	8.00
Fielder, 4-button, semimousquetaire, kid	2.25	8.20
8-button mousquetaire, overseam	2.50	8.00
8-button Seville, mousquetaire, pique	2.75	9.00
12-button mousquetaire, overseam	3.50	11.75
12-button Seville, mousquetaire, pique	3.75	12.20
16-button mousquetaire, overseam	4.50	12.64
16-button Seville, mousquetaire, pique	4.75	13.80
20-button mousquetaire, overseam	5.50	22.00

"And on all of the above new rates there is an added item of $1\frac{1}{10}$ per cent, exportation tax.

"The case is one of many which cause high-tariff men to gnash their teeth in impotent rage when asked to explain them on their favorite theory that 'the foreigner pays the tax.'"

—

APPENDIX 4.

[From the Fort Myers (Fla.) Press, Thursday afternoon, January 4, 1923.]

HOW THE TARIFF LAW OPERATES.

Manufacturers of woolen fabrics and cotton textiles, to whom the Fordney-McCumber profiteers' tariff law has given the power to tax the American people almost at will, are taking their tolls in such measure that they are nearly all able to divide millions of dollars among their stockholders. Some of the concerns to which the Fordney-McCumber law has brought fine Christmas gifts and the amounts of these presents are the following:

Wanskuck Co., maker of worsted, increased capital stock from $500,000 to $8,000,000 and distributed the new shares as a stock dividend of 1,500 per cent.

York Manufacturing Co., Saco, Me., manufacturer of cloths, doubled capital stock of $1,800,000 and declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent.

New Bedford Cotton Mills Corporation increased its capital stock from $350,000 to $1,050,000, and distributed a stock dividend of 200 per cent.

Davis & Brown Woolen Co., Uxbridge, Mass., expanded its capital from $15,000 to $500,000 to make possible a 3,333 per cent stock dividend.

The Pacific Mills, manufacturing cotton and worsted cloths, have proposed to make their capitalization $20,000,000 instead of $10,000,000, and the directors have recommended a 100 per cent stock dividend.

The Cornell Mills, Fall River, makers of cotton cloth, have announced increase of their capital to permit of a 50 per cent stock dividend.

Lincoln Manufacturing Co., Fall River, is considering a recommendation of its directors that its capital stock be increased from $1,625,000 to $2,250,000, and that a stock dividend of 40 per cent be distributed among its shareholders.

Merrimac Woolen Co. increased its capital stock from $750,000 to $1,000,000 to provide for a stock dividend from capital and surplus the amount of which is not made known.

The Oakdale (R. I.) Worsted Co. increased its capital stock from $60,000 to $540,000 and distributed the difference in the form of an 800 per cent stock dividend.

Of course the cotton growers, sheep raisers, and other agricultural producers haven't declared any dividends recently; that is, not for themselves. They are not "protected" by the Fordney-McCumber law. The only big financial operation with which they are concerned at present is their indebtedness of $5,000,000,000.

APPENDIX 5.

THE VICIOUS CIRCLE.

In a speech in the Senate a few days ago Senator BORAH said:

"We are traveling in a vicious circle. We enacted an emergency, and also a permanent tariff bill. Nevertheless, the cry of distress from the producers of the country is even more piteous than at any time since the war. The farmer can find no markets abroad for his surplus products and without a market for his surplus products it is impossible for him to realize the value of that which he produces. We now propose to enact a ship subsidy bill but there are no cargoes to carry and no markets to supply. If we should give our millions in the way of subsidies, it would not open a single market nor supply a single cargo. These things are not produced by subsidies. There are millions of shipping tonnage lying idle now waiting to carry the cargoes which do not appear. Markets are opened and cargoes are produced by men going back to work and setting down to business, not by imposing more taxes in the way of subsidies."

The Republicans increased the tariff rates with the object of reducing imports. Of course this reduces the business done by the ships, for imports except from Canada and Mexico are brought in by ships. A reduction of imports reduces exports for the foreigner can't buy from us what we can make at less cost than he can market unless we buy from him what he offers at less cost than our own producers charge. This cuts down the need of ships again. Now, having cut down the cargoes of the shipping engaged in carrying products to and from America we propose to tax the people to make our shipping lines profitable whether they get business or not. We would, if we could, discriminate so as to bring more of the reduced shipping in American than in foreign bottoms and here again we would cut the ability of the foreigner to buy and again reduce our exports for the foreigner can make an amount of money transporting our products and can use it in paying for products they buy from us. In the interest of certain classes of this country we not only tax other classes but we also reduce their sales by making those who would buy them unable to do so.

But for the tariff our imports would be much greater and so would our exports. It is safe to say there would be 50 per cent more to carry and Americans would get a share of this increased business. We could help our shipping more by writing a tariff that was intended to encourage trade than we could by paying twice as large a subsidy as is proposed. The gain would be to the people in general. The loss would be to the protected classes for they would have to meet foreign competition and would not be able to hold up the American people as much as greed dictated and sell the balance of their products at whatever they could get for them in foreign markets. Our system makes the farmers of this country sell in the cheapest market and buy in the highest and it also gives their foreign competitors cheaper American products than they can buy.

APPENDIX 5½.

(Release Monday, July 24, 1922.)

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
DIVISION OF INFORMATION,
Washington.

(No. 437.)

Chairman Lasker, of the United States Shipping Board, made public to-day the results from the operation of vessels for the month of June.

The Shipping Board continues to cover all trading routes, so that American shippers can ship in American vessels to any port of the world.

The total expenses incurred in excess of income from vessel operations (including overhead, repairs, insurance, and lay-up expenses) were $2,783,216.29. This result is almost as good as the result attained in May, which was the most favorable month under the present board in the operation of United States Shipping Board vessels. The corresponding excess of expenses over income for the month of May was $2,660,486.81, or a slight increase in the month of June of $122,729.48. The total voyages completed in May were 205 and the total voyages completed in June were 198—a decrease of 7 completed voyages.

The net excess of outlay over income on voyage operations for May (excluding overhead, repairs, and insurance) was $376,445.84. In June, for the first time, income exceeded outlay, the excess of income over outlay amounting to $204,531.75. This improvement is due partly to the increase in passenger revenues, which for the month of June showed an excess of income over outlay (excluding overhead, repairs, and insurance) of $354,630.78, which is an improvement of $137,261.65 over the preceding month.

A considerable improvement was effected in operation of cargo vessels. Excess of outlay over income in May amounted to $863,320.47 as against $317,816.78 in June, an improvement of $545,503.69.

Tanker voyages decreased from 40 in May to 22 in June and for the month of June the excess of income over outlay (excluding overhead, repairs, and insurance) for tanker voyages was $153,310.74, which is a decrease of $114,234.67 below the preceding month.

Charter-hire receipts for the month of May were $79,829.27 as against $70,634.99 for the month of June.

The outlay for repairs in May amounted to $1,019,232.65, as compared with $1,461,016.71 for the month of June. The larger expenditure for repairs offset the better direct operating results and prevented an outstanding improvement over the May results.

In this connection a committee has recently been appointed, consisting of Commissioner T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the board, and Vice Presidents J. Barstow Smull and Edward P. Farley, and Acting Vice President Joseph E. Sheedy, of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, who are now engaged in making a survey of Shipping Board tonnage, particularly that part of the fleet which is laid up, with a view to determining what repairs and reconditioning should be undertaken at this time. When this report is made and the work recommended is undertaken, the item for repairs will of necessity increase the excess of expenses over income.

Insurance premiums for May amounted to $329,839.88, as against $418,873.40 for the month of June.

The lay-up expenses remained substantially the same, amounting to $365,452.51 in May and $365,572.61 in June.

Salaries and wages amounted in May to $477,209 and in June to $471,396.80.

General expenses increased from $172,136.20 in May to $282,523.51.

These favorable results attained for the month of June are the result partly of the increased gross revenues resulting from the present heavy seasonal activity in passenger traffic and partly from the operating economies instituted and the consequent reduction in the operating expenses.

In making public this report Chairman Lasker stated that while the cost of operations is now low—and has constantly declined since the present administration has taken hold—he did not desire the impression to be conveyed that this low figure could be consistently maintained throughout the year, inasmuch as this is the best season of the year for ship operations, and passenger earnings are at a high peak. In later months, Mr. Lasker stated, large sums will have to be spent on putting the tied-up fleet in better condition.

Chairman Lasker in making public the above statement again emphasized that in its accounting the board does not figure capital charges and several forms of insurance, which the board carries itself. The chairman strongly feels that failure to include the proper proportion of capital charges in monthly cost statements does not present a true picture of the results, such as all commercial statements should reflect; these omissions, however, are in line with established practice.

APPENDIX 6.

[From the Seaman.]

REDUCTION OF CREWS MEANS INCREASE OF COST.

(By Andrew Furuseth.)

A merchant vessel is built to carry commodities and passengers across the water. When a vessel is occupied in doing this she is earning money. When she is lying in harbor she is expending money. It matters not when she is lying there idle, whether she is using an unduly long time in loading or discharging, or whether she is undergoing repairs—she is expending money. New vessels properly built are not supposed to be undergoing repairs every time they get into harbor. It has been generally stated that shipowners who really know how to handle their ships endeavor to sell them when they have to undergo serious repairs, such as getting new boilers or replacing certain parts of the engine. They sell, and then buy new vessels, taking advantage of the increased knowledge in shipbuilding with reference to the cheapness with which cargo can be handled.

Steam vessels are subject to speedy deterioration when laid up, unless the greatest of care is used in protecting such part of the machinery as is especially subject to rusting. A vessel lying without this particular care is sure to go to the repair shop before she can be put into proper use. When a vessel is running and she has a crew in sufficient number and of sufficient skill she is keeping in such condition that, excepting an accident, she never has to undergo repairs until her boilers or machinery are beginning to wear out. In order to keep a vessel out of the repair yards, therefore, it is necessary to keep her running and to have a crew sufficient in number and in skill to keep her in proper order. "A stitch in time saves nine" has a still greater application to a vessel than it has to a garment, and a highly skilled crew of sufficient number will keep a vessel in running order.

Much is said in the public press about the difference in the manning of vessels under various flags. The following figures were taken from the Pacific Marine Review, January, 1921, page 38. They were first issued in the bulletin of Dow, Jones & Co., of New York, and show difference in number of unlicensed members of crew required to man an 8,800 dead-weight ton coal-burning cargo ship under various flags:

American.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

Quartermaster	--
Carpenter	1
Boatswain	1
Able seamen	7
Ordinary seamen	3
Young men	--
Total	12

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Deck engineer	1
Storekeeper	1
Oilers	3
Firemen	9
Coal passers	6
Total	20

STEWARD DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward	1
Chief cook	1
Second cook	1
Utility man	1
Messenger	2
Mess boys	2
Total	8
Total of unlicensed crew of American	40

British.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

Carpenter	1
Bosun	1
Able seamen	10
Ordinary seamen	2
Total	14

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Deck engineer	1
Storekeeper	1
Oilers	3
Firemen	8
Coal passers	4
Total	17

STEWARD DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward	1
Chief cook	1
Second cook	1
Utility man	1
Messenger	1
Mess boy	1
Total	6
Total of unlicensed crew of British	37

Japanese.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

Quartermaster	3
Carpenter	1
Boatswain	1
Able seamen	6
Ordinary seamen	6
Total	17

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Deck engineer	1
Storekeeper	1
Oilers	6
Firemen	12
Coal passers	8
Total	28

STEWARD DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward	1
Chief cook	1
Second cook	1
Messengers	3
Total	6
Total of unlicensed crew of Japanese	51

Norwegian.

DECK DEPARTMENT.

Quartermaster	1
Carpenter	1
Boatswain	1
Able seamen	5
Ordinary seamen	5
Young men	1
Total	14

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Deck engineer
Storekeeper
Oilers
Firemen	11
Coal passers	4
Boy	1
Total	16

STEWARD DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward	1
Chief cook	1
Mess boy	1
Total	3
Total of unlicensed crew of Norway	33

An American ship is supposed to carry more men in the deck department than any others, and yet this table, made up by the shipowners and published under their authority, shows that in an 8,800-dead-weight-ton coal-burning vessel the American crew was 40 unlicensed men—12 in the desk department, 20 in the engine department, and 8 in the steward department. The British ship carries 14 in the deck department, the Japanese 17 in the deck department, and the Norwegian 14 in the deck department. In the American ship we have 20 in the engine department, in the British 17, in the Japanese 28, and in the Norwegian 16. It will be noted that in the engine department the American carries 3 more than the British, 8 less than the Japanese, 4 more than the Norwegian. The real difference occurs in the steward department, where the American carries 2 more than the British, 2 more than the Japanese, and 5 more than the Norwegian.

Shipowners running vessels for themselves and with the purpose of making money are not carrying any more men than they need for the proper upkeep of their vessels, and yet the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation issues the following manning requirements:

Single-screw coal-burning cargo vessels, from 7,001 tons to 9,000, inclusive, effective December 10, 1921:

DECK DEPARTMENT.

Carpenter and boatswain	1
Able seamen	6
Ordinary seamen	2
Total	9

ENGINE DEPARTMENT.

Oilers	3
Firemen	9
Coal passers	3
Total	15

STEWARD DEPARTMENT.

Chief steward	1
Chief cook	1
Second cook and baker	1
Mess boys	3
Total	6
Total number of unlicensed crew	30

This, as will be seen, is applicable to vessels from 7,001 to 9,000 dead-weight tons, inclusive. Here we find the deck department reduced to 9, the engine department reduced to 15, and the steward department reduced to 6, making a total number of unlicensed crew of 30. This is a smaller crew than is carried by any vessel of any nation of that tonnage, figures of which are at all available.

Of course, it is absurd even to think of keeping a vessel of that size in order with a crew of this number.

It is rather difficult to understand the idea back of this sweeping reduction. American vessels built by the Shipping Board and operated by or allocated to private operators have been notorious for constant repairs. The repair bill is so great that it seems to be necessary to keep it secret. That repairs will eat up the vessels and thus bankrupt a shipping firm is a matter so well known among shipping men that they are trying to guard themselves against it by port captains and port engineers, and there are some shipping firms who have found that port captains and port engineers do not constitute safety. In one case a shipowner, who was suffering from repairs, began to examine the vessels himself, and then he began to dismiss engineers and officers that were not able to take care of the upkeep of the vessels, with the result that his vessels went less and less to the repair yards, until it practically ceased.

Of course, the United States Shipping Board is handling, to a very large extent, fabricated ships employing fabricated officers and fabricated seamen, and there was at one period some real excuse for this because of the tremendous expansion and of the fact that skill in seamanship does not grow like cabbages in the soil. Why the board should continue to use fabricated officers and fabricated seamen when skilled officers and skilled seamen are so abundant that in the last year skilled officers have been sailing in ratings in which they had no need of their certificates is very difficult to understand, and why they should reduce the number of men carried with the repair bills staring them in the face from every report seems incomprehensible.

Of course, the articles determine the number of men and the wages, and it isn't at all difficult to tell how much it costs per day while at sea. There is no room here for any juggling with figures or for padding of accounts. It surely is not possible that somebody has imposed upon the Shipping Board from sinister motives. That the repair shop or repair yard, and the stevedore can be used to eat up a ship's earnings, no matter how great they may be, can not be open to question. But there is another phase that is of equal importance. When a ship is not kept up the men on board are not learning seamanship in a sense in which the word "seamanship" is usually used by seamen. The skill that is used in a harbor in doing repair work, especially in dealing with the rigging and gear, is in the possession of men who have acquired their skill as seamen when the vessel was operated so as to develop and maintain skill. When such skill is passing from the seamen it will also pass from the longshoremen and the riggers.

It matters not what business is considered, skill is most important. Any business that employs men of low skill can not compete with other business men in the same line who employ higher skill. Really skilled men can do more with ineffective tools than unskilled men can do with the very best of tools. This is so elementary that it is difficult to understand how or why the same principle is not to apply at sea. One is forced to wonder why ordinary common sense is not, or can not be employed by men who handle ships under the American flag. It seems as if everything was being done with the deliberate purpose to destroy ships and the personnel at the same time, and as if the reduction in skill and number of men were part of this plan.

APPENDIX 7.

[From the Titusville (Fla.) Star Advocate of January 26, 1923.]

THREATENING THE SOUTH.

Florida newspapers are printing columns about taking all Shipping Board support away from Florida ports if the ship subsidy bill does not pass this Congress. The Tampa Daily Times has an article by David Lawrence, nationally known Washington correspondent, with the threat in it, concluding—

"The Shipping Board's plan of withdrawing southern trade routes is not issued as a threat to southern Senators but, etc."

Senator FLETCHER, who is leading the fight against the subsidy in the Senate, retorts that it is simply a threat to discipline him and other Senators.

The Shipping Board also intimates that Chairman Lasker and all members of the Shipping Board will resign if the subsidy bill fails. That sounds more like a promise than a threat. The Government has two gentlemen, Thomas H. Rossbottom and Capt. Charles Yates, either or both, who can organize and operate the ships better than the present Shipping Board or any other that has been appointed.

Meantime the Tampa Inter-Ocean Steamship Co., which operates the largest single fleet of Shipping Board freight ships—20 of them—announces a prosperous year. The Tampa company has branch offices in New Orleans, Galveston, New York, Savannah, Jacksonville, Barcelonia, Valencia, and Shanghai.

With the Government in shipping, the South will not have less shipping; it will have more. And neglected matters like the Florida East Coast Canal will get the deep-water development they deserve, in spite of the railroads, a matter of prime importance to Titusville.

But it is curious to see the prosperity of United States shipping depending in its present crisis so much upon two southerners in Congress, Senator FLETCHER and Judge EWIN L. DAVIS, of Tennessee. The present threat against them and the ports of the South is a tribute to their statesmanship.

[From Titusville, Fla., Star-Advocate, of January 9, 1923.]

SENATOR FLETCHER'S STATESMANLIKE IDEA.

Senator FLETCHER said in the Senate awhile ago:

"My proposal is this: Just as soon as possible the Shipping Board should take over and operate directly all their ships, precisely as the Government now operates the Panama Steamship Line and the United States Line. * * * Conduct the affairs on a business basis and according to business principles. I know they will say it can not be done. My answer is, try it. You have not yet given that plan a full and fair trial."

It has been done, Senator. But its very success was fatal to it.

What came to be called in Shipping Board and general maritime circles "The New York Office" was the agency of the Shipping Board that actually ran all the ships, 165 of them at the maximum, that the Government held in one great civilian fleet throughout the war. There were many ships operated by private companies, but this was the governmental undertaking. There were many cargo ships taken over by the Navy, but this was pure civilian. It was the New York office of the Division of Operations of the United States Shipping Board. But while other offices in Washington or New York or Philadelphia devised policy, or built ships, or assigned routes, or tabulated statistics, this office was the office that got the ships in and out of port, storing them, manning them, repairing them, keeping them at sea as much as possible and at piers as little as possible. These ships were operated nearer to the normal civilian basis of private shipping companies than any others, then even those of the private companies, dominated and interfered with as the private companies were throughout the war by numerous governmental war agencies.

"The New York office," as a matter of fact, had the distinction and the importance of building a stable spirit and program for the merchant marine both for the war and for peace time afterwards. Its record was a real record. Its expeditiousness and its economy were matters of comment in maritime circles. But the more successful the fleet was the fewer friends it had. Though it had 8,000 men afloat under its jurisdiction and was distributing a million dollars a day: carried 20 per cent of all the supplies taken to Europe under the United States flag for both our own armies and for our allies; and had a record for quick turn around, for quick repairs, for commissary, for manning that private companies and that the Navy could not equal, it was wiped out in January of 1913, as quickly as possible after the armistice, by orders issued out of the Washington headquarters of the Shipping Board that neither Congress nor the President knew anything about.

That is part of the unrevealed history of the Government in civilian shipping. It is the only part that stands on its own feet, courting fuller knowledge of it, and yielding nothing anywhere of its claims for competence and economy and farsightedness.

Senator FLETCHER can see his statesmanlike idea in its full workings, and profit by seeing what happened to it just because it lacked Senators to be jealous about its welfare, by calling for an inquiry into the operations and the fate of "The New York office" under Capt. Charles Yates.

APPENDIX 8.

DECEMBER 16, 1922.

EDITOR NEW YORK TRIBUNE,
New York City.

SIR: Your report, in your issue of December 12, of the operations of the Panama Steamship Co. for last year is grossly misleading in its implications. The great majority of your readers would infer from your article that the "Panama Ship Co. suffers heavy losses in year" (your main heading), "United States Government-owned fleet has deficit of nearly $600,000" (your subheading), because it is a Government line, and if it had been a privately owned and privately operated line there would have been no "heavy losses."

The propaganda character of your article and its gross unfairness is further manifested by the following paragraph taken from it:

"This company is the one to which Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, in his minority report on the ship subsidy bill, referred to as an instance of profitable operation under Government ownership. He advocated turning over the entire fleet to the Panama Line and the United States Line, which is operated directly by the Shipping Board, as an alternative to a subsidy."

Mr. T. H. Rossbottom, third vice president of the Panama Steamship Co., also general manager of the United States Lines, in his testimony before the joint congressional committee recently (p. 364 and following), said: "That during the more than 20 years of its ownership and operation by the United States Government it has made good earnings every year excepting the last two years, and most lines, even the best of the privately owned lines, had very bad earnings during the last two years, this being true of foreign lines as well as American lines." Mr. Rossbottom testified:

"We made money in the Panama Line up to about two years ago, when the depreciation in traffic and the reduction in rates resulted in a deficit, as it did with all other companies operating in that particular trade. * * * The year before last the Panama Line earned between $1,400,000 and $1,500,000."

This sort of testimony not being to the liking of the "statesmen" advocating the ship subsidy, the venerable chairman of the committee, Congressman GREENE, said: "I hardly can see what is to be gained from these questions."

Congressman BRIGGS and Congressman HARDY, however, insisted in developing the facts, Mr. HARDY saying: "It is a constant statement here that the Government can not make any profit out of anything." Whereupon Mr. Rossbottom continued as follows in reply to questions from members of the committee:

Mr. Rossbottom's testimony:

"The Panama Line ever since it started, with the exception of probably two years, always made a profit ranging from $89,000, which was, I think, the lowest, up to about $400,000, which I think was the highest, up to the time of the beginning of the war. The year before last the profits were $1,500,000. * * * In figuring profits we allowed for every charge that every other steamship company allows for—depreciation, interest charges, repairs, etc. I discussed all this very fully at a previous hearing of the Merchant Marine Committee when it was contemplated to abolish the Panama Steamship Co. We charged 6 per cent for depreciation each year. Privately owned lines as a rule charge only 5 per cent for depreciation. The Panama Railroad Steamship Co. has operated at a profit ever since its existence in 1893, with the exception, probably, of about three years, when it operated at a deficit. The three years at a deficit were last year and the year before that and one year about seven or eight years ago when we were in a rate war. Previous to our entering that trade the business was practically all done by foreign lines, and the rates between the United States and Central and South America were very much higher than between Europe and Central and South America. The establishment of the Panama Line reduced the rates and at the same time the line was operated at a profit. The line should not be abolished and the Government should continue to operate it."

It would take too much space to give all the evidence that was given to the committee on this matter. In fact, I am quite certain that you are fully aware of all the evidence that was given. However, the following questions and answers brought out by Senator CALDER will prove of special interest:

"Senator CALDER. Mr. Rossbottom, you said a moment ago, as I recollect it, that the Panama Line is operating at a profit?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

"Senator CALDER. Did you take into consideration the capital cost of the ships?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

"Senator CALDER. And the interest upon the capital cost?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

"Senator CALDER. In other words, you made a profit, allowing for interest charges?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Interest, depreciation, insurance, and repairs.

"Senator CALDER. Speaking of the profit of the Panama Line, did you not have a monopoly of that business, practically?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. No."

Mr. Rossbottom then proceeded to explain in detail that the Panama Canal Zone business was shared by the "Munson Line, which operated foreign ships, and the Hamburg-American Line and the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co." And he said further: "Our principal competitors in that traffic to the west coast were the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., the United American Line, and sometimes the United Fruit Co."

Mr. CALDER, however, persisted in his efforts to show that the Government-owned and Government operated Panama Line is a failure and should be put out of existence. He asked: "Still, you carried practically all of the material used in the construction work to be used on the canal, did you not?"

And Mr. Rossbottom replied again, "No." And he went on to explain that they carried all of the cement at a nominal rate to the Government of $1.25 a ton, which rate was a fraction of what the other lines charged. And yet, testified Mr. Rossbottom, notwithstanding all that, the Panama line was operated at a profit.

Senator CALDER then directed his questions toward the operation of the United States Lines; he asked, "Did I understand you to say that some of your ships in the United States Lines were being operated now at a profit?"

And Mr. Rossbottom replied, "Yes, sir."

Senator CALDER, still not satisfied, then asked. "You are operating the United States Lines in strict accordance with our existent laws? I mean, you know, we have had some complaint from the Seamen's Union and others that we were not carrying—some of our American vessels—a complete complement of American crews, as provided by law."

And Mr. Rossbottom replied, "There is no question about that. It is being operated in accordance with the law.

"Senator CALDER. It is?

"Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes; there is no question about that."

Mr. Rossbottom proceeded to state that in addition to making a profit upon the investment, after allowing for interest, depreciation, and repairs, the Panama Line carried freight that was needed by the Government at from one-half to one-third of the rates private lines were seeking to charge; as to general cargo, the reduction was about 25 per cent, and laborers were carried back and forth at almost a nominal price—that is, $20 to $30 a passenger.

The last annual report of the Panama Line, which you made the subject of your propaganda article, stated that if the Government had been charged ordinary commercial rates for the freight it shipped over the Panama Line, instead of the much lower rates that are being charged, the deficit would have been only $125,000, instead of the "nearly $600,000" which you so gleefully blazoned in the heading of your article. And if the $358,429.44 which the Panama Line last year charged off "for depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs" is taken into account, a less scrupulously managed company would have recorded a profit.

Considering the great depression in the steamship business, and the further fact, as made clear by the report, that in the trade covered by the Panama Steamship Co. a rate war waged last year between the United Fruit Co. and the Clyde Steamship Co., all of which resulted in the gross revenue of the Panama Steamship Co. for last year being cut almost in half, the showing of this Government-operated line is truly remarkable. It must also be borne in mind that the enemies of the Panama Steamship Co. who would legislate it out of existence because it gives the lie to their contention that the Government can not successfully operate a steamship line, leave nothing undone that will handicap and restrict the operations of this company.

I challenge you to show an instance of a privately operated steamship company, under similar circumstances, that has done as well as has the Panama Steamship Co. last year or at any other time in its history. The net surplus of the Panama Railroad Co., which includes the Panama Steamship Line, for the last fiscal year, after making the fullest provision and deductions for interest, depreciation, upkeep, and all other requirements, and after charging off all deficits, including those which you take such great satisfaction in emphasizing in your propaganda article, is $25,431,937.72. If you can get any satisfaction from these figures in your attempt to discredit this honestly and efficiently Government-owned and Government-operated railroad and steamship line, you are welcome to it.

In your issue of December 13 you indulge yourself further in a leading editorial on the subject, in which editorial, as is your practice when writing on a matter that you are espousing, you make many deliberate misstatements. You say that Senator FLETCHER says the subsidy bill (which you call the shipping bill) "may involve the Government in an annual expenditure of $42,000,000." "This figure," you then say, "is too high."

As a matter of fact, the above figure is not Senator FLETCHER's figure at all. It is Chairman Lasker's figure, as developed at the recent hearings when he was subjected to a little cross-examination. He admitted that the subsidy would cost the taxpayers $52,000,000, and Senator FLETCHER deducted $10,000,000 representing the item of income-tax deductions which the Senate Committee on Commerce threw out, though that has not yet been passed upon. The proponents of the bill would never be so honest in the use of their opponents' figures as Senator FLETCHER has been in using Lasker's own figures.

Senator FLETCHER has submitted to the Senate a very conservative and detailed calculation of what the ship susbidy bill will actually cost the taxpayers each year. It totaled "$72,750,000 besides other possible and contingent benefits that shipowners will receive." Representative DAVIS also made a calculation of the cost of the subsidy to the American people, and it exceeded $75,000,000. These figures of Senator FLETCHER are well known to you, yet you falsify your editorial by making it appear that Senator FLETCHER states that the subsidy "may involve the Government in an annual expenditure of (only) $42,000,000," when his figures are nearly double that.

Now, as to the rest of your editorial, I, though a Democrat, have been one of Wilson's severest critics because of what took place in the Shipping Board under his administration; but I have proved over and over again in my testimony before committees of both Houses of Congress, and in the public press, that the unparalleled corruption and Treasury looting that took place in the Shipping Board under Wilson's administration was committed by Republicans of national renown whom President Wilson called to his aid in the crisis created by the war, and who used their official positions and opportunities to amass fortunes for themselves, or to add to their already great fortunes, while at the same time sabotaging and making a total wreck of the legislation that created the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which legislation had for its specifically stated purpose the creation of a Government-owned and Government-operated merchant marine. If you will refer to my testimony on this matter before Congress you will find therein the names of some of the very distinguished Republicans who were part of the Shipping Board organization when it basely betrayed the Nation.

It was upon the recommendation of these eminent Republicans who were filling the most important posts in the Shipping Board—most of them of the 100 per cent American, dollar-a-year self-sacrificing patriot species—that Congress voted, quoting your words, "to take millions and millions out of the Treasury in order to build and maintain an ocean-going fleet." Over $4,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money was thus appropriated, and all that the people have for it is a fleet of nondescript vessels which would not bring $200,000,000, if it was possible to sell them all for the highest price that similar vessels can be bought for. Just think of it, ships costing over $4,000,000,000—most of it expended long after the war had ended—would not now bring one-half of 1 per cent of what the taxpayers paid for them.

And now you dare chide Senator FLETCHER for voting with the Republican Members of Congress these "millions and millions," which I warned against at the time, as the records of Congress will show, because I saw how these distinguished Republican patriots who were administering the affairs of the Shipping Board and fixing its policies, were studiedly wrecking it and betraying the American people.

Your persistence in stating that the subsidy will cost the taxpayers "from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year," in the face of Lasker's admission that it will cost $52,000,000, and Senator FLETCHER'S and Judge DAVIS'S figures showing that it will cost over $75,000,000 a year, is characteristic of the Tribune. What is a little thing like the truth when it stands in the way of looting the Public Treasury to the tune of three-fourths of a billion to a billion dollars during the next 10 years by such good Republicans as the subsidy-seeking shipping interests, which incidentally also feed you a page or more of advertising every day.

You conclude your editorial with the following:

"Mr. FLETCHER seems, in fact, unwilling to admit, even at this late date, the failure of Government operation. He said airily in his report:

"'One thing is certain, and that is there is no occasion for continuing these (Government operation) losses. If the Shipping Board can not escape them, then let them turn the ships over to the Panama Steamship Co., or to the United States Line under Mr. Rossbottom, these two concerns alone now being guilty of the offense of Government operation, and we have no doubt we will share in the experience which these lines have enjoyed up to this time, namely, a profitable and successful business.'"

Two days after the Fletcher report was filed the Panama Steamship Co. made its report for the fiscal year 1921–22. This disclosed a net deficit of $587,332, compared with a net deficit of $700,810 for the preceding year. There should be no question of the passage of the shipping bill if these are the best arguments which the Commerce Committee minority can advance against it.

The losses of the Shipping Board mentioned by Senator FLETCHER in the above-quoted statement are not "Government-operation" losses, as falsified by you by the totally unwarranted insertion of the words "Government operation" in parentheses. It was conclusively proven at the recent hearings, and so admitted by Shipping Board officials under cross-examination, that these losses are due to private operation of the Shipping Board's ships under the infamous MO–4 contract, which was deliberately contrived by officials of the Shipping Board to create such losses and insure against the successful and profitable operation of these Government-owned ships.

As to your sneering references to Senator FLETCHER'S recommendations that the Shipping Board's ships be turned over to the Panama Steamship Co. and the United States Lines, and your misleading reference to the report of the Panama Steamship Co. for last year, which the figures show was better than the previous year, the fore part of this letter, I am sure, effectually disposes of that.

Yours truly,

PHILIP MANSON.

APPENDIX 9.

JANUARY 5, 1923.

The EDITOR NEW YORK TRIBUNE,
New York City.

SIR: In your issue of January 1 you give considerable space to statements made by Mr. John L. Bogert, in which he undertakes to criticize Senator FLETCHER for his opposition to the subsidy bill now before Congress. Mr. Bogert's statements, like all other prosubsidy arguments, are either false or fallacious, as I will demonstrate.

He makes the statement that "we are practically back where we were in 1914." That statement is so grossly false that it would be absurd to even discuss it. He further states, "Not one single American ship is carrying any American grain." I am not prepared at this writing to give figures as to how much American grain is being carried in American ships, but I can declare Mr. Bogert's statement to be false because I, myself, have seen American grain being loaded into American ships within the last few weeks. After stating that 102 vessels were engaged to carry grain to Europe and not one United States ship was among them, Mr. Bogert asks Senator FLETCHER if he is prepared to show that the Shipping Board is willfully withholding its ships from charter. I will say that it can be shown that the Shipping Board is willfully withholding its ships from charter, except where secret, private contracts can be made with certain of its favorites. In fact, up to quite recently the Shipping Board had a fixed policy against chartering any of its vessels. It wanted them to be operated only under the infamous M O—4 agreement by the private operators whom it favored with its ships, and it picked operators who could be depended upon to show operating losses so as to make a heavy deficit, on the strength of which they could go before Congress and demand a subsidy.

Mr. Bogert, like all other advocates of the subsidy bill, makes the totally unwarranted and false statement that the subsidy bill will give us an American merchant marine and do all the other desirable things which he enumerates. Testimony was given and evidence submitted to the joint congressional committee which held hearings on the subsidy bill proving that the passage of this bill would not only not create a permanent American merchant marine but would, on the contrary, retard it. Permit me to quote briefly from my testimony at these hearings:

"No one questions the vital need of an American merchant marine. The real question for the committee to decide is, Will subsidies create a merchant marine? I will prove to you that subsidies will not create a merchant marine, and I will also prove that subsidies will, on the contrary, seriously retard the proper development of a permanent American merchant marine.

"I ask you to carefully note the following:

"During the last three and a half years this Government has given to American shipping interests a subsidy so vast that even the most brazen subsidist would not have dared to ask for it. There was turned over to American shipping interests, free of all cost to them, a fleet of over 1,500 vessels, including some of the finest passenger ships afloat. Not only have American shipping interests had the free use of this fleet of ships, which has cost the American people over $4,000,000,000—I say over $4,000,000,000, because to the amount actually appropriated must be added the interest which the Government must pay on this money—but the shipping interests to whom these ships were turned over for operation received in addition from the Government hundreds of millions of dollars in cash to cover alleged losses in the operation of these ships, notwithstanding that during much of the period during which they have had these ships high freight rates prevailed and large profits should easily have been earned.

"Not only has this vast subsidy to American shipping interests during the last three and a half years failed to create a permanent American merchant marine, but it has fastened upon American shipping a curse of incompetence and graft which it will take many years to eradicate.

"In the light of these indisputable facts, how dare anyone say that a permanent American merchant marine can be created through subsidies, no matter how extensive those subsidies may be? I say to you that the only thing that subsidies will do will be to transfer from the Public Treasury to the pockets of a few favored steamship men, some of whom have appeared before this committee, large sums of the taxpayer's money; and, what is worse, it will perpetuate the graft and incompetence which is now the real reason for our failure to have a merchant marine worthy of this Nation."

Very truly yours,

PHILIP MANSON.

APPENDIX 10.

PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (PANAMA RAILROAD STEAMSHIP LINE),
New York, December 15, 1922.

Mr. PHILIP MANSON,
Pacific & Eastern Steamship Co., 149 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 12th instant, addressed to Mr. Drake, who we regret has been absent from the office for several weeks past because of severe illness. We are, therefore, taking the liberty of replying for him.

We have read with interest the inclosures accompanying your letter, and in accordance with your request take pleasure in inclosing copy of our annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922. As you will see from a reading of that report, the statement published in the New York Herald is not correct. In the first paragraph of the "general remarks" concerning the steamship line it is stated that the deficit of $587,332.45 resulted "after charging to operating expenses $358,429.44, account of depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs." Had we followed the so-called "Government accounting method" and made no allowance for depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs our deficit would have been reduced to $228,903.01. Had we charged tariff rates for the freight and passenger service performed by our steamship line for the Government of the United States there would have been a further increase in our revenues of $460,000.

As you undoubtedly know, we are prohibited by congressional action from covering our property by insurance. Under an act of Congress approved May 27, 1908, congressional appropriations were made available to reimburse the Panama Railroad Co. for marine losses or for losses due to destruction of or damage to its plant equipment or commissary supplies by fire, provided, however, that we should cease to carry insurance against loss from causes thereby covered. In accordance with that legislation we have carried our own insurance. Our losses have been quite heavy since that time, and the question as to whether we have made or lost because of carrying our own insurance is a debatable one. We have not, however, called upon Congress to pay these marine losses, as we had a right to do under the act of Congress referred to, and have paid them out of our own funds.

Our steamship line was established in 1894, and up to the opening of the Panama Canal acted as a feeder for the railroad on through freight to and from Central and South America, and since its control by the Government of the United States in 1904 has accomplished more in the direction of stabilizing and establishing reasonable rates between the United States and Central and South America than all the other steamship lines put together. The opening of the Panama Canal to commerce and the discontinuance by the Panama Railroad of the practice of handling through freight across the Isthmus brought about a complete change in the operations of the steamship line in that its profitable through business was taken away from it by vessels operating through the Panama Canal and its service limited to the carrying of Government supplies and employees, necessitating the development of local traffic to Haiti, Colombia, etc., to a sufficient degree to prevent it operating at a loss.

Our operations as a whole have been successful with the exception of the past three years, when deficits were incurred for the following reasons:

1. Extreme depression throughout the world that seriously affected the trade between the United States, the Caribbean and Central and South America.

2. The high value of American money as compared with English, German, and French money, compelling South Americans to trade in Europe rather than in the United States.

3. The competition in American trade of foreign steamship lines that made it necessary for us to operate some of our steamers through the Panama Canal to the West Coast.

4. The serious competition of Shipping Board steamers under the control of managing operators, who received compensation for their services regardless as to the heavy losses sustained by the Shipping Board in their operation.

We have been able to more than hold our own against the foreign competition, but it has been impossible to profitably compete with the steamers operated for account of the Shipping Board and a great deal of the loss that we have incurred last year was due to that competition.

The rate situation with which we are now confronted is one that we called to the attention of the Shipping Board about three years ago, when we asked their approval to the plan of establishing rates between the United States and the West Coast of Central and South America to the level of the very low rates that were made effective shortly after the termination of the war by the foreign steamship lines operating between Europe and the West Coast. At that time the Shipping Board and the various operating companies saw no necessity for reducing rates to the level established by the European lines so long as the American shipper was willing to pay the higher rate.

The result of that policy is that the American shipper now has no voice in the matter, because the traffic is moving to and from Europe notwithstanding the fact that rates to and from the United States have now been considerably reduced. At the time that we offered this suggestion the American shipper controlled the traffic, and the adoption of that policy would have placed him in a position from which he could not be easily dislodged Now the American shipper is in the position of fighting for the trade that the merchants of Europe secured because of our short-sighted policy.

In considering the status of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line very little credit is given to it by the general public for the policy it pursued in preventing unreasonable freight rates between the United States and Central and South America by maintaining equitable and reasonable rates during periods when rates could easily have been increased 100 per cent or over. Had our line been privately operated we would probably have followed the same policy as any other privately owned steamship line, but being owned by the Government of the United States we could not subject our owner to any criticism because of increasing rates beyond the point justified by our operating expenses.

The combined operations of the Panama Railroad and its steamship line while under Government control, from 1904 to 1921, resulted in a net surplus of approximately $23,000,000, of which the steamship line contributed $5,500,000, all of which was expended in improving facilities at the Isthmus, such as coaling plants, cold-storage plant, concrete piers, etc., which are of inestimable value in connection with the operation of the Panama Canal, and the cost of which would otherwise have been met by congressional appropriation. That net surplus, however, does not do justice to our showing, inasmuch as during that entire period we carried practically all the supplies and material that entered into the construction of the Panama Canal, as well as its employees and their families, at rates that in some instances represented actual cost while in others involving a loss. This is still our policy.

Readjustments from the abnormal conditions that prevailed during the war to the subnormal conditions that have prevailed for the past two years or more are of necessity slow, but we are beginning to see daylight a short way ahead, and we feel that it will only be a short time before we will again start to show a profit.

We shall be very glad indeed to furnish you with any detailed information that you consider would be of help to you in the very good work upon which you are engaged in defending our steamship line in the press.

Yours very truly,

W. R. PFIZER, Assistant to Vice President.

APPENDIX 11.

NEW YORK CITY, January 30, 1923.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to my letter to you of January 10 regarding Lasker's statement of alleged losses by the United States Lines, my statement to you in that letter that you should not accept as correct any figures or statements submitted by the Shipping Board was confirmed the very next day. In a statement made by Mr. Rossbottom in the New York Journal of Commerce of January 11, he said that the Shipping Board charges to the operating account of the United States Lines the cost of reconditioning its ships, and of increasing their accommodations, and for other extensive repairs and structural changes which should properly be charged to capital account. You pointed this out in your remarks in the Senate on January 22. Mr. Rossbottom cited an item of this kind amounting to $160,000 for installing additional accommodations on the steamer President Garfield.

Bearing on this matter, Mr. Rossbottom said: "Were charges assessed in the months that the expense is incurred it would not be quite so bad, but it often occurs that an accumulation will be dumped in on me in one month, covering perhaps several months previous."

Furthermore, excessive advertising costs are charged to the United States Lines' operations, totaling $600,000 annually. It is pretty well known and understood that this heavy advertising expenditure is a subtle form of bribery and has been very effective in bringing to the defense of the Shipping Board and the support of the Harding administration, including the unspeakable Daugherty, and to the support of the infamous subsidy bill many newspapers which had heretofore always opposed the subsidy—a striking example being the Hearst press. Of course, all newspapers that have received this Shipping Board advertising did not succumb to this bribe, nor did the Shipping Board dare to withhold its advertising from such antisubsidy papers as the New York World, New York Times, etc., as that would have been prima facie evidence of the bribery purpose of its advertising expenditures. No private steamship line of the size and extent of the United States Lines would saddle itself with such an advertising expenditure as the Shipping Board imposes upon the United States Lines, nor would they use such extensive space in many of the mediums that the Shipping Board does.

Mr. Rossbottom also called attention to the very high rentals which the Shipping Board charges the United States Lines for piers and offices—$360,000 a year for the Hoboken piers against $74,000 a year paid by the International Mercantile Marine Co. and the Cunard Line for Manhattan piers, and $120,000 a year for the United States Lines offices in the Shipping Board's building at 45 Broadway, New York.

Lasker's explanation that these rentals are based upon short-term periods is no good. The Shipping Board should give the United States Lines the benefit of the very lowest rentals for its piers and offices, inasmuch as the United States Lines is a subsidiary of the Shipping Board, which owns these piers and offices. It is a common practice for privately owned holding companies or private owners of subsidiary companies to make unfair contracts or terms with their subsidiaries, so as to drain these subsidiaries of their profits for the benefit of the holding company. In one of my appearances before the Senate Committee on Commerce I gave an instance of this in the case of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. when it was owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., which, through an unfair charter for the steamers Mongolia and Manchuria, which were nominally owned by the Oregon Short Line, a railroad owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., diverted all of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co.'s profits so that the minority stockholders received no dividends for many years, although the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. did an enormously profitable business during all this time and would have paid handsome dividends if its earnings were not improperly diverted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.

Also, Lasker's explanation that because the Shipping Board paid "many times their worth" for the United States Lines ships, hence all expenditures for reconditioning and betterments must be charged to operating expenses, is no good. The United States Lines should not be loaded down with the false costs of its ships. Its ships should be considered only at their present actual worth. As a matter of fact, however, the most important of the United States Lines' ships are the ex-German liners, for which the Shipping Board paid nothing.

Mr. Lasker has himself said that the 535-foot liners, which have cost the Shipping Board between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 each, and which make up part of the fleet of the United States Lines which Lasker says cost "many times their worth," are so badly built that they require expenditures of from $25,000 to $35,000 each trip. The United States Lines should be given credit for these extraordinary expenditures if it is compelled to use such ships.

I applaud the language you used when you said in your remarks to the Senate, "Information comes to me, which I scarcely dare to report here, about the robbery that has been taking place under the guise of repairs to ships."

* * * * * * *

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP MANSON.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. SISSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a brief final conference report on House bill 13696, making appropriations for the Executive Office, and so forth. It refers to two items. I ask that the report be read and agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a final conference report on House bill 13696. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10 and 25.

F. E. WARREN,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILL R. WOOD,
L. J. DICKINSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to the report. I refused to sign the report as one of the conferees because, in the first place, I do not think the House conferees treated the conferees of the Senate properly.

The amendments on which the Senate conferees had to recede were the two items consisting of the steel stacks to be erected in the Pension Office Building, and the first appropriation for an archives building. The House conferees first objected to those two items but promised the conferees of the Senate that they would take them back to the House and have a vote in the House on them. I have always understood that wherever the conferees of the House promised the conferees of the Senate that an item would be taken back to the House for a separate vote the House would vote upon the item itself without any adverse expression, and particularly no bitter expression, on the part of the conferees of the House when the item was brought before the House for consideration. But as the plan is now carried out, under the House rule with reference to conferees on the part of the House, the Senate has three conferees and the House has 435. It results in there being no free conference, and there never will be a free conference between the two Houses as long as the existing rule is in operation in the House.

One member of the conferees at least went out of his way to criticize most severely the two items. I know a part of the statement he made was furnished him, prepared by some clerk or official of the Government who did not want to be deprived of some particular position or place that he is now occupying in the Pension Building. His view would no doubt be interrupted. I do not know whether it was a view outside of the building or whether it was a view inside of the building, but the gentleman did not want his view interrupted, and therefore the Government is deprived of saving $1,000,000 in two years.

I was very much put out over the way the matter was handled. But as long as I am in the Senate of the United States and there is a responsibility resting upon me as chairman of one of the committees that must look after the records and the safe-keeping of the records of the Government I am going to call the attention of the Congress, whenever I get a chance, to the conditions that exist and ask for legislation that will bring about a change and a correction of existing situations. It is a disgrace to the Government the way our records are being kept to-day.

The proposition was one that would allow the Government of the United States under existing conditions to take space in Government buildings now occupied by old records—and some very valuable records, too—and make that space available for the employees of the Government. The commission had a plan whereby they could take all the employees out of the Wardman Building and house them in Government-owned buildings if this provision had remained in the bill. The owners of the Wardman Building are demanding that the Government give up the building. They have told your commission that with a small expenditure of money they could get returns from that building of $253,000 a year.

I stated upon the floor of the Senate that after the five-year lease expired, providing for a rental of $37,500 annually for the building, I would ask for an appropriation of $75,000, or double the amount previously paid. The owners of the building are not satisfied with that amount; but, so far as I am concerned, I shall never vote for a dollar more than $75,000 for the annual rental of that building.

I do believe that when we had a plan mapped out and arranged that would not interfere with any working of the Government in any department, where we knew just what it would cost, where we knew that we could make space in the different Government buildings and in making that space take out wooden files and old papers, where, if a fire occurred, it perhaps would destroy the whole building, and put them into a fireproof place for safe-keeping and thus save a large amount of rent, that the item should have remained in the bill. But it is to be otherwise, because of the fact that the conferees of the House told the House itself that the conferees on the part of the House could not agree to the two items and gave reasons that are not substantiated by the facts.

I know it would be unusual to ask the Senate of the United States now to vote against the report. The House has voted already. Therefore I am not going to ask for a separate vote upon the particular items, but I am going to continue every year, as long as I am chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, to try to get through Congress some legislation that will not only save money to the Government of the United States but will put our records in a position where they will not be destroyed by fire and where they will not rot as they are doing now. Some of the most valuable records the Government has to-day, if they should be taken out of the place where they are now kept, would drop to pieces unless handled with the greatest care. In another 10 years no one will be able to read them, and they will be perfectly worthless.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that we have two or three weeks remaining of this session and I do not see why he does not want to send the items back to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. But the House has already voted on them.

Mr. SWANSON. Do we always have to accept the vote of the House as final? I think this is one of the most important matters we have had before us. I was chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a long time and tried for 15 or 20 years to get a building in which we could take care of our valuable records and perhaps give us more space in the other Government buildings. In Government buildings like the Treasury, War, Navy, and State Buildings, we could make more space for the clerks by taking out the records and documents now kept there and placing them in an archives building. They would be safer and better kept; we would gain much additional space in the present buildings, and in addition to that we would have the records classified and the work of looking them up when needed could be done with one-third less clerks.

We have tried and tried to get this proposition accepted and I do not believe in surrendering on it. I would like to see the amendment go back to conference and have another vote on it, anyway. The only way we will get it is by persistently fighting for it. We have had it up for 10 or 15 years and every time it comes up they take a vote in the House, and they have an idea that if they vote in the House one way it is the duty of the Senate to surrender to that vote. They come to conference and say, "We have voted in the House on this proposition," and they think when they have voted, if the matter has been voted down, it is the conclusion of the matter. I, as a conferee on various bills, have ridiculed any such view. I think the Senate is a coordinate branch of the Government. I believe a vote in the Senate is entitled to as much respect as a vote in the House and is worthy of as much consideration and should be as potential with them as their vote should be with us.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that we are told that just as soon as the Senate of the United States will vote a general public buildings bill, then these items can go through; but as long as they can not have a post office at Podunk, we can not have an archives building in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SWANSON. I have served on the commission with the Senator from Utah and I know the splendid work he is doing.

I know how the buildings of the Government are crowded. The erection of an archives building and the storing of our valuable documents there would relieve the situation very greatly. I believe in an archives building. If we could take all our old valuable records out of the various Government buildings in which they are now stored, it would leave a vast quantity of available space for the clerks and the housing of the departments themselves. We have fought for such a proposition, but we have not been able to get it. I hope the Senator will move to send this one item back to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I gave notice to the conferees that next year I shall, if the Senate will support me in putting the items in an appropriation bill, present them again, and if that is done, it would be a question then as to which vote shall prevail, whether it would be that of the Senate or the House. But I will say to the Senator now that I do not feel like asking it at this time, because this is a short session of Congress and the next session will be a long session, and we shall have more time to thrash the matter out.

Mr. SWANSON. But we have about three weeks more. This has occurred so often that I am getting tired of it. The conferees on the part of the Senate have surrendered so often whenever they have taken a vote in the House that I think it is a good time on this matter to let them understand we are as persistent as they. I had hoped that the Senator from Utah, after the splendid presentation of the matter which he has made in such a determined manner, would move to insist on the amendment and let it go back to conference once more.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am sure, although the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] did not mention it, that if he were asked he would state that his fellow conferees on the part of the Senate were in full sympathy and accord with him, and it was only after his consent was given that the report was made. I feel that he is not casting the blame on his fellow conferees on the part of the Senate. But on the part of the House it is to be remembered, as the Senator has stated, that when the conference report was made on the House side there was a very unusual attack made upon it by the gentleman who was in charge of the conference report. The surrender on the part of the Senate when made was under protest, and while it is true the Senator from Utah refrained from signing the report, and I do not blame him for that, yet it was entirely with his sympathy that it was signed by his fellow conferees and the report was presented to the Senate.

The Senator from Utah has said that this is the short session of Congress, which is true. We are also lamed somewhat by the fact that we did not prepare beforehand to have these items come down in the regular way through the Budget Bureau and have them taken up through the House, so the House could have the privilege of presenting them. The gentlemen on the House side are somewhat sensitive about supplemental estimates that come in through the Senate, and while very properly the Senator from Utah, the chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, should be looking after the particular business of storage of documents, yet when before the House the matter could be put in the way it was, that we had proceeded in a somewhat crosscut way.

I think I have in my career in this body every time the matter has been brought up committed myself to the preservation of the Government records. I remember, when I was ranking member on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that we bought a block of ground and paid for it for the purpose of erecting a records building. It was afterwards taken away from us and a building for the Interior Department was erected upon the site, and it is probably the finest office building the Government now owns. I believe we ought to have an archives building, and I believe we ought to have the steel stacks, too. But, as the Senator has so well stated, the House had the opportunity and voted as a House upon it, and it was stated before them that we did not proceed in the way of having estimates made, that there was no estimate for an archives building, and so forth.

So in my judgment we would gain nothing by pursuing this contest further. However, I do not shrink from it at all, but if the conference report should be sent back, I think it would be fruitless and in the long run we would lose rather than gain ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF GRAIN FOR SEED PURPOSES.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to present a concurrent resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 38) as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2023) defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes, to correct an error therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution. Is there objection?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CHARLES RIVER BRIDGE, MASS.

Mr. CALDER. Out of order, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13760) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts," approved November 14, 1921. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, approved November 14, 1921, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Metropolitan Park Commission, or any town or city, or any other public body authorized by the State of Massachusetts, all or any of them, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, at any time hereafter, drawless bridges across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, connecting Massachusetts Avenue in Cambridge and Massachusetts Avenue in Boston, and at any other points upon said river at, near, or above said Massachusetts Avenue: Provided, That said bridges shall be at least 12 feet above the ordinary level of the water in the basin over the main ship channel, and the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the river shall be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve.

"Except as inconsistent herewith, this act shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, NEAR ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4411) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby granted to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the northwest quarter of section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, between the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUMPHREYS CREEK BRIDGE, SPARROWS POINT, MD.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4503) granting the consent of Congress to Bethlehem Steel Co. to construct a bridge across Humphreys Creek at or near the city of Sparrows Point, Md. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Bethlehem Steel Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Humphreys Creek at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Sparrows Point, the county of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE BETWEEN TEXAS AND OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4235) granting consent of Congress to the Charlie Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across Red River between Clay County, Tex., and Cotton County, Okla., and I submit a report (No. 1134) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Charlie Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Clay County, Tex., and Cotton County, Okla., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate Resolution 428, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 428) submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER January 30, 1923, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-seventh Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WILLIAM O. DOHERTY.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 430. The resolution proposes to pay one year's salary to the heir of Edward W. Doherty, who was a messenger employed by the Senate for a period of 35 years. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 430) submitted by Mr. LODGE February 2, 1923, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to William O. Doherty, son of Edward W. Doherty, late a messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN-DEBT SETTLEMENT.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, with an amendment, from the Committee on Finance, House bill 14254, to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, and I submit a report (No. 1130) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and placed on the calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator when he expects to have that bill considered?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not suppose we can have an opportunity to consider it before Tuesday; possibly not by then; but I hope we shall be able to take it up by that time.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—PROPOSED UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am going to present a unanimous-consent proposal which I intend to submit to the Senate on Monday next. I do not want it understood that it is being presented because of any idea I have with reference to any undue delay upon the shipping bill. I am presenting it merely because I want to do what I can to expedite the business of the Senate. There are several very important bills which ought to be passed before this session of Congress closes. Those bills, in my judgment, can be passed with the proper discussion if the Senate deals with them promptly.

I further wish to say that it is my desire to avoid, if possible, night sessions. I know what night sessions mean to the Senate and to Senators, especially at this time of the year, and I want to do what I can to avoid them. I want also to do what I can to expedite the business of the Senate. So, Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read the unanimous-consent proposal, which I will ask may lie on the table, and I will then call it up on next Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The Senator from Washington gives notice that on Monday next he will ask unanimous consent that the agreement be entered into, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on and after Friday, February 16, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 60 minutes on the shipping bill, or more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on any amendment pending or that may be offered to said bill; and that on and after Tuesday, February 20, if said bill is not sooner disposed of, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on said bill or more than once nor longer than 5 minutes on any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the request of the Senator from Washington, the proposed unanimous-consent agreement will lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HENRY Z. OSBORNE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolutions (H. Res. 518) were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 9, 1923.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 436) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, late a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until Monday, February 12, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 10 (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Morris A. Soper, of Maryland, to be United States district judge, district of Maryland, vice John C. Rose, promoted to circuit judge.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 10, (legislative day of February 5), 1923.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder to be ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Mrs. Eva A. Brittain to be register of the land office at Leadville, Colo.

Elzie K. Fritts to be register of the land office at Waterville, Wash.

Frank P. Light to be register of the land office at Lakeview, Oreg.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Tyler M. Swann, Roanoke.
John R. Harris, Wadley.

ALASKA.

Martin J. Martin, Nenana.

CONNECTICUT.

Norman C. Kruer, Shelton.

GEORGIA.

Charles R. Jones, Rossville.

ILLINOIS.

Merle C. Champion, Byron.
Jacob M. Tindall, Chester.
Thomas F. Olsen, De Kalb.
Bertie D. Yeazel, Fairmount.
Charles T. Gilkerson, Marengo.
Walter W. Ward, Maroa.
Edgar B. Walters, Oblong.

MARYLAND.

Beatryce B. Bounds, Fruitland.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Nathaniel P. Coleman, Hyannis.

MISSOURI.

Henry L. Windler, Barnett.
James S. Miller, Bloomfield.
Harry E. Carel, Blue Springs.
Ethel N. Hudson, Clever.
Margaret C. Lester, Desloge.
George W. Gasche, Hillsboro.
John F. Hull, Maryville.
Roy R. Quinn, Moberly.
Andrew L. Woods, Naylor.
Cyrus R. Truitt, Novinger.
Ben. B. Smith, Potosi.
Arthur T. King, Warrensburg.

NEW JERSEY.

Horace E. Richardson, Cape May Court House.
Charles G .Wittreich, Chatham.
Richard Watt, Garwood.
Lewis E. Matteson, Grantwood.
Thomas J. Raber, Hampton.
James T. Steel, Little Falls.
Wilbert F. Branin, Medford.
Richard Lufburrow, Middletown.
George F. Moore, Oradell.
Frederick C. Docker, Oxford.
George C. Reed, Park Ridge.
J. Hosey Osborn, Passaic.
Stanley B. Van Iderstine, South Orange.
Hammond S. Ireland, Williamstown.

NEW YORK.

Harry F. House, Chester.
Henry W. Roberts, Clinton.
Mary H. Avery, Elmsford.
Adolph N. Johnson, Falconer.
William D. Creighton, Fort Covington.
Oby J. Hoag, Greene.
Joseph Ogle, Greenport.
Benjamin F. King, Madrid.
Burton E. McGee, Norfolk.
William S. White, Oriskany.
Besse R. Griffin, Quogue.
Fred C. Smith, Vernon.
George M. Lewis, Whitesville.
Albert A. Patterson, Willsboro.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Harry H. Wilson, Blairsville.
Wade M. Henderson, Brookville.
William L. Gouger, Danville.
Anthen C. Messinger, Tatamy.
William Evans, Westgrove.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Charles E. Colman, Curtin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 10, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again O Lord Thou hast remembered us in our low estate. Thy mercies are showered upon us in crowded succession. May a sense of the eternal goodness compel us to silence and to confession. In wonder and in gratitude we thank Thee. We would cherish, Holy Spirit, the greatest of gifts, which is an honest and a contrite heart. Impart a force to our wills and a warmth to our hearts that shall more than compensate for our defects and excesses. Do Thou greatly enrich our country. Bless it abundantly with the spirit of good will, with zealous philanthropic efforts, with high ideals, with an earnest sensitive conscience, with a deep reverence for God, and with a charity for all men. In the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the Executive Office and independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment in order to take up one or two little matters?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12887. An act granting a pension to Jacob F. Rosenberger;

H. R. 6204. An act to grant the military target range of Lincoln County, Okla., to the city of Chandler, Okla., and reserving the right to use for military and aviation purposes; and

H. R. 11389. An act for the relief of Robert Guy Robinson.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4468. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherlands, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co.

S. 4197. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to certain persons and certain corporations permits to explore or leases of certain lands that lie south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below.

S. 4468. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherlands, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

S. 4197. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to certain persons and certain corporations permits to explore or leases of certain lands that lie south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

LANDS IN THE STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up the bill H. R. 5224 with Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks to call up the House bill with Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5224. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify the Secretary of the Interior for restoration to the public domain lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an address I made last week before the Economic Club in New York on law enforcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN PHILIP HILL, BEFORE THE ECONOMIC CLUB OF NEW YORK, HOTEL ASTOR, THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 25, ON THE SUBJECT "THE VOLSTEAD ACT AND ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION."

Kipling tells us that in the twilight of the Magic Jungle, in a sort of singsong to little Mowgli, old Baloo recited—

"As the creeper that girdles the tree trunk,
The law runneth forward and back."

It may not be amiss for me to say as a preface to my remarks that in 1916, before any one of us ordinary mortals dreamed of the possibility of the eighteenth amendment, using this little verse as a text, I called attention to the fact that in antitrust prosecutions, in the crusade against the white slaver, in the enforcement of pure food laws, in interstate commerce cases, in the suppression of fraudulent use of the mails, the power of the Attorney General runs forward and back throughout all the States of this great Union, and the activities of the Department of Justice wipe out State lines and from year to year increase the power of the Federal Government and its Executive, of whose growth they are the most striking illustration.

The eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act have gone farther into the personal life of the individual citizen than any previous growth of Federal power, and to-day, when constitutional amendments are being seriously suggested providing that the Federal Government shall extend its control to domestic relations—that is to say, to marriage and divorce and also to child labor—directly in the States, the great questions behind the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act become of vital and immediate importance.

The subject for discussion to-night is "The Volstead Act and the enforcement of prohibition."

This subject contains three specific and independent topics—

(1) Prohibition as declared by the eighteenth amendment, (2) enforcement of this prohibition, and (3) the Volstead Act as a method of enforcement.

The Volstead Act is one of many possible efforts at enforcement, but enforcement itself is the sole method of making the prohibition of the eighteenth amendment effective. Therefore, unless we agree to put the eighteenth amendment in the same ineffective class as the fourteenth amendment, we must have some form of enforcement, but we need not adhere to that method offered by the Volstead Act.

I propose for your consideration the following substitute for the Volstead Act:

Repeal the Volstead Act and enact the following:

"SEC. 1. Each State shall for itself define the meaning of the words 'intoxicating liquors' as used in section 1 of Article XVIII of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and each State shall itself enforce within its own limits its own laws on this subject.

"SEC. 2. Any person who transports or causes to be transported into any State any beverage prohibited by such State as being an 'intoxicating liquor' shall be punished by the United States by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or by a fine of not less than $10,000 nor more than $100,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The first section of this proposed enforcement act is based on the theory of local option; the second section is based on the Webb-Kenyon Act, by which the United States guarantees the States from outside interference. The proposed substitute, taken as a whole, permits concurrent action each in their own sphere by the United States and by the individual States to carry out the provisions of the eighteenth amendment.

In 1907 the Anti-Saloon League approved my declaration for local option, made as a candidate for the Maryland Legislature. In 1914 I advised the American Express Co. that the Webb-Kenyon Act was constitutional, and that they should not ship liquor into West Virginia. The Supreme Court sustained my view, and Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler very ably and successfully argued that view in the Supreme Court in the appeal in the cases of the Clark Distilling Co. against the Western Maryland Railway Co. and the State of West Virginia, and the Clark Distilling Co. against my client, the American Express Co., and the State of West Virginia, which cases were decided in 1917.

I do not expect, however, that Mr. Wheeler will agree with my proposed substitute for the Volstead Act. He will probably say of it what he said at the City Club in Cleveland last October about the proposed amendment to the constitution of Ohio permitting 2.75 beverages, which proposed amendment was afterwards defeated: "Nullification has always been indefensible," said Mr. Wheeler, "but now it is reprehensible. When the doctrine was first invoked in the name of State rights there was an honest doubt concerning its legal application. It was finally settled on more than 100 battle fields in the Civil War, and it has never lifted its head in decent society since then until the outlawed liquor traffic, in the name of concurrent power, attempts to nullify our National Constitution and government of laws."

I offer for consideration this substitute for the Volstead Act, and I shall invite your attention to certain considerations relating to the Volstead Act, to enforcement acts in general, and to the eighteenth amendment itself. I think I can show you that there can be enforcement by concurrent power of the United States and the individual States which will not nullify the eighteenth amendment, and which will be satisfactory to those of us who have not and who never have had any connection with any liquor traffic.

Let us consider, first, the Volstead Act. Before the eighteenth amendment many States had one-half of 1 per cent prohibition laws. These States wanted such laws, and no one seeks to disturb their satisfaction with them. But the Volstead Act imposed this standard on other States that did not want such a law. In the one-half of 1 per cent dry States the Volstead Act was not needed; the State law was sufficient to satisfy their people. In the so-called "wet" States the law has been a failure. It has been a failure because it was based on a misstatement of fact. The Volstead Act declares that an intoxicating liquor is anything containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume which is fit for beverage use.

This is a legislative lie; but even a legal lie remains untrue in fact. In any community where everybody believes that a lie is the truth, for all practical purposes such a lie becomes the truth, and there is no need for laws on that subject; but in those communities which know a lie when they see one, the inherent instinct for truth makes enforcement of even a legalized lie impossible.

Beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol are not in fact intoxicating, and are therefore not prohibited by the eighteenth amendment. Why, then, is not the Volstead Act an immoral law, seeking to enforce a lie?

I do not ask you to accept my statement on this. I shall give you the testimony of Mr. VOLSTEAD himself, of Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, and of the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland that one-half of 1 per cent is not intoxicating, and that therefore the fundamental basis of the Volstead Act is false.

On Friday, June 10, 1921, before the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, discussing cider and homemade wine, Representative CANTRILL asked Representative VOLSTEAD the following question: "According to your construction, it was not the intent of Congress that it would be a violation of law if wine was made at home containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol?" To this Representative VOLSTEAD replied, "No; my contention is this, that it might contain 1 or 2 or possibly 3 per cent without being intoxicating."

On May 2, 1922, Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes wrote me officially "that under the provisions of section 29, title 2, of the Volstead Act cider and other nonintoxicating fruit juices manufactured exclusively for use in the home of the maker are not necessarily limited to less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, but must be intoxicating in fact to be in violation of the Volstead Act." He also stated that "no specific alcoholic limit had been fixed," and that as at present advised his office was not disposed to take action against the manufacture for use in the home of the maker of cider or other fruit juices "containing not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume."

I at once, on June 12, 1922, asked him to fix the "specific alcoholic limit" of cider and homemade wine. On June 20, 1922, he declined to do so, and gave as a reason "that Congress has not done so and the courts have not as yet definitely settled the question."

After some more correspondence, on July 3, 1922, Mr. Haynes wrote me that his statement of May 2 was a "misapprehension." Finally I got the Secretary of the Treasury to ask the Attorney General for a ruling as to what "nonintoxicating" meant in section 29, title 2, of the Volstead Act. The Attorney General has not yet rendered an opinion, but these proceedings show that even the Government itself agrees to the falsity of the fundamental one-half of 1 per cent declaration of the Volstead Act.

The superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland on July 10, 1922, said that any man who owns an apple tree, whether it be in his back yard in the city or on an extensive farm, can use his apples for cider. Furthermore, he added, he can let it stand and get hard and, should he desire, he can give it to guests in his home. In view of the fact, vouched for by the Secretary of Agriculture that hard cider contains 6 per cent of alcohol, we have Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. Haynes, and the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland agreeing that the fundamental statement of the Volstead Act, that beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent are intoxicating, is not true. So the Volstead Act being based on untruth can not prevail. I charge that being based on untruth it is a failure, and again I do not ask you to take my own statement. The President, as well as the most ardent prohibitionists, admit that to-day it is a failure.

On December 8, 1922, the President said to Congress, "There are conditions relating to the enforcement of prohibition which savor of nation-wide scandal. It is the most demoralizing factor in our public life." The President also referred to "men who are rending the moral fiber of the Republic through easy contempt for the prohibition laws." I admit a contempt for the Volstead Act, and I do not hesitate to admit it. I stand on the principle "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The Volstead Act is based on a lie, and it can not stand. It ought not to stand. There can be no respect for laws of this kind.

That the Volstead Act is a failure is attested by Representative UPSHAW, of Georgia, who has exhorted the governors of the States, led by the President and Vice President of the United States and all the members of the Cabinet and followed by every Member of Congress and by every United States Senator, to declare that they will never again build up a bootleggers' barbarous business by drinking illicit liquor. If Representative UPSHAW did not have proof that the personal actions of these high officials showed they considered the Volstead Act a failure, he would not have asked them to stop their wicked deeds.

Again Representative CRAMTON, of Michigan, on January 18, 1923, in the House referred to the "activities of rum smuggling along the Atlantic coast," and said: "The extent to which the smuggling trade in liquor, narcotics, and aliens has recently grown is sufficient to challenge the consideration of every thoughtful citizen." He then added, "the report of actual seizures made by the enforcement officers shows the amazing growth of this trade."

I believe Mr. UPSHAW and Mr. CRAMTON to be sincere personal and political supporters of the Volstead Act, but I think their charges prove it is a failure.

If the Volstead Act can not stand, what shall be done to enforce the eighteenth amendment? Let us consider for a moment enforcement of other constitutional amendments.

The fourteenth amendment is not enforced and nobody is attempting to enforce it, but that is not the only amendment that is openly nullified. The medical beer bill, or Volstead Act, junior, deliberately ignores certain guaranties of the Constitution. Section 6 of this act provides punishment for any prohibition enforcement agent or other person who shall search a dwelling without a warrant, but your or my automobile may be stopped on a lonely road at night and your wife or mine may be searched by prohibition agents in violation of the fourth amendment which says "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated." There is no law to protect the persons, papers, and effects of the people, but we do not hear from those who framed the Volstead Act that the fourth amendment is nullified.

Again, the theory of the fifth amendment against double jeopardy has always been taken to mean that people shall not be tried and punished once by the State and again by the United States for one and the same offense. Yet we find no outcry from those who claim to cherish so highly constitutional rights when the Supreme Court very correctly declares in United States v. Lanza that the United States and the States each have their separate systems of law, and that Bill, the bootlegger, can get a year in a New York jail and another year in a Federal jail for selling a high official the same one bottle of moonshine at one time in one place.

Again, the guaranty of the sixth amendment is that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by jury." The United States courts are crowded with Volstead Act cases that have not been speedily tried, many of them having been on the docket over two years. Yet those who oppose what they call "nullification" of the Constitution make no complaint, but try to substitute trial by injunction for trial by jury under the Volstead Act.

The assistant superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland said, on June 20, 1922: "A great deal of nonsense has been uttered from time to time about the sacred right of a citizen to be tried by a jury of his peers." He then added that "in nine cases out of ten a judge can pass with more certainty upon cases than a jury of 12 men, some of whom," said he, "at least are likely to be ignorant, if not prejudiced." He then complained that "jurors often forget their oath on account of their sympathy for the offender and refuse to turn in a verdict when the case clearly shows the guilt of the accused." The purpose of the sixth amendment was to guarantee that 12 jurors and not 1 judge should decide the guilt of American citizens; but we do not hear those who believe in the Volstead Act charging that such statements attempt to nullify the Constitution.

And, finally, the fourteenth amendment. Section 19 of the Penal Code of the United States penalizes those who conspire to violate the guaranties of the fourteenth amendment. In 1911, as United States attorney for Maryland, I convicted the supervisors of elections of a county for conspiring to disfranchise colored citizens, proving that the fourteenth amendment has been and could be enforced if the sentiment of the people in the States where it is violated desires it enforced, yet we do not hear those who are back of the Volstead Act insisting on enforcement of the fourteenth amendment or raising the cry of nullification of the Constitution.

Constitutions are declarations of principles, supposed to be fundamental and permanent. Enforcement laws are intended to carry out the spirit of the constitutional principles.

We have seen that the interpretation of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and fourteenth amendments can be liberal, and at times enforcement, as in the fourth and the fourteenth amendments, totally lacking. Therefore, why should we not apply a liberal interpretation to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment?

The Volstead Act is based on a misstatement of fact. It should be repealed, and a true standard applied to decide what are intoxicating beverages. Under the law I suggest the States could not say constitutionally that 49 per cent whisky is not "intoxicating," but they could say that 2.75 per cent beer, or beer and light wines of a higher alcoholic content are not "intoxicating," and the Supreme Court would say, as it did of the one-half of 1 per cent declaration of Congress, that a State's declaration to this effect is not improper.

In closing let me say one word in general on law enforcement by the Nation and the States. The Constitution does not provide the details of the Federal judicial system. The judiciary bill, debated in the Senate in July, 1789, did this. This bill, which was prepared by a committee of which Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, a great lover of freedom, was a member, was bitterly opposed by some of the Members of the Senate. "I opposed this bill from the beginning," wrote Senator Maclay, of Pennsylvania; "it certainly is a vile law system, calculated for expense and with a design to draw by degrees all law business into the Federal courts. The Constitution is meant to swallow all the State constitutions by degrees, and thus to swallow by degrees all the State judiciaries."

We who stand for the old theory of the Nation and the States feel that in order to enforce the Volstead Act, as Senator LODGE once said, 500,000 spies would be necessary.

We stand to-day at the parting of the ways. Shall we provide 500,000 spies in an attempt to enforce an immoral law, a law based on a legislative lie, or shall we leave enforcement to the States by reasonable State laws which conform to the practices and desires of their people? Personally, I am for a more liberal interpretation of the eighteenth amendment so as to permit the legal sale of wine and beer in those States which want them.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I invite the attention of Congress to the inclosed report from the Secretary of State recommending legislation by Congress which will enable him, as agent of the Government of the United States, to convey to the municipality of Santiago, Chile, the title to and interest in a certain portion of that parcel of land on which the American Embassy in the city of Santiago is situated, and to acquire with the proceeds thereof or to receive in exchange therefor title to a parcel of land adjoining another part of the embassy land, in order to enable the city of Santiago to carry out its project for the construction of a new street.

It will be observed that the American ambassador at Santiago is of the opinion that the proposed transaction would be advantageous to the United States, and that the Secretary of State holds the view that the exchange should be authorized as an evidence of our friendly desire to gratify the wish of the municipality of Santiago to improve and beautify the city. Agreeing with both, I request favorable consideration by Congress of the draft of proposed legislation submitted by the Secretary of State.

WARREN G. HARDING.

(Inclosure: Report from the Secretary of State.)

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1923.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CONFERENCE REPORT, EXECUTIVE OFFICE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the Executive Office and independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and other offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10 and 25.

WILL R. WOOD,
L. J. DICKINSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 10: Strikes out the language inserted by the Senate making an appropriation of $99,185 for the improvement of the grounds and approaches, parking, retaining walls, etc., for the Perry Victory Memorial.

On No. 25: Strikes out the language inserted by the Senate making an appropriation of $1,000,000, immediately available, for the installation of 15 stories of filing stacks in the interior court of the Pension Office Building.

WILL R. WOOD,
L. J. DICKINSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the conference report be concurred in.

The question was taken, and the conference report was adopted.

ARBITRATION OF NORWEGIAN CLAIM.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 440, Rept. 1574) to satisfy the award rendered against the United States by the arbitral tribunal established under the special agreement concluded June 30, 1921, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Norway.

Resolved, etc., That the appropriation of $50,000,000 for the payment of claims by the United States Shipping Board contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," approved June 12, 1922, is made available to the extent required to enable the Secretary of State to satisfy the award rendered against the United States on October 18, 1922, by the arbitral tribunal established under the special agreement concluded June 30, 1921, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Norway. And the Secretary of State is authorized to withhold from the total amount awarded the sum of $22,800 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from October 18, 1922, to the date of payment of the award, and to pay the claim of Page Brothers, American citizens, in accordance with the decision of the arbitral tribunal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding that the gentleman is going to give time as agreed upon, I shall not object; otherwise I would.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all right.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time will it take?

Mr. MADDEN. Not over 15 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. If it is going to take all the afternoon, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in explanation of this resolution that in about 1915, and later in 1916 and 1917, just before the outbreak of the war, the President of the United States issued a proclamation declaring an emergency existing, and under that proclamation the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation commandeered all the shipyards of the United States and all the ships under construction for nationals of foreign governments. It happened that many of those ships under construction were being constructed for nationals of Norway, and they had paid toward the construction costs about $2,600,000 at the time the requisition of the yards was completed. The Government of the United States continued to complete those ships. They built other ships which were requisitioned from other nationals. No part of the amount advanced for the ship construction by the Norway nationals has ever been returned to them. They made a claim to the Shipping Board, not only for the amount of money they had paid but for the loss sustained by reason of the requisitioning of the ships which were being constructed for them. The claim amounted in all to about $11,659,000, and with interest to $16,000,000 and something; without interest, later on they reduced the original claim to $13,000,000 and something. The question went to the Shipping Board, and an attempt was made between the Shipping Board and the Norway nationals to adjust the differences between the United States and those people. I understand the Shipping Board offered to pay $2,600,000 and the Norway people refused to accept. They stood on what they originally presented. The final outcome of the difference was an agreement was entered into between Norway and the United States. That agreement was ratified by the Senate. In terms the agreement provided that the President of the United States should appoint one arbiter, the King of Norway appoint another, and those two should name the third, if they could agree; and if they could not agree, then the President of Switzerland was to name the third.

It happened that the duty of naming the third man fell on the President of Switzerland. As organized after the appointment of the third man, the board of arbitration met at The Hague. They took testimony, much of which is submitted in their report, and they found a judgment against the United States for $11,955,000, with interest at 6 per cent until the time of payment.

The reason why we are here asking unanimous consent for the consideration of this question is that the interest amounts to $2,000 a day, and every day we delay payment means an additional $2,000.

Last year the Shipping Board Congress appropriated $50,000,000, out of which they were authorized to pay any claims that might be adjudicated by the Shipping Board. They have expended out of that $50,000,000 about $30,000,000, so that there is a balance of about $20,000,000 yet on hand; and this being a Shipping Board case, the Committee on Appropriations thought it quite proper to authorize the payment of this award, amounting to $11,955,000, with interest, out of the unexpended balance of $50,000,000 then appropriated.

That is all there is to the case. It is a case that we can not avoid. Payment must be made. The award is equivalent to a judgment rendered by the highest court in our own land.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. At this hearing at The Hague which was to decide this matter before the members of the board of arbitration our Emergency Fleet Corporation was invited to show, if they could, that they did not get credit from the contractors for $2,500.000 that Norway had paid on these ships, and it seems strange to me that, so far as the hearings show, they were unable to do it. They could neither show that they did not get credit or that they did; and of course, not being able to show it, the board of arbitration charged them with having received the credit.

The situation is this: The contractors may have the full $2,500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman promised to yield me 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois does not control the time. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to make this statement: Of course, this is a claim that must be paid, for it is an arbitration award between our country and Norway and is a treaty obligation, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says, it should be paid at once, for it involves an expense of about $2,000 for every day of delay.

I have always contended that direct appropriations to take care of claims and other Government activities and operations should be made, but this comes under a different classification. This is a Shipping Board claim, and inasmuch as the Congress has heretofore appropriated $50,000,000 for the purpose of settling Shipping Board claims, and there will be turned back into the Treasury, according to the statement of Mr. Lasker, something like $20,000,000 at the beginning of the next fiscal year, I think it is entirely proper that this claim, which is really a Shipping Board claim, should be paid out of that money already appropriated, and which will not be expended in payment of other claims. I am, of course, in favor of the resolution, and I am glad that the gentleman from Illinois has asked unanimous consent in order that it may be passed quickly and thus save enormous expense.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Speaker to say that I did not control the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MADDEN. I promised to yield to him.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, of course we are going to have to pay this $11,955,000, because it is a matter that has been settled by arbitration. I would be the last man in the world to object to paying an honest obligation that has been adjusted by arbitration; but here is what I complain about: This arbitration agreement was entered into without our knowledge or consent by Mr. Hughes, the present Secretary of State, with the Kingdom of Norway, and here is where our Government slipped a cog; here is where our Government did not look out for our interests—the State Department agreed that we would appoint one arbitrator and that the King of Norway would appoint another. And who should be the third?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In one minute.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to say, if the gentleman will yield, that this treaty was ratified by the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that; but it was made by Mr. Secretary Hughes in the State Department of the present administration, and it was ratified by the present administration. Now, here is the situation: Who was to be the third arbitrator? The third arbitrator should have been a man who was disinterested and unbiased in the question between the two parties, and a man also who would not only be fair to our country in a conflict with Norway, but who would have no bias in favor of a European nation. But no; they left the third arbitrator undetermined. They decided if our two arbitrators could not agree upon a third, then that the third should be selected by one who would naturally be inclined toward a European nation rather than our own.

It was the opinion of our experts that we should not pay Norway more than $2,679,220. But this arbitration court, composed of two Europeans and only one American, decided that we should pay Norway $11,955,000, with interest, and now, of course, we must pay it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to yield first to the gentleman from Illinois, if he wanted to ask me a question; then I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman what we have to do with that matter, inasmuch as this treaty was regularly made?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about what we have to do with it. We had nothing to do with it. But we have got to pay it. I would not have agreed that the main deciding judge of this matter would be a European, because it is my firm belief that with two Europeans and only one American, the decision will be in favor of the European and against us ninety-nine times out of one hundred.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The treaty-making power and the United States Senate have agreed to it.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but the State Department did not properly safeguard our interests when it agreed that a European should be the third deciding judge in this matter. It was a matter that our State Department should have safeguarded at that time. No one can object now to this resolution. We must pass it and pay the decree. The State Department acted honestly and in perfect good faith, but it acted very unwisely, and instead of paying back to Norway $2,500,000 that they had paid on these ships, with reasonable interest, we have now got to pay the stupendous sum of $11,955,000, with interest, because the two Europeans outvoted one Amercan, and decided that because the United States requisitioned ships in our own shipyards during the war which cost Norway $2,679,220, that we should now pay Norway not the $2,679,220 but the stupendous profit of $11,955,000, notwithstanding that we used those very ships to help save the civilization of the whole world for Norway's benefit.

I say it is just one of those situations where we do not look after matters at the proper time. We do not give these matters proper consideration at the time they ought to be given consideration. There is too much disregard for the rights of the American people, in being kind and considerate to Europeans. There is not enough care and good judgment exercised concerning matters in which the American taxpayer is vitally interested. We are growing into the habit of forgetting Americans to help Europeans. I am just merely voicing the protest here that in the future we ought to look after our own American interests a little more carefully.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I have never thought it was the province of the legislative body to go into matters that would require a quasi judicial determination of facts within the jurisdiction of the executive departments. I have been one of those who believed that the functions of the legislative department and of the executive department were very clearly defined and separated, and that the definition and separation was a wise thing for the good of the Government. The proposition presented by this resolution is, Shall we make good the decision and the action of one of the independent coordinate branches of the Government within its jurisdiction, to wit, the State Department, a part of the executive department? If the department that is charged with the duty of handling these things handles them in good faith and renders its judgment and asks us to make the necessary appropriations to carry out the decisions of the State Department, I feel that we are morally bound to do that, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, and that if we undertake to go behind the findings of the State Department in matters of this kind honestly and in good faith made we make the confusion worse confounded. I not only say to the State Department and to the Executive, "You keep your hands off of legislative matters," but I in turn am willing to say to the legislative department, "You keep your hands off of that which is peculiarly within the province of the executive department, and especially where it involves our foreign affairs." For that reason I shall not undertake to go behind the findings of our State Department. You have got to trust it to a certain extent upon matters of this kind, and unless some gentleman can show bad faith on the part of Secretary Hughes—and I do not believe you can—I believe in backing him up in matters of this kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman. My whole speech agrees with him. We must now comply with this arbitration decision and pay the bill. But suppose the State Department, under either Democratic or Republican régime, though absolutely honest, makes a foolish agreement, one which means nothing but one kind of a verdict against our country, has not a representative of the people a right to voice the people's protest?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and I think the time to enter protests was when the foolish act was done.

Mr. BLANTON. We had nothing to do with providing for the arbitration here in the House.

Mr. WINGO. Well, it was known. But, be that as it may, do we know that it was a foolish act? Under the Constitution is it our duty to say whether or not the Secretary of State in handling certain matters that are clearly within his province and his duties, and shall we every time sit in judgment upon his decision when there is no evidence of fraud or neglect of duty? If I think that he is deliberately betraying his trust, then I for one not only will scrutinize very carefully the particular matter in controversy, but from that time on I will scrutinize every matter with which he is concerned. But, however much I may differ in some respects with the present Secretary of State, I do not believe he is going to deliberately betray the interests of the United States. I do not believe he has done it in this instance. I have faith in his integrity. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that in my judgment there was no unwisdom, there was no lack of good judgment in this whole transaction. I see nothing whatever in it from beginning to end that is a subject for criticism. Here was a controversy between Norway and the United States. Instead of dragging it out, instead of making it a cause of ill will and bad feeling between the two nations, we agreed on an arbitration of settlement. Mr. Speaker, we are, we hope, on the opening of a new era in which international quarrels shall not be settled by war, but either by arbitration as it is now carried on, or by the determination of a great international court where nations, when unable to agree upon a peaceful settlement, may go into court instead of going to war. This, however, was an agreement by arbitration. It was an agreement by which each party selected an arbitrator, and then they were to agree upon a third if they could do so, and if they could not agree upon a third, a person was to be named, impartial, outside of the controversy, to name the third arbitrator. That is the usual custom in disputes which are settled by arbitration. Let me say to my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who criticizes the appointment which was made, that the selection was undoubtedly absolutely fair and impartial. Certainly we should approve this arbitration promptly and gladly, because of the influence that it will have upon future peaceful determinations of international affairs. [Applause.] Besides, Mr. Speaker, we will not acquire credit when we agree only when the decision is favorable to us, but we shall acquire favor when we promptly and without protest acquiesce when the decision is against us.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Iowa, who has very sound judgment, contend that in a controversy between the United States and Norway a European country would be absolutely impartial and unbiased?

Mr. TOWNER. I certainly do.

Mr. BLANTON. I would have chosen some other arbitrator.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly the gentleman can not have any knowledge that would justify him in objecting to an arbitration such as the one we are now considering.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, when the Select Committee on the Shipping Board was operating under the authority of this House it went into the matter of the Norwegian claims at some length.

Those claims arose from requisitions made by the Shipping Board of Norwegian vessels and the plants in which vessels were being constructed. Most of the vessels were in course of construction. A controversy arose as to whether or not the requisitions were really requisitions of the plants and of the ships themselves or of the building contracts. The requisitions were made at a time when shipping in the markets of the world was selling at exorbitantly high prices.

Our ships cost on an average of about $220 per ton. At the time the Norwegian ships were requisitioned some ships were selling in the markets of the world at $300 per ton, and of course Norway contended that she was entitled to be compensated at the rate that similar ships were bringing in the world markets. The only question ever involved was the measure of damage. The United States admitted liability, and it was only a question of how much we owed Norway. We submitted that matter to arbitration. The arbitrators ruled and made a finding, and of course there is nothing for the United States to do, either from the standpoint of justice and right or from the standpoint of absolute law in this particular case, except to comply with the finding; and I am glad that the United States has brought this controversy to a settlement. I believe it will be an evidence to the world that the United States intends to live up to her obligations and that when she submits a controversy to arbitration or to a court and the judgment goes against us we are just as willing to comply with it as if it went in our favor. [Applause.] I believe that just now, in the disturbed condition of the world, when public credit and public faith—at least in some regions of the world—are not up to the standard that they once enjoyed, this action of the United States will be a distinct contribution to the public integrity and to the spirit of public fair dealing and of international justice, not only here but throughout the whole world. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor to express my disagreement with the view expressed by the able gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. We are all in favor of complying with the award. I do not think that anybody has acted in bad faith in the matter. Both the Secretary of State and the Senate have done the wise thing in submitting this matter to arbitration. I take issue with the view expressed by the gentleman from Arkansas that the division of the three powers—legislative, executive, and judicial—is so distinct that the House of Representatives has nothing to do with any question affecting international relations. The very fact that this matter is before the House contradicts his theory. The House of Representatives controls the purse, and in controlling the purse it controls in a way every other department. It is within the power of the House to refuse to vote any appropriation for the judiciary. It is within the power of the House to refuse to vote an appropriation for salaries or clerks or books for the Supreme Court. It may decline to appropriate moneys for the maintenance of embassies. The body that is vested by the Constitution with the duty of initiating all measures to provide revenue represents the ultimate power which lies in the sovereign people.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman makes no distinction between power and policy?

Mr. LONDON. I do. Let me say to the gentleman from Arkansas, who has stated his position clearly and who knows how to present an argument in unmistakable form, that the Supreme Court on more than one occasion has laid down the policy for the country.

Mr. WINGO. The distinguished gentleman thinks because the judiciary, which is one coordinate branch of the Government, and the executive, another branch, usurped some of our legislative power by declaring the policy that the House of Representatives is justified in invading theirs.

Mr. LONDON. In the very essence of things the House, which consists of Representatives of the people, receiving their mandates at frequent intervals, the body intended to control the finances of the country, the ways and means of raising taxes, should be the principal repository of the power of the Government.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman. There is no question but that we have the power to refuse to appropriate the salaries for the judges of the Supreme Court and the salary of the President, but while we have the power is it not our moral duty to make the appropriations?

Mr. LONDON. Take the question of a treaty which calls for an expenditure of money. It is up to the House to provide the appropriation or to decline to do so. But I am contending—in five minutes I can not develop my argument or state it as clearly as perhaps the gentleman from Arkansas would—that in the actual working of the Government the supposed separation between the three departments does not exist, or at least to the extent to which gentlemen claim.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Does the gentleman contend that the House has any more control over appropriations for the Department of State than the Senate had in fixing this matter?

Mr. LONDON. There is no doubt but that the House would have the power to deny the appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has attracted my attention in the observations he has just made. I appreciate the trend of the last 20 or 30 years toward the larger powers in the House of Representatives, but I do not believe that that trend is a wise one, especially if it goes to the destruction of the nice relationship between the coordinate powers of the Government. In other words, I think that our system is the greatest invention to maintain independent action of the coordinate departments so that each one may perform its functions without any interference with the other, and at the same time be in a sense interdependent upon one another. My point is this: That the legislative department is somewhat constructed by the Executive power to veto, and, secondly, by the judiciary with the power to declare a law unconstitutional and therefore null and void. There is some limitation on the legislative power in that regard, and I regard this balance of power a wise provision.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. LONDON. What I was trying to make clear was that the House of Representatives had a voice in the determination of international relations, and that was inevitable because of the proper functioning of the American system of government.

Mr. FESS. I doubt whether that statement is justified. The Senate has something to do with the adjustment of international relations in the degree that it has the treaty power of confirmation. The House only responds to the treaty when an appropriation is required by the treaty. Whether the House of Representatives could refuse to make an appropriation that the treaty involved is an open question, because the treaty is the supreme law of the land, and that is constitutional, and it is a question whether, when the treaty is made, it is not an obligation on the House to meet the requirements of the treaty, and, in fact, history shows that we have always done so.

Mr. WINGO. Both the power and the duty is identical in a case where a treaty to be carried out must have an appropriation, just as in the case where by law a salary is fixed and the service is rendered we have the power to refuse, but it is something that goes to integrity of the body.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has stated it more clearly than I.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Not for this moment. This is what I am concerned about: In this stage of our cycle of thinking we can not improve upon the plan that we have to-day, which is unlike any other plan in the history of all governments. Let us stand by that wise provision which insures independence of action of all the coordinate departments.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] if he contends that it is within the power of the House of Representatives to destroy our Government?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and myself may have the privilege of extending our remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 16, 29, 32, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 47, 48, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 77, 78, 80, 81, 82, 90, 92, 93, 97, 107, 109, 110, 111, 113, 119, 122, 128, and 130.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 50, 52, 59, 66, 70, 72, 73, 79, 85, 86, 89, 91, 94, 95, 98, 99, 102, 108, 114, 115, and 125, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$154,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and two Ford runabouts of the 'slip-on' body type without self-starter, not exceeding $550 each; in all, $3,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Provided, That after April 30, 1923, until the constitutionality of the act creating this board shall have been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States there shall not be expended from this appropriation or from the appropriation for this board for the remainder of the fiscal year 1923 a greater sum than at the rate of $1,600 per annum for personal services and $400 per annum for contingent and miscellaneous expenses"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Including an allowance to the secretary of the Board of Charities, not exceeding the rate of $20 per month, for the maintenance of an automobile to be furnished by him and used in the discharge of his official duties, $47,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "other than motor vehicles for the police and fire departments, but no such vehicles shall be transferred from the police or fire departments to any other branch of the government of the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$573,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$55,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$20 per month for an automobile, and $10 per month for a motor cycle"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$20 per month for an automobile, and $10 per month for a motor cycle"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$860,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "give his whole time from nine o'clock antemeridian to four o'clock postmeridian to, and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$240"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or contracts as in this act provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or obligated toward the construction of or addition to any building the whole and entire construction of which, exclusive of heating, lighting, and plumbing, shall not have been awarded in one or a single contract, separate and apart from any other contract, project, or undertaking, to the lowest bidder complying with all the legal requirements as to a deposit of money or the execution of a bond or both, for the faithful performance of the contract: Provided further, That no architect's fee shall be paid or obligated for plans, specifications, or any professional services whatever, unless they are such as will enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or those letting a contract, to secure a legal bid within the amount authorized by Congress for the building or other project: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as repealing existing law giving the commissioners the right to reject all bids"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "The total cost of the sites and of the several and respective buildings herein provided for, including heating, lighting, and plumbing, when completed upon plans and specifications to be made previously and approved, shall not exceed the several and respective sums of money herein respectively appropriated or authorized for such purposes, any provision in this act to the contrary notwithstanding"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$325; maintenance of motor vehicle used in performance of official duties, at not to exceed $20 per month, 240"; and on page 69 of the bill, in line 7, strike out "$5,137" and insert "$5,065"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "$56,000, and all moneys hereafter received at the reformatory as income thereof from the sale of brooms to the various branches of the government of the District of Columbia shall remain available for the purchase of material for the manufacture of additional brooms to be similarly disposed of; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "136,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: On page 91 of the bill, in line 3, strike out "$40,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$45,000"; and on page 91 of the bill, in line 18, strike out "$8,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$10,000"; and on page 92 of the bill, in lines 2 and 3, strike out "$20,000, payable wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia" and in lieu thereof insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the preparation of designs and estimates for development of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, $4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 24, 33, 55, 56, 64, 65, 75, 76, 83, 105, 112, 116, 117, 118, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 129.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
WESLEY L. JONES,
L. HEISLER BALL,
CARTER GLASS,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13660) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 1 to 12, inclusive, relating to the executive office: Appropriates $350 for the veterinary division, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $250, as proposed by the House; improves the form of the bill, as proposed by the Senate; fixes the maintenance allowance for privately owned motor cycles at $10 per month, as proposed by the House, instead of $13 per month, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates in pursuance thereof $360, as proposed by the House, instead of $468, as proposed by the Senate; fixes the maintenance allowance for privately owned automobiles at $20 per month, as proposed by the House, instead of $26 per month, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates in pursuance thereof $1,200, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,560, as proposed by the Senate; improves the form of the bill as proposed by the Senate; fixes the maintenance allowance for privately owned motor cycles at $10 per month, as proposed by the House, instead of $13 per month, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates in pursuance thereof $600, as proposed by the House, instead of $780, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 13 and 14, relating to the collector's office: Appropriates for four bailiffs, at $1,200 each, as proposed by the Senate, instead of three bailiffs at the same rate, as proposed by the House.

On No. 15, relating to the municipal architect's office: Appropriates for two instead of four Ford runabouts, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 16: Appropriates $5,000 for contingent expenses of the Public Utilities Commission, as proposed by the House, instead of $8,000, as proposed by the Senate, and retains the limitation proposed by the House precluding the employment of special legal services by the commission.

On Nos. 17 and 18, relating to the surveyor's office: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $7,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 19: Retains the limitation proposed by the House limiting expenditures by the Minimum Wage Board until the constitutionality of the act creating such board shall have been finally determined as amended so as not to become effective until May 1, 1923.

On Nos. 20 and 21, relating to the Rent Commission: Appropriates $51,750, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $42,500, as proposed by the House, and increases the sum made available for salaries of members of the commission from $13,750, proposed by the House, to $23,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 22 and 23: Appropriates for an additional assistant at $1,000 per annum for the Southeast Branch Library, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 25 to 32, inclusive, relating to contingent and miscellaneous expenses: Appropriates $47,500 for contingent and miscellaneous expenses instead of $45,000, as proposed by the House, and $50,000, as proposed by the Senate; authorizes an allowance at the rate of $20 per month to the secretary of the Board of Charities for supplying for official uses his own automobile, instead of such an allowance at the rate of $26 per month to said secretary and the purchasing officer of the District besides, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the paragraph proposed by the House requiring, with certain exceptions, all appropriations on account of passenger motor transportation to be pooled; broadens the general provision limiting the cost of automobiles purchased or exchanged, specifically excluding motor vehicles for the police and fire departments, as proposed by the Senate, amended so as to prevent the transfer of motor vehicles acquired by the police and fire departments to other branches of the government of the District of Columbia; strikes out the authorization, proposed by the Senate, for the maintenance of telephones in the residences of three employees of the water department; appropriates $16,500 for postage instead of $15,000, as proposed by the House, and $18,000, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the provision proposed by the House with respect to the printing and sale of the pamphlet of taxes in arrears; and makes the provision with respect to compensation for copying instruments and making copies of records in the office of the recorder of deeds permanent law, as proposed by the House, instead of confining its effect to the fiscal year 1924.

On Nos. 34 to 44, inclusive, relating to street improvements: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation proposed by the House for paving Georgia Avenue, Military Road to Dahlia Street; appropriates $110,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $210,000, as proposed by the House, for paving Bladensburg Road; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation proposed by the House for paving Canal Road, Aqueduct Bridge to Foxall Road; provides for paving Spring Place, end of pavement to Sixteenth Street, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $11,000 and $12,600 for paving portions of Kenyon Street and Kansas Avenue, respectively, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate for paving portions of Thirteenth, Buchanan, and Ninth Streets; and restores the appropriation proposed by the House for paving Sigsbee Place NE., Tenth Street to Twelfth Street.

On No. 45: Strikes out the paragraph proposed by the Senate repealing the appropriation made for the fiscal year 1923 for repaving a portion of Fifteenth Street NW.

On No. 46: Authorizes an allowance at the rate of $20 per month for providing a privately owned automobile for official uses in connection with street repair work, instead of at the rate of $26 per month, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 47: Strikes out the authorization, proposed by the Senate, for an allowance to the overseer of bridges for supplying an automobile for official uses.

On No. 48: Designates the new bridge crossing the Potomac River at Georgetown as the Francis Scott Key Bridge, as proposed by the House, instead of as the Key Bridge, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 49: Appropriates $55,000 for trees and parkings instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and $60,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 50 and 51, relating to street cleaning: Makes the appropriation available for allowances to inspectors for maintenance of motor vehicles, as proposed by the Senate, and makes the rate of allowance for an automobile $20 per month and for a motor cycle $10 per month instead of $26 and $13 per month, respectively, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 52 to 54, inclusive, relating to garbage disposal: Makes the appropriation available for allowances to inspectors for maintenance of motor vehicles, as proposed by the Senate; makes the rate of allowance for an automobile $20 per month and for a motor cycle $10 per month instead of $26 and $13 per month, respectively, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $860,000 instead of $825,000, as proposed by the House, and $900,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 57 to 60, inclusive, relating to the electrical department: Provides for an allowance for the maintenance of not more than three privately owned automobiles at not to exceed $20 per month each instead of $26 per month each, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $30,000 for general supplies, etc., instead of $27,500, as proposed by the House, and $32,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $472,000 for lighting, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $450,000, as proposed by the House; and appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $35,000, as proposed by the Senate, for replacing lighting fixtures.

On Nos. 61 to 63, inclusive, relating to public schools: Appropriates for two assistant superintendents, as proposed by the House, instead of three assistant superintendents, one to have charge of business affairs, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 66: Appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $40,000, as proposed by the House, for allowance to principals of grade school buildings.

On No. 67: Appropriates $6,480 for Americanization work, as proposed by the House, instead of $9,980, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 68: Provides that the appropriation on account of community-center activities shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, as proposed by the House.

On No. 69: Requires that the chief medical and sanitary inspector of the public schools shall give his whole time from 9 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p. m. to his duties, instead of his "whole time," as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 70 to 73, inclusive, relating to miscellaneous expenses of the public schools: Appropriates $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, for transportation of tubercular pupils; provides for an allowance for maintenance to be paid to nine officers and employees of the public schools for providing their own automobiles for official uses at the rate of $240 per annum, instead of $312 per annum, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,500, as proposed by the House, for purchase of apparatus; and provides, as proposed by the Senate, that children of employees of the United States stationed outside of the District of Columbia shall be admitted to the public schools without payment of tuition.

On No. 74: Provides in connection with the appropriation for remodeling and constructing an addition to the Western High School that one or more contracts may be entered into, as proposed by the Senate, subject to the restrictions elsewhere proposed in the bill.

On Nos. 77 to 82, inclusive, relating to sites for school purposes: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase of land adjoining the Ludlow School; strikes out the appropriation of $50,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase of a site on which to locate a junior high school north of Lincoln Park; appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of land adjoining the Dunbar High School; strikes out the appropriation of $20,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase of a site near the Brightwood School; strikes out the appropriation of $30,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase of a site near Rittenhouse and Fifth Streets NW., and strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $45,000 for the purchase of a site north of Webster Street and east of Georgia Avenue.

On No. 84: Restores the matter proposed by the House with respect to building contracts and architects' fees, amended so as to permit separate contracts being entered into for heating, lighting, and plumbing.

On No. 85: Appropriates $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $250,000, as proposed by the House, for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds, etc.

On No. 86: Provides that the appropriations contained in the bill for the purchase of land for school purposes shall be available immediately, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 87: Restores the matter proposed by the House requiring that the total cost of sites and buildings shall respectively come within the respective appropriations, amended so as to include specifically the cost of heating, lighting, and plumbing, and to supersede any contrary provision.

On Nos. 88 to 91, inclusive, relating to the police department: Appropriates $8,500 for fuel, instead of $7,000, as proposed by the House, and $10,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $35,000 on account of the maintenance and replacement of motor vehicles, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the House; strikes out the appropriation of $2,500 proposed by the Senate for marking traffic lines for cross walks at street intersections; and appropriates $3,500 for fuel, and so forth, harbor patrol, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 92: Appropriates $4,500 for forage, fire department, as proposed by the House, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 93 to 99, inclusive, relating to the health department: Appropriates $6,000 for maintenance of disinfecting service, as proposed by the House, instead of $6,500, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $750 on account of the bacteriological laboratory, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $650, as proposed by the House; appropriates $1,000 on account of the chemical laboratory, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $750, as proposed by the House; provides for an allowance for supplying privately owned automobiles for official uses at the rate of not to exceed $20 per month instead of $26 per month, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $6,000 on account of dairy-farm inspection, as proposed by the House, instead of $8,000, as proposed by the Senate, striking out the authorization proposed by the Senate extending the availability of the appropriation for traveling expenses; appropriates $250 for the dog pound, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $18,000 on account of the child-hygiene service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 100: Provides for an allowance for the maintenance of a privately owned automobile used for official purposes, as proposed by the Senate, fixing the rate, however, at $20 per month instead of $26 per month, and in consequence thereof makes the appropriation on account of the probation system of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia $5,065 instead of $5,137, as proposed by the House and Senate.

On No. 101: Appropriates $1,700 on account of maintenance of motor ambulances under the Board of Charities, instead of $1,600, as proposed by the House, and $1,800, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 102: Appropriates $4,750 for screening at the jail, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,500, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 103 and 104, relating to the reformatory: Appropriates $56,000 for maintenance, etc., instead of $52,000, as proposed by the House, and $60,000, as proposed by the Senate; and restores the authorization proposed by the House to employ the income from the sale of brooms for producing additional brooms, amended so as to limit the application of such receipts to the purchase of broom material only.

On No. 106: Appropriates $10,000 for indigent patients cared for at the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, and $15,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 107: Strikes out the authorization, proposed by the Senate, to receive pay patients at the Tuberculosis Hospital.

On Nos. 108 and 109, relating to the Gallinger Municipal Hospital: Appropriates $5,000 for repairs to buildings, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000, as proposed by the House; and strikes out the authorization, proposed by the Senate, to receive pay patients in the psychopathic ward.

On Nos. 110 and 111: Strikes out the two additional placing and investigating officers at $1,000 each under the Board of Children's Guardians, proposed by the Senate.

On No. 113: Appropriates $5,000 on account of a cottage for boys at the Industrial Home School for Colored Children, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 114 and 115: Appropriates for an additional cook at $180 per annum under the Home for Aged and Infirm, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 119: Restores the appropriation of $31,200, proposed by the House, for salaries of foremen, gardeners, etc., under the office of public buildings and grounds.

On No. 120: Restores the 32 separate appropriation paragraphs proposed by the House for the improvement and care of public grounds in the District of Columbia instead of providing for same in four appropriation paragraphs, as proposed by the Senate, amended so as to increase the amount proposed by the House for improvement, care, and maintenance of various reservations from $40,000 to $45,000, and the amount for oiling and otherwise treating macadam roads from $8,000 to $10,000, and so as to reduce the amount proposed by the House for placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports from $20,000 to $15,000, and making such appropriation chargeable 40 per cent to the United States and 60 per cent to the District of Columbia, instead of wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, as proposed by the House, so that the restored paragraphs provide in the aggregate for $2,000 more than proposed by the House and $10,000 less than proposed by the Senate in the four substitute paragraphs proposed by the Senate.

On No. 121: Appropriates $4,000 for the preparation of designs and estimates for development of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, instead of for the commencement of the preparation of such designs and estimates, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 122: Strikes out the appropriation of $50,000 proposed by the Senate for continuing the construction of a sea wall.

On No. 125: Appropriates $37,000 for lighting the public grounds, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $24,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 128: Strikes out the authorization and appropriation proposed by the Senate in connection with a restudy of the highway system of the District of Columbia.

On No. 130: Fixes the allowance to be paid for the maintenance of privately owned motor cycles used for official purposes at $10 per month, as proposed by the House, instead of $13 per month, as proposed by the Senate.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 24, relating to the Mount Pleasant Branch Library.

On No. 33, relating to the erection of accommodations for the office of the recorder of deeds and other activities of the District government.

On Nos. 55 and 56, relating to the purchase of sites for playgrounds.

On Nos. 64 and 65, relating to administrative principals of elementary schools.

On Nos. 75, 76, and 83, relating to the purchase of sites for school purposes and to the erection of school buildings.

On No. 105, relating to the purchase of a site and the erection of buildings thereon for the accommodation of girls committed to the National Training School for Girls.

On No. 112, relating to a home and school for feeble-minded persons.

On No. 116, relating to an appropriation for aid and support of the National Library for the Blind.

On No. 117, relating to an appropriation to aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind.

On No. 118, relating to a modification of the existing project for Anacostia Park above Benning Bridge.

On No. 123, relating to an appropriation for the construction of a comfort station and shelter at Haines Point, East Potomac Park.

On No. 124, relating to the appropriation for the construction of a bathing beach and bathhouse for the colored population of the District of Columbia.

On No. 126, relating to the areas to comprise the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway and to the protection of Rock Creek and its tributaries.

On No. 127, relating to the acquisition of the tract known as the Klingle Valley Park, the Piney Branch Valley Park, and a portion of the tract known as the Patterson tract.

On No. 129, relating to the appropriation for increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON rose.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question or two. The Senate has placed on this bill an amendment which is intended to prevent any violation of the service pay bill by permitting officers in the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps from getting allowances in kind in addition to the $20 per month rental allowance. Is it the gentleman's purpose to look with favor upon that amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say to the gentleman that my attitude personally would rather favor an amendment of that kind, but I would not like to bind the conferees in advance of a discussion of the matter.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman, however, before agreeing that that amendment might be stricken out would possibly give the House an opportunity of expressing itself?

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly, I think the gentleman will find that the House conferees will desire to consult the wishes of the House as largely as possible on any disputed question in the conference.

Mr. McKENZIE. One other matter. The Senate has placed an amendment on the bill which provides for the retirement of certain officers with higher grades, and changes the law which is now in existence—that is, the Army reorganization law—and would permit not only taking these men from the eligible list, as provided for in the Army reorganization bill, but going down into the grade of major and promoting majors to some higher grade, such as brigadier general. Before the Committee on Military Affairs there is pending now a bill, introduced by the gentleman from Kansas himself, covering some of those points. It is a very important bill. We have not had time to consider it, and I certainly feel that it would be a mistake to undertake to legislate changes in the Army reorganization act in this manner; and I hope that the gentleman will not consent to that amendment without giving the House an opportunity to pass upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman has expressed his intention with reference to some of these amendments. Was the gentleman's attention called to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois in the committee when the bill was under consideration here, providing that no part of the funds should be used until certain captains were promoted?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the Senate has amplified the amendment adopted by the House—has further perfected it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The Senate committee struck it all out.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was restored, as I understand, by an amendment offered from the floor of the Senate. I am talking about the Hull amendment.

Mr. HULL. That is in satisfactory shape.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thought it was offered by the gentleman from Illinois. What is the gentleman's purpose with reference to the amendment the House adopted regarding enlistments from 18 to 21 years of age?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would be unable to tell the gentleman what the sentiment of the conferees would be. Personally I look upon that amendment as unwise. I can not speak for my colleagues.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman realizes that that amendment was adopted by the House and put on the bill. Would he disregard the action of the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no; I think not. I think the gentleman will find that the conferees will desire to consult the wishes of the House on all important things of that kind where the House has expressed itself. There is no intent on the part of the conferees to go against the wishes of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Could the gentleman assure us that the conferees will bring that amendment back to the House for a vote before the matter is settled?

Mr. ANTHONY. I doubt if I could assure the gentleman of that, because I am unable to give him the attitude of the other conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would that be the attitude of the gentleman?

Mr. ANTHONY. I told the gentleman that I personally was opposed to that amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman also said that, while he was opposed to it, he was disposed to consult the wishes of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does he mean by that that he would be willing to bring it back to the House again for a vote?

Mr. ANTHONY. Ordinarily on any amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am talking about this particular amendment only, not ordinarily.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not believe the gentleman would want me to promise in advance what the action of the conferees would be.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No. I was trying to get the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it comes to a vote of the conferees, personally I shall vote against such an amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Against bringing it back to the House?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How can we have a conference if everybody goes to it hog tied?

Mr. ANTHONY. We would not have much of a conference in that event. I think the gentleman can be assured that he will undoubtedly have an opportunity to have the matter considered.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, would not this be the time to make a motion to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The time for instructing the conferees is after the bill has been ordered to conference.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman—my understanding is the amendment affecting the retired pay of officers connected with corporations, and so forth, selling to the Government has been stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is my understanding.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my hope we will have an opportunity to vote on that amendment, which was adopted by the House, or in some modified terms whereby retired officers are prevented from becoming sales agents, and so forth, and prevented from selling materials as officers of corporations to the respective services from which they have been retired. I would like to know whether or not the conferees will be disposed to bring that back to the House for some decision?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman, just the same as I said to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], on any proposition that comes up where a considerable number of Members of the House are interested, I think the disposition of the conferees will be to bring it back to the House for consideration.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to suggest to the gentleman it seems to me the honor of the Members of the House is at stake here when our decision here is given such wide publicity, and so forth; I think that we ought to have a chance to show to the country we are in sincere faith here in adopting this policy.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think I can assure the House there will be no disposition to foreclose on this amendment or any others.

Mr. McSWAIN. Bearing in mind the fact the gentleman said he would be disposed to bring back for consultation of the House any important matter that a considerable number of Members express interest in, I desire to say that, speaking in behalf of a number on our side of the aisle, I am intensely interested in the same proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, and I hope the gentleman will bring it back to the House for consideration.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what his attitude will be in regard to the amendment put on in the Senate to abolish the stop-watch proposition? I presume the gentleman is fairly well informed of the history of this. There are a great number of gentlemen in the House who would like to have an opportunity to express themselves. Can the gentleman give some assurance that we will be given an opportunity to secure that——

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not give the gentleman any assurance as to what the action of the conferees will be, but I think undoubtedly that the gentleman will have an opportunity to discuss the matter in the House.

Mr. HULL. And have a vote on it in the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can assure him——

Mr. BLANTON. It has to come back; it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HULL. There is a question about the point of order which must be raised at the proper time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I told the gentleman from Iowa yesterday what my judgment was on the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to make a point of order against it so quick as to make the gentleman's head swim.

Mr. HULL. That is all right; the gentleman made a point of order before and he has been overruled by the best parliamentarians of the House. We are willing to argue the point of order. All we ask of the conferees is that they shall bring it back to the House the same as is promised as to the others.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Kansas express any opinion as to the amendment put on in the Senate raising the rank of the President's aid, Colonel Sherrill, to that of brigadier general?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that is an entirely new proposition put on by the Senate, and one that, as far as I know, none of the House conferees have ever discussed. I know it has not been discussed by the House conferees, and on all matters of military legislation, I want to say to the gentleman that it is the disposition of the conferees to consult freely the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, especially on their ideas of these things.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want to remind the gentleman that two years ago we sat together, he and I, with our colleagues of the Committee on Military Affairs, while we framed the Army reorganization act, and one of the particular features of that act was designed to remove the evil consequences of what might be called perhaps preferential appointment of Army officers theretofore by assigning them to details whereby a man of a lesser grade might be advanced to some higher grade that carried with it pay. We thought that by the passage of that Army reorganization act we had put an end for all time to such mischief by making it absolutely impossible to change the grade of a man by detail; that if a man was to be assigned to a place where a major was wanted, a major would be sent rather than promote a captain to be a major, and then send him. Now, we do not want to violate that principle, which is one of the fundamental principles in the whole act. I hope the gentleman, and the conferees on the part of the House, will keep that in mind, or else we will lose a most important victory which we achieved over old-time favoritism.

Mr. HICKS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall object if we can not ask the gentleman some questions. If we can not do that I will object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. HICKS. I will insist upon it, Mr. Speaker. Then, perhaps, we can get through with it.

Mr. CRAMTON. We can have an agreement on that question.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] several questions.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Kansas has acted as a conferee on many occasions, and I do not think he has ever violated the confidence of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask some questions. I will remind the gentleman from Kansas, who has the matter in charge, that what is known as the Dickinson amendment, I believe, that he stated he would be disposed to bring that back.

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLANTON. But what is known as the Sherrill amendment—that is, to make a brigadier general out of Colonel Sherrill—and what is known as the Hull amendment, which was placed on in the Senate, concerning the exercise of watchfulness by the Government over some of its employees—those are two matters that had to be brought back here?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, if they are agreed to in conference they must be brought back to the House first.

Mr. BLANTON. But if the Senate, which put them on the bill, is disposed to yield on that proposition, the gentleman would not have to bring them back. He would not have to bring them back if the Senate receded from them. As to the matter referred to by my colleague [Mr. CONNALLY], every father and mother in the Nation having boys under 18 or 20 years of age is interested in it; and upon that and the Dickinson matter I hope the gentleman will give the House an opportunity to pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. On any question where there is a considerable number of Members of the House vitally interested we shall be disposed to bring it back.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well. One more suggestion and then I am done. The same agreement was made by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who indicated that he would give the House an opportunity to act upon certain matters. He asked to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and yet he went into conference and had the House recede in 40 different amendments, involving $800,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman just one question.

Mr. MONDELL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will we have an opportunity to vote on the increase to officers in training camps?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not say that a vote will be given on that question, but a full and free conference will be had on that question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? If not, the Chair will appoint the conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the conferees are appointed I ask leave to make a motion of instruction.

The SPEAKER. It is supposed that there will be a full and free conference.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will make a motion to instruct on this particular amendment, but if the gentleman will assure me that we will have a vote, I will not make the motion.

The SPEAKER. Even under instructions of the House the Chair believes that the conferees under the rules are not allowed to agree to that. They may not bring it back.

Mr. BLANTON. They struck it out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware of that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The Senate struck it out. If the gentleman will give me that assurance I will withdraw my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. SISSON.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the pending District of Columbia appropriation conference report comes before the House recommending the smallest increase over the original bill as reported to the House of any District appropriation bill, probably, in 20 years. I shall want to insert some figures; but, desiring to protect the time of the House, I will ask unanimous consent that I may have the right to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Briefly, the action of the conferees, so far as an agreement is reported, adds to the bill that went to the Senate from the House only $309,380. But there are reductions proposed by the Senate, which were accepted by the House conferees, amounting to $240,000. So the net increase at the present stage of affairs, if the pending report is accepted—the net increase on the bill as it passed the House would be only $69,380.

There are items receded from by the Senate to the amount of $515,998 carried in the pending report. There were in addition items stricken out on the floor of the House that were originally recommended by the committee to the House which will come up under the rules of the House requiring a separate vote on items that would have been subject to a point of order in the House. That includes $550,000 for library site, playground sites, and school buildings and grounds, and we will move later to restore those items. If the action that has already been taken by the conferees is indorsed by the House and if the further action that we will recommend upon these items that would have been subject to a point of order is indorsed by the House, then the total of the bill, the appropriation act for 1924, will be $22,778,915. That amount will be $72,694.80 below the 1923 appropriation. It will be $772,215 below the Budget recommendation for 1924. It will be $1,691,070 below the bill as it passed the Senate, and it will be only $154,020 above the bill as the committee originally reported it to this House. So I say it will be the smallest increase, I believe, comparing the bill that came from the Committee on Appropriations to the House and the final action, of any District bill in many years.

In connection with that I will insert in the RECORD a detailed statement of the increases on particular items. On most of them, small items, I will not take the time of the House. I would, however, call attention to the item of paving, on which the Senate made material reductions and some increases. We have accepted reductions of $225,000, and then additions have been made of $23,600, so that the net reduction below the House bill is $202,400.

In the main, the Senate went a little further on the same policy which the House had adopted in giving emphasis to the paving of unpaved streets where they are 100 per cent built up on both sides.

There is in reference to schools this situation: We give another $1,000 for transportation of tubercular pupils, $1,500 for laboratory supplies, $50,000 for repairs of buildings, and $100,000 for land adjacent to the Dunbar High School. That is to say, the bill as reported to the House carried every item in the budget that meant a new seat for a pupil in the schools. Some of these which were struck out in the House on a point of order we will ask that they be restored by a separate vote. The only new item we recommended in this report or that we will recommend by a separate vote is the item of $100,000 for land adjacent to the Dunbar School. That has not been before the House before. In regard to that, this is the situation: There is a splendid stadium adjoining the Central High School for the white children. There is a proposal for an athletic field adjoining the Western High. There is no athletic field for the colored schools. They have quite a colored educational center out here on First Street. There is the Armstrong Manual Training School on O Street, and on the opposite side in the next block is the Dunbar High; then they have the Shaw Junior High for colored two or three blocks away, and in that vicinity there are several colored grade schools. There is land adjacent to the Dunbar High School which is in a large part undeveloped. There are some shacks and poor buildings on a portion of it and some better buildings on another part. If they can have the land which is recommended in this report they can develop an athletic field where sports can be conducted by the colored students in the schools.

They have athletic teams in the Dunbar High, in the Armstrong Manual Training, and in the Shaw Junior High Schools. They have teams which meet other teams from Baltimore, Alexandria, and other places for contests. The only place that they can go now is to the American League Baseball Park or down on the Monument Lot. In the latter case they can not charge for attendance. The proposed field would be located near all these schools and in the midst of a large colored population.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has referred to the fact that provision had been made for an athletic field adjoining the Western High School.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not so familiar with that; it is not carried in the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. They very much need one out there at the Western High, but I did not know that there was a proposition for one.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is in contemplation.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It certainly ought to be done, because they have no facilities of that kind there now.

Mr. CRAMTON. I knew it was contemplated, and I thought it was under way. They have adjoining the Central High, as the gentleman well knows, a fine stadium. But there is nothing available for the colored students.

There is another important provision in the bill. Last year was the first year that the item of new buildings for schools was made immediately available. We expedite the new work of construction proposed by making it available when the bill passes as early as this. This will be a law before February is closed. We have gone further and made the appropriations for land also immediately available. There is one item of the bill to buy more land and another item for building upon it. By making the land immediately available, as well as for the building, we are assured of expediting it to the utmost.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. YOUNG. In a case of this kind, where the officials ask money to purchase land, I would like to know whether they get options on the land before that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they do not.

Mr. YOUNG. If they did not, it seems to me they might be held up when the owners understood that there was a fat appropriation for it.

Mr. CRAMTON. That might be true in some cases. In some cases the selection of the land is limited, but they have the remedy of condemnation proceedings. In other cases we have given them the option of selection between certain limits—as, for instance, between Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street and north of Park Road.

There are various features in the bill that would interest the House, but I am going to call attention only to the matter of allowance for officials for the use of their own automobiles or motor cycles in public business. In the current year it was $13 for a motor cycle and $26 for an automobile. Our bill carried $10 for a motor cycle and $20 for an automobile, and those figures have been accepted by the Senate. Also there is a limitation on the appropriation for Public Utilities Commission to guard against further expenditure for special legal services. That limitation proposed by the House has been accepted by the Senate conferees.

The name of the new bridge in Georgetown will interest the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. The name he suggested—Francis Scott Key—will be the official name. The result of this conference report and the further motions that we will offer, if accepted by the House, will, as I stated before, make $22,778,915.

Following is the detailed financial statement:

Appropriated, 1923 act	$22,851,609.80
Proposed in Budget for 1924	23,551,130.00
Bill as reported to House carried	22,624,895.00
Bill as passed by House carried	22,078,607.00
Reduction by House	546,288.00
Bill as passed by Senate carried	24,469,985.00
Less amount carried as passed by House	22,078,607.00
Senate increase	2,391,378.00

Money effect of action agreed upon:
Of amount added by Senate; conferees agreed to	$309,380.00
Of reductions proposed by Senate ($248,000); conferees acceded to	240,000.00
Total increase over House bill agreed to in conference (excludes reduction of $72 as result of action upon amendment No. 100)	69,380.00
Net amount of Senate increases receded from by Senate conferees	515,998.00
Amount involved in amendments not agreed to but which House conferees will propose favorable action upon	631,000.00
Amount involved in amendments not agreed to and on which the House conferees will not recommend favorable action	1,175,000.00
Total	2,391,378.00

So at this stage the bill, so far as affected by the conference report, adds to the amount carried when passed by the House $69,308 ($72 being taken off on account of action on amendment No. 100, which reduced a total not in conference), which will be made with respect to amendments not agreed to there will be added the further sum of $631,000, or a total over the bill as passed by the House of $700,308, or but $154,020 more than the bill carried as originally reported to the House and $1,691,070 less than proposed by the Senate.

Of the sum of $631,000 which it is proposed to recommend for acceptance, $550,000 represents items reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House and stricken from the bill on points of order, namely:

Mount Pleasant branch library	$25,000
Playground sites	25,000
School buildings and grounds	500,000

The amendments agreed to in conference making up the larger portion of the $309,380 are—

Garbage removal	$35,000
Lighting	22,000
Land adjoining Dunbar High School	100,000
Repairs to school buildings	50,000

If the action heretofore taken by the House conferees and that about to be recommended is approved by the House the amount appropriated—

Will be	$22,778,915.00
Which is below the 1923 appropriations	72,694.80
Which is below the 1924 Budget	772,215.00
Which is below the Senate figure on this bill	1,691,070.00
Which is above the original House committee report	154,020.00

Changes recommended in House bill:

	Increase.	Decrease.
Veterinary supplies	$100
Collector, one more bailiff	1,200
Municipal architect (two Ford runabouts)	1,100
Temporary services, surveyor's office	3,000
Rent Commission, salary of commissioners	9,250
Library, Southeast branch, one assistant	1,000
Contingent	2,500
Postage	1,500
Paving:
Reduce $225,000
Add 23,600
		$201,400
Trees and parkings	5,000
Garbage collection	35,000
Current $750,000
House 825,000
Senate 900,000
Lighting:
General supplies	2,500
Maintenance	22,000
House $450,000
Schools:
Transportation tubercular pupils	1,000
Laboratory supplies	1,500
Dunbar land	100,000
Repairs to buildings, etc	50,000
Police:
Fuel	1,500
Maintenance and replacement motor equipment	10,000
Harbor patrol, fuel, etc	500
Health:
Bacteriological laboratory	100
Chemical laboratory	250
New dog pens	250
Child hygiene	3,000
Charities and corrections:
Maintenance of ambulances	100
Screening jail	3,250
Reformatory, maintenance	4,000
Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital	10,000
Gallinger Hospital, repairs	2,000
Home for Aged and Infirm, employee	180
Parks:
Maintenance of various reservations	5,000
Treating macadam roads	2,000
Outdoor sports		5,000
Plans for Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway	4,000
Lighting public grounds	13,000

As I have said, the amount as proposed by the House conferees for the entire building is $22,778,915. The cost to the Federal Treasury out of that will be something less than $8,300,000. The immediate proportion will be larger than that, but some of the fees, and so forth, payments for paving, and such things, go back into the Treasury in the same proportion that the District or the Federal Government contributes for them; and basing it upon the best opinion available, that will be sufficient to bring the Federal contribution in this bill to something less than $8,300,000. In connection with that I am going to take the liberty of inserting, under the leave given me, some reference to a proposed change in this system of contribution, and in connection with that will also include a very interesting statement as to the Federal contribution that has been prepared at my request by the auditor of the District of Columbia, showing what the actual contribution of the Federal Government has been year by year for the past 10 years.

I have introduced H. R. 14253, as follows:

A bill to fix the amount to be contributed by the United States toward defraying expenses of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1924, the Government of the United States shall not bear any fixed proportion of the expenses of the District of Columbia but shall pay the sum of $8,000,000 annually toward defraying such expenses of the District as may be appropriated for by law.

SEC. 2. That on and after such date there shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia any revenue now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived.

SEC. 3. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent, until July 1, 1927, the advancements permitted to be made for expenses of the District by the Treasury Department in accordance with the first paragraph of section 1 of the District of Columbia appropriation act approved June 29, 1922.

I believe it highly desirable, both for the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, that the change I propose in the Federal contribution to District expenses be made. The property interests of the Federal Government in the District of Columbia, so far as land area, and so forth, is concerned, have reached an approximate maximum, while the development of other property interests in the District is going on at a constantly increasing ratio. The rapid growth of population in the District, accompanied by an even greater real-estate development and increase in other taxable property, make it imperative, in fairness to the Federal Treasury, that the old proportional policy of contribution be thrown into the discard.

I propose in lieu of this that a fixed amount each year be contributed by the Federal Government toward the expenses of the District and suggest as that amount $8,000,000. That is approximately the amount the Federal Treasury contributes at the present time under the present plan, and while there are many in Congress who criticize the present Federal contribution as too liberal, in view of the extremely low tax rate in the District of Columbia I think consent of Congress to that amount as a fixed annual contribution could be secured.

I am aware that the first impulse of District residents may be one of opposition to my suggestion. I believe, however, that on consideration it will be realized that the best interests of the District in the years to come, its most rapid development can be secured under the plan which I suggest. At the present time Congress feels that the total appropriations for the government and development of the District of Columbia must be restricted to such an amount that the Federal share thereof, at present 40 per cent, shall not constitute an undue burden upon the Federal Treasury. At the same time the city is developing, as I have said, and its needs in many directions are acute, as is the case in any growing city. The tax rate is low, and some increase in it could be borne by the District without undue hardship and I think would be borne cheerfully in the interest of a more rapid development of the District needs in the way of paving, schools, sewers, lighting, police, fire protection, and so forth. If the plan I propose were adopted, and the contribution of the Federal Treasury were a fixed, stipulated sum, I am sure the disposition of Congress would be to expedite development of such District matters as rapidly as the sentiment of the people of the District might demand within a reasonable tax rate. At the present time Congress is inclined to feel that District support for increased expenditures is the more enthusiastic because so large a part of the proposed expenditure must be made from the Federal Treasury. The realization that the entire expenditure beyond the $8,000,000 must come from District revenues would, no doubt, have a sobering influence upon some propagandists for reckless expenditures; but where real need existed and a pronounced public sentiment was manifested for the expenditure of money to be contributed solely by the people of the District I am sure that appropriations would be made by Congress in response to such a demand. I think the people of the District are sincere in their demand for needed improvements in the District, and that a slight increase in the tax rate to meet more rapid filling of those demands would be cheerfully met. I am satisfied that my bill provides very just treatment of the Federal Treasury and a more liberal policy of development for the District.

The following is the letter and statement by Colonel Donovan, auditor of the District:

FEBRUARY 10, 1923.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Mr. Pugh, one of the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations, telephoned me last evening that you desired I should prepare for your use a statement covering the fiscal years beginning with 1913 and ending with 1922, showing the total expenditures made by the District of Columbia from appropriations for each of said years, with the proportions charged, respectively, to the District of Columbia and the United States, and showing further the receipts collected by the District and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the United States for each of said years, with the resulting net expenditure charge to the United States.

It was not practicable to prepare a statement literally as requested within the short time allowed, as it is not customary to analyze expenditures on the basis of division between the United States and the District. But the information contained in the statement is substantially about what I understand you wish. The statement shows the total appropriations for each of the fiscal years named, with the proportion charged to each the United States and the District, the receipts credited to the United States, with the resulting net charge to the United States.

In determining the total appropriations for each fiscal year deductions have been made for unexpended balances of appropriations which lapsed under limitations of law, and were covered into the surplus fund by warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. The appropriations are therefore purely on a net basis and as set up approximate very closely the expenditures in each year. The statement assumes the expenditure of the unexpended balances of appropriations on June 30, 1922, amounting to $3,307,414.94, of which amount the sum of $2,076,725.99 is chargeable to the revenues of the District and $1,230,688.95 to the revenues of the United States. Practically this entire amount was obligated prior to June 30, 1922, but would not mature for payment until after July 1.

The net approximate average expenditure from the revenues of the United States, on the basis adopted in the preparation of the statement, for each of the years beginning with 1913 and ending with 1922 is $7,089,405.27. Using such an average does not present a fair answer considered in the light of conditions of to-day. In 1913 the total appropriations amounted to $11,317,440, while in 1922 they were $22,254,670, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. The charge to the United States in 1913 was only $5,344,857, under the half-and-half system, while in 1922 the charge was $8,456,313, with the United States paying but 40 per cent.

Very truly yours,

D. J. DONOVAN,
Auditor of the District of Columbia.

Statement showing appropriations of the District of Columbia for each fiscal year beginning with July 1, 1912, and ending with June 30, 1922; the proportion of such appropriations chargeable to the District and the United States; the amount of District receipts credited to the United States during each of said years, and the resulting net appropriation charge to the United States for each year.

Fiscal year.	Total appropriation.	Charged to District.	Charged to United States.	Receipts credited to United States.	Net charge to United States.
1913	$11,317,440.87	$5,710,618.15	$5,606,822.72	$261,965.23	$5,344,857.49
1914	11,801,768.01	5,960,541.28	5,841,226.73	232,886.95	5,608,339.78
1915	13,592,688.48	7,002,256.92	6,590,431.56	215,909.82	6,374,521.74
1916	12,358,687.50	6,255,071.94	6,103,615.57	275,440.02	5,828,175.55
1917	14,358,755.81	7,299,152.02	7,059,603.79	255,865.13	6,803,738.66
1918	15,879,083.48	8,007,946.48	7,871,136.99	211,771.33	7,659,365.66
1919	17,157,762.52	8,841,540.78	8,316,221.74	368,025.63	7,948,196.11
1920	19,185,394.34	9,728,437.50	9,456,956.84	394,332.93	9,062,623.91
1921	21,097,753.13	12,774,822.06	8,322,931.07	515,010.55	7,807,920.52
1922	22,254,670.79	13,385,892.58	8,868,778.21	412,464.89	8,456,313.32
	159,004,004.93	84,966,279.71	74,037,725.22	3,143,672.48	70,894,052.74
1923		13,162,841.88	8,650,747.92	314,367.00	8,346,380.92
1924		13,106,149.80	8,631,745.20	314,367.00	8,317,378.20

NOTE.—The foregoing statement assumes the expenditure of the unexpended balances of appropriations on June 30, 1922, amounting to $3,307,414.94. Of this amount the sum chargeable to the revenues of the District of Columbia is $2,076,725.99, and to the revenues of the United States $1,230,688.95.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, since it is a matter that is going to be a very material question before long, could the gentleman not have gone back to 1878, at the time when the Government was paying 50 per cent of the $15,000,000 bond issue, and 50 per cent of the million-dollar bond issue which was subsequently issued, and guaranteeing all of the $15,000,000 bond issue, so that we would understand exactly what the Government has contributed?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will understand that in the last appropriation bill for the District of Columbia there was carried a provision for a joint commission to go into that very matter. A report has been filed. I feel that it is only a very partial performance of what the law demanded, and perhaps sometime I shall expand my ideas more upon that; but this was simply a request, which the auditor very kindly complied with on short notice, and only covers the 10 years which I speak of.

Mr. BLANTON. This is just what the commission did.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is not as comprehensive even as their work. It only relates to the net expenditure from the Federal Treasury for this purpose.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is it not also true that in fixing that amount, as fixed by the chairman, which is appropriated from the exclusive Federal revenues, you have not made probable deductions which will certainly come from returns from activities in the District to which both the District and the Federal Government have contributed or shall contribute?

Mr. CRAMTON. An estimate has been made.

Mr. EVANS. Is that included in the deduction?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Covering both rentals and fines?

Mr. CRAMTON. The estimate is supposed to. Of course, it can not be accurate. It may vary one or two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it would have been very valuable information for the House if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] had had our auditor go back to the time when the District was under its own management and was issuing bonds in $15,000,000 blocks, behind which the Government was placing the credit of the people of the United States, 50 per cent of which, together with the interest thereon, the people of the whole country paid. We are going to have to look into this question of the fiscal relations between the District and the Government a little more closely. There is a move already on foot now to try and establish a credit here of four and a half million dollars in the Treasury to the benefit of the District, and I am sorry that the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS], who now sits on this floor, is not going to be with us in the next term when that fight comes up. We need him here, because he, in my judgment, more than any other Member, except the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], has given this matter close study and investigation.

Years ago this Government built the entire water system conduit and paid for it out of the people's money and permitted the people here in the District to rent the water out and get the returns for that, and they have made no recompense whatever to the Government for it. While the Government has paid the expense of its courts, the District has collected its own fines and its own penalties and taken in other revenue in many respects without accounting to the Government for any portion of same, where the cost of the proceeding was paid up to a short time ago 50 per cent by the people of the United States and is now paid 40 per cent by the people generally. And yet because Congress has permitted the people in this District to pay taxes, now $1.30 on the hundred, and never since 1878 having been more than 2 per cent lower than the taxes paid in any other city, as their part of the expense of running this big city of 437,000 people, that being all of the expense that the people here have to pay, because of these facts and because Congress was liberal and has paid out money for many of the District's own expenses directly from the Treasury, some of that $1.30 taxes did not go into the expenses and left a little surplus over every year, they now claim that they should be given back that part of their little $1.30 tax which was unused, aggregating about $4,500,000 as a cash surplus to their credit. It is the most absurd and ridiculous proposition I ever heard of.

I can not stop the passage of any of these provisions that the Senate has placed on this bill. If I could do so I would, if I had to fight here until sundown; but I can not stop it. There is no better man in this House than the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], there is no man who has the interest of the people more at heart than he, and yet he as one of the conferees has been forced to recede from the disagreement of the House to 43 different amendments placed on in the Senate and accept the same; and there are others here which he has had to bring back because they are legislative items, which he has promised to accept, which items involve $800,000 of the people's money, or approximately that amount, more than the bill carried when the House got through with it and sent it to the Senate.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman desires to be accurate. It was $631,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Six hundred and thirty-one thousand dollars that the gentleman has already receded from.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And in addition to that there is about $140,000 more that he is going to try to get the House to accept, besides several hundred thousand dollars more which he is going to fight here. The amount he has already receded from plus the amount that he is going to try to let stay in amounts to approximately $800,000, the sum that I stated. I was not speaking inadvisedly when I made that statement. It was a matter of investigation and computation.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amount that would have been subject to the point of order which we recommend is $631,000.

Mr. BLANTON. How much more is it that you are not going to recommend?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is one item included in the report of $500,000 on which the Senate has already receded.

Mr. BLANTON. We are going to fight that.

Mr. CRAMTON. But that is already defeated in conference, and that is for the recorder of deeds building. There is another item of $675,000 on which I hope——

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about amendments the gentleman is not going to agree to——

Mr. CRAMTON. But I am trying to tell him. There is an item of $675,000 for parks which I shall hope we shall disagree upon.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, as a matter of fact there is an amount of $800,000 here that could go into the bill without very much trouble, more than the bill contained when the bill left the House and went to the Senate; not as the bill was brought into the House, but as it left the House and went to the Senate. How much longer are the people of your State, Michigan, California, and Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, and New York, how long are your taxpayers going to continue to pay the expenses of the schools of the District of Columbia, buying the land, building these million and a half dollar plants like the Central High and the Eastern High, and all these other splendid high schools here, paying 50 per cent of all of same until just a short time ago, for the expenses of 2,500 teachers to teach 66,000 school children? Now the people of the United States pay 40 per cent of this expense, but how much longer will your people at home feel like doing that? When you go home in the summer and speak on the hustings, do you tell the people that you tax them 40 per cent for these playgrounds, these $100,000 playgrounds that the gentleman from Michigan is going to add to this Dunbar Colored School, that they are paying 40 per cent on all these numerous school buildings, do you tell them that?

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. COLTON. Does the gentleman have any figures of the number of these children who come from the States and are not permanent residents of the District?

Mr. BLANTON. Does that matter? Why should our constituents pay for their children? My children are here, why should not I pay for them, and I ought to pay for them. Why should I tax my people at home and your people to pay for my children here in the District? I have no right to do it. They have their school taxes down in Texas, they have their State taxes and their county taxes and their city taxes, their municipal taxes, and all kinds, and why should I tax them to pay for the teaching of my children here? That is the question you have got to settle sooner or later, because if you do not settle it the people at home are going to change the personnel of this House, and that quickly. They are getting tired of it. There are civic improvements here that pertain only to the conveniences of the rich residents of this city, wholly unconnected with the Government, and your people are getting tired of paying for them. We ought to stop it. The bill which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] introduced day before yesterday which will let the whole people pay $8,000,000 only is just a drop in the bucket. That is a step in the right direction. I am for his bill as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I believe I have given more study to this question than the gentleman has, but I will yield.

Mr. COLTON. The only question, I take it the gentleman pays his school taxes in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. And that will be a double tax for your children while here?

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact there are 66,000 school children in the District and 2,500 live in Virginia and Maryland and they get their schooling free, they get their books furnished free, and the taxpayers in the gentleman's State and mine now pay 40 per cent of all that expense. It ought not to be.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for one minute to answer the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the question of the gentleman?

Mr. TINCHER. I ask for information. The gentleman says he has given much thought to it. What per cent does the gentleman think the National Capital of the Nation should contribute?

Mr. BLANTON. I tell you what I think, and the gentleman from Kansas is a man usually of good judgment when he has not got politics on his brain. If you make the local tax rate here in the District at least 3 per cent—that is what the Kansas people pay; that is what the New York people pay; that is what the California people pay; that is what the gentleman's people and mine pay—3 per cent instead of 1.30 and let the Government pay the balance, I am willing. But until you fix a proper, reasonable tax rate here it is an infamous injustice to the people of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, amendment No. 24, after line 21, insert:

"MOUNT PLEASANT BRANCH LIBRARY.

"For the purchase of a site for a branch of the free public library in the Mount Pleasant-Columbia Heights section of the District of Columbia, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and authority is hereby conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept from the Carnegie Corporation of New York not less than $100,000 for the purpose of erecting a suitable branch library building on such a site, subject to the approval of said comissioners and the board of library trustees."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the restoration of the item recommended to the House which went out in the House on a point of order. I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33, page 23, beginning line 1, insert: "For the erection of a fireproof addition to the courthouse of the District of Columbia, for the use of the office of the recorder of deeds and such other activities of the District government as the commissioners may designate, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, to be constructed under the supervision of and on plans to be furnished by the Architect of the Capitol and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $500,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment proposed by the Senate an appropriation of $500,000 for an addition to the courthouse to house the recorder of deeds and other activities. I shall offer an amendment that does not carry any appropriation and is for preparation of plans and estimates upon such a building. I move that the House recede and concur with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"The Architect of the Capitol, in collaboration with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall prepare plans for the erection of a fireproof addition to the courthouse of the District of Columbia for the use of the office of the recorder of deeds and such other activities of the government of the District of Columbia as the commissioners may designate, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, and such plans, together with an estimate of the cost of construction in accordance therewith, shall be transmitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 55, on page 37, beginning with line 1, insert: "For the purchase of a site now occupied by Hoover Playground, located in square 546, containing 65,000 square feet, at 25 cents per square foot, $17,000;

"For the purchase of a site at Twenty-seventh and O Streets NW., in square 1238 (803), containing 10,000 square feet, at an estimated cost of $5,000; and for the purchase of lot 804, square 1238, containing 3,840 square feet, at $3,000; in all $8,000.

"So much of any balance remaining after the purchase of sites for playgrounds authorized by this act as is necessary to clean up, grade, drain, fence in, and place such sites in safe and suitable condition for the purposes intended, may be used for such purposes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the gentleman's motion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur. Upon that I shall only say that this is a restoration of an appropriation and language as originally reported to the House from the committee. It went out in the House on a point of order.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that at the end of the gentleman's amendment he add the following proviso: "Provided, That the cost of the above shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which is not in order now, but it may come later. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 56: Page 37, line 19, strike out "$111,032, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," and insert "$136,032."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on that item I propose to recede and concur with an amendment. Under the amendment the amount for maintenance of playgrounds will be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, $111,032; $25,000 for purchase of sites will continue under the 60-40 plan. I offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "$136,032, of which $111,032 shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be expended for the purchase of sites for playgrounds and for the improvement of such playgrounds, shall be paid 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States and 60 per cent out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 64: Page 43, in line 18, after the word "including," insert "administrative principals."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 65: Page 45, line 24, after the word "work," insert "administrative principals of elementary schools."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 75: In line 3, page 54, after the word "land," strike out "adjacent to" and insert "in the vicinity of."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, that is a proposal restoring the language originally reported by the House, which went out on a point of order in the House. The paragraph had to be modified, but for the reason suggested by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the original House language being preferable, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 76: Page 54, line 10, insert:

"For the purchase of a site on which to locate a 16-room building between Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street NW., north of Park Road, $60,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room extensible building on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of Georgia Avenue and Sixteenth Street NW., north of Park Road, $130,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room extensible building, including a combination assembly hall and gymnasium, on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of and to relieve the Tenley School, $160,000;

"For beginning the erection of a 16-room building, including a combination assembly hall and gymnasium, to replace the old John F. Cook School, $100,000, and the commissioners are hereby authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $250,000;

"For the purchase of a new site on which to locate a junior high school between Twentieth Street and Rock Creek and K and O Streets NW., or vicinity, $50,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment. I will state that the language which is covered by the Senate amendment No. 76 is simply a restoration of the language originally reported by the House, which went out on a point of order in the House, and the action I propose now is to accept that language with two small changes to clarify it. I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the words "in the vicinity of," and in lieu thereof insert "between"; and, in line 15 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "contracts," insert "as in this act provided."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas to offer an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, these are all for school buildings here in Washington?

Mr. CRAMTON. Buildings or land.

Mr. BLANTON. Buildings or land connected with the school system?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It relates to buildings and land for schools in the District of Columbia? It is not for Government buildings for departments?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; it is not for Government buildings for departments.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer the following amendment, that at the end of the matter inserted by the Senate add the following: "Provided, That the cost of the above shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order. I do not want to interfere at all with the gentleman getting his proposition before the House, but to keep the record straight the motion should be a motion to recede and concur with an amendment, and to accomplish that, it not being preferential, we would need to divide the question first and let the House recede. If the gentleman desires, I will ask that the question be divided.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, did not the gentleman from Michigan make a motion to recede and concur with an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion that the gentleman made.

Mr. HICKS. Then the motion of the gentleman from Texas must be an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I offered it as, to add the following proviso.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was thinking my motion was to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman made a motion to recede and concur with an amendment, and to that the gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a motion to amend a motion to recede and concur with an amendment is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I contend that it is in order when the chairman yields, and again, the point of order of the gentleman from Maryland comes too late.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not insist on it.

Mr. HICKS. It seems to me that the point made by the gentleman from Texas is good; while it might have been subject to a point of order, it comes too late.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, but my point of order is good against the gentleman's point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment of Mr. CRAMTON: Add, at the end of the amendment: "Provided, That the cost of the above shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 2, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 17, strike out the figures "$700,000" and insert "$1,460,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the item carrying the total amount for new schools and new land and buildings for the schools, and I move to recede and concur with an amendment carrying the correct total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of the sum proposed insert $1,300,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 23, insert the following:

"That the board of trustees of the National Training School for Girls of the District of Columbia, a body corporate, is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, a tract of land of not more than 160 acres, to be situated in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia, for the use of said school; and the said board of trustees are hereby authorized to construct on said tract two buildings, of sufficient capacity to accommodate not more than 150 persons, the plans and specifications for which shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia before acceptance by said board of trustees: Provided, That the purchase price for the said tract of land, the erection of the said buildings, and all expenses incidental thereto shall not exceed the sum of $62,000, which amount is hereby appropriated. The title to the said tract of land shall be taken directly to and in the name of the United States; and in case a satisfactory price can not be agreed upon for the purchase of said tract, or in case the title to said tract can not be made satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States, then the latter is directed to procure said tract of land by condemnation, and the expense of procuring evidence of title, or of condemnation, or both, shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made for the purchase of said tract. The said board of trustees may, within their discretion, transport to the aforesaid tract for such periods as they may see fit any of the girls which may have been committed to said school in the District of Columbia, and the said board of trustees shall have the same power and authority over such girls during the period of their commitment to said tract, or while they are being conducted to or from said tract, as they now possess over such girls within the limits of the District of Columbia."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The president of the board of trustees of the National Training School for Girls of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to purchase a tract of land of not more than 160 acres, situated in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia, as a site for the use of said school, and the said board of trustees is hereby authorized to construct on said tract buildings of sufficient capacity to accommodate not more than 150 persons, the plans and specifications for which shall be prepared by the municipal architect of the District of Columbia. The purchase price for the said tract of land, the erection of the said buildings, and all expenses incidental thereto shall not exceed the sum of $62,000, which amount is hereby appropriated for that purpose. The title to the said property shall be taken directly to and in the name of the United States; and in case a satisfactory price can not be agreed upon for the purchase of said land or in case the title can not be made satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States, then the latter is directed to acquire said tract of land by condemnation, and the expense of procuring evidence of title or of condemnation, or both, shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made for the purchase of said tract. The board of trustees of said school may, in their discretion, remove and transport to the aforesaid tract for such legal periods as they may see fit any of the girls who may have been committed to the National Training School for Girls in the District of Columbia, and the board of trustees of said school shall have the same power and authority over such girls during the period of their commitment to said tract or while they are being conducted to or from said tract as they now possess over such girls within the limits of the District of Columbia. When the buildings herein authorized to be constructed shall be in readiness to receive girls committed to the National Training School for Girls, it shall not be lawful to keep white and colored girls on the same reservations under the control of the board of trustees of said school."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the proposal for the erection of a new school been considered by the House?

Mr. CRAMTON. It was considered by the committee in charge of the bill, and hearings were held. It was not reported favorably to the House, however, but further hearings were held by the Senate, and the Senate recommends the item.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are the present quarters unsuitable for the use of this school?

Mr. CRAMTON. The difficulty is in having the girls of the two races in adjacent buildings in the same institution. That is urged as undesirable, and the purpose of this amendment is to authorize a second reservation under the same board where the white girls will be quartered and have the colored girls remain in the present institution, or they could reverse that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the estimates been submitted to the committee whereby a tract of 160 acres can be purchased and two buildings erected for the outside figure of $62,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. The item in the bill carries language that came to Congress from the Budget, but the language does have a possibility of seeking the impossible if it were carried out strictly.

The language that we propose now is entirely within the limits of possibility. In fact, some definite propositions have been given some consideration which would come well within the requirements of the proposed amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the reason that the conferees made the change in respect to the person who is to make the purchase?

Mr. CRAMTON. That language was arrived at in conference in order to meet the views of all of the conferees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 112: Page 87 of the bill, at the top of the page, insert:

"The paragraph in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 29, 1922, which reads as follows:

"'The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to use a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, said site to be located in the District of Columbia on lands owned by the District of Columbia and now allotted to the Home for the Aged and Infirm, and to erect thereon suitable buildings at a total cost not exceeding $250,000, and toward said purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available. The persons to be admissible thereto and the proceedings with reference to securing such admission to be in accordance with law'—is hereby repealed; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, said site to be located in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia, and to erect thereon suitable buildings at a total cost not exceeding $300,000, of which not more than $40,000 shall be expended for a site, and toward said purpose there is appropriated the sum of $125,000 to be immediately available; if the land proposed to be acquired is within the District of Columbia, and the same can not be acquired by purchase at a price satisfactory to the commissioners, they are authorized to condemn the same under the provisions of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia. If the land can not be acquired within the District of Columbia, the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire such land as may be selected for said site either in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia in accordance with the laws of said States, the title of said land to be taken directly to and in the name of the United States, but the land so acquired shall be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as agents of the United States, and expenses of procuring evidence of title or of condemnation, or both, shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made for the purchase of said site."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, said site to be located in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia, and to erect thereon suitable buildings at a total cost not exceeding $300,000, of which not more than $88,000 shall be expended for a site, and toward said purpose there is reappropriated the sum of $100,000 contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923 toward the erection of suitable buildings for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, to be available immediately. If the land proposed to be acquired is within the District of Columbia, and the same can not be acquired by purchase at a price satisfactory to the commissioners, they are authorized to condemn the same under the provisions of chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia. If the land proposed to be acquired is without the District of Columbia and can not be purchased at a satisfactory price, the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire such land as may be selected for said site either in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia in accordance with the laws of said States, the title of said land to be taken directly to and in the name of the United States, but the land so acquired shall be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as agents of the United States, and expenses of procuring evidence of title or of condemnation, or both, shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made for the purchase of said site. The persons to be admissible to said home and school and the proceedings with reference to securing such admission to be in accordance with law. The authorization to use a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons on lands owned by the District of Columbia, contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 116: Page 93, after line 19, insert:

"NATIONAL LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND.

"For aid and support of the National Library for the Blind, located at 1800 D Street NW., to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $5,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment, insert "$2,500."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, that restores the amount of the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has the National Government been aiding in support of this library?

Mr. CRAMTON. For 10 years or more.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been my understanding that the Library of Congress has special books for the use of the blind which are sent out to libraries throughout the country. I was not aware that there was a special library here for the blind having national support.

Mr. CRAMTON. This library was incorporated in 1911 and is supported by dues and gifts. It is engaged in circulating books to blind people throughout the United States, and it provides employment for certain blind people in preparing such books. They have the free use of the mails for circulating the books, under act of Congress passed in 1904.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the first time that we have recognized an appropriation for this service.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no; it has been carried for 10 years or more.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was not carried in the House bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. On several occasions it has been omitted in the House and has been restored in the Senate, and we are simply following tradition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this stricken out on a point of order in the House?

Mr. CRAMTON. It was not recommended to the House by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 117: On page 94, at the top of the page, insert:

"COLUMBIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

"To aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, located at 1808 H Street NW., to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $1,500."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 118: Page 97, at the top of the page, insert:

"The Board of Engineers constituted by Public Act No. 441, approved March 2, 1911, is hereby directed to submit through the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on or before the first day of the next regular session of Congress a report recommending such modifications in existing project for Anacostia Park above Benning Bridge as may now appear desirable and in the interest of economy."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 118 and concur in the same with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "The Board of Engineers constituted by Public Act No. 441, approved March 2, 1911, is hereby directed to submit through the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on the first day of the next regular session of Congress a report on the desirability or undesirability of continuing the said project above Benning Bridge, and if it is to be so continued what modifications in existing project above Benning Bridge appear desirable and in the interest of economy. Such report shall include such recommendations with a statement of the facts and shall include detailed estimates of cost under the modifications proposed compared with the estimates under present plans and the decrease in cost as a result of such modification."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 123, page 102 of the bill, after line 17, insert:

"For the construction of a comfort station and shelter at Haines Point, East Potomac Park, $15,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 124: After the amendment just adopted on page 102 insert: "The appropriation of $25,000 contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923 for the construction of a bathing beach and bathhouse for the colored population of the city is continued and made available during the fiscal year 1924 for the construction and maintenance of said bathing beach and bathhouse at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 124, with an amendment as follows:

"In line 7 of the matter inserted by said amendment before the word 'Key' insert 'Francis Scott.'"

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this proposed proposition, I think that the RECORD should show that considerable difficulty is being experienced by the authorities in finding a location for this bathing beach. The bathing beach for white people is in the Tidal Basin. The Secretary of War holds that if he had authority he would remove that, or if it were not already located there he would protest against its being placed there, because the water is not in a healthy enough condition to have it desirable for bathing. The authorities are having difficulty in finding a place for the colored people which will be healthy and still be satisfactory to those who are to use it.

There is a proposition to put it over here in the Anacostia River, a place where there is a gravel beach, but the authorities find the waters are so contaminated by the sewage as to make it unhealthful for bathing. There have been one or two other places suggested, but the only place that they have been able to recommend as desirable, reasonably accessible, with water in proper condition for such use, is at the end of the Key Bridge, as is proposed by this language. There have been many protests from colored persons against its being located in that section, so that it is by no means certain that the improvement covered by the appropriation here provided for will be made during the next year, but it seems the only tenable proposition pending.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I suggest to the gentleman that it would be very inadvisable to attempt even a tentative location at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. The authorities have been investigating and considering it for one or two years. I talked with Colonel Sherrill about it this morning, and he feels that this is the only site which combines the desirable features of accesibility and healthfulness.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would like to say to the gentleman that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and myself had a very recent conference with the Secretary of War. We understood from him very definitely that nothing had been finally determined, and that the matter would be held for further consideration. We relied upon that understanding, and I am surprised to find the Senate provision that is carried in his report. I may say, in addition, that the facts within my possession show that the proposed location, for many reasons, is most undesirable, and I may say further that the newspapers of the city seem to indicate very clearly that the site is not acceptable to the people for whose use it is designed.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, it is my expectation that, unless it is definitely developed that the colored people for whose benefit this is being provided manifest a desire to have it constructed at this location, it will not be placed there; and therefore I have said I thought there was quite a possibility that the appropriation would not be used. I may say to the gentleman that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was one of the conferees who signed this report.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I must assume the Senator's attention was not called to this matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is probably true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And I therefore ask the gentleman in fairness—nothing can be lost by it—to modify his amendment so as to exclude the location specified. The Secretary of War, under the authority heretofore conferred, would then have the right to locate the bathing beach at such place as he might determine to be appropriate, and I urge the gentleman to modify his amendment to the extent I suggest.

Mr. CRAMTON. My amendment is only taken after a conference with the House conferees and the Senate conferees, and I would not feel it proper now to modify that language, as it is not my own entirely. But this was in the bill. No word has come to us from the Secretary of War of any such understanding, and I talked this morning with Colonel Sherrill without learning of such an understanding; but I understand that the construction of this beach will not be proceeded with by the authorities unless it becomes definite that the site is acceptable to the people for whom it is intended.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Well, assuming that, in view of the fact that one of the conferees is the Senator from Virginia, who, as the gentleman says, did not have his attention called to this matter, and that the situation is as I have tried to explain it——

Mr. CRAMTON. Do not quote me as saying——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I thought the gentleman stated that.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I said I thought it was possible.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Well, even so, I hope the gentleman will agree to accept a modification of his amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman realizes this language was inserted in the Senate and the Virginia Senators had every opportunity to know what the language was.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman to consider a modification of his amendment by striking out the words "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge," leaving the matter at large within the discretion of the Secretary of War, where it rests now.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course the gentleman has the right to offer an amendment, but I have no authority to accept it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I hope the House will adopt.

The SPEAKER. An amendment is not in order now.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is to recede and concur with an amendment. If the gentleman will separate the motion to recede and concur——

Mr. CRAMTON. I am willing to do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment. Strike out the words "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge," and I hope the House will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Virginia moves to amend the Senate amendment, page 103, after the word "bathhouse," by striking out the words "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would not feel like accepting that amendment. This is a matter that was put in the bill several weeks ago, and in the conference where it was considered one of the Senators from Virginia was present. I talked this morning with Colonel Sherrill, and while he felt that he might not need it this year, would not be able to use it because of all this controversy, there was nothing about any agreement, and I fear the gentleman's amendment will simply complicate matters. I hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the adoption of my suggestion can result in any complication. According to the statements that have been made one of the conferees would be placed in a very embarrassing attitude if the amendment offered by my friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is accepted; whereas, on the other hand, if the modification that I propose is approved there will not only be no serious complication but there will be no injury to any interest or individual, for the very simple reason that the entire matter will rest within the judgment of the Secretary of War, as it rests with him now and has rested with him heretofore.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the real difficulty this, that there are some white folks over there in Virginia who are opposing this location? Where is there a location in the District of Columbia that is more healthful and more desirable as a site for a bathing beach?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is land on the other side of the river granted by the State of Virginia to the Government of the United States. The location would either be on that land or on land that has been developed by the action of the river in the course of time. The question is not of interest alone to the people on the other side of the river. But it is general, and most serious so far as they are concerned. It is of interest to all people who oppose a bathing beach in the wrong place or operate it under improper and unhealthful conditions. There are people on both sides of the river who do not care to see the new bridge, which is one of the handsomest structures in the country, continually crowded with persons going to and from a bathing beach. There is opposition by those on both sides of the river who think it undesirable that a bathing beach should be in sight of those using the Key Bridge for ordinary purposes. Furthermore, according to the newspapers, there is pronounced opposition by many colored people in the District of Columbia who say they do not care to have a bathing beach located at that particular point.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. CRAMTON. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. BLANTON. Three minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are liabilities that go with all assets, responsibilities with all benefits. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], I believe, secures more bacon for his constituents than does any other Member of Congress. The great Potomac River separates his district from the city of Washington. Every fine, magnificent bridge that spans the Potomac River over which his favored people have easy access into the United States Capital has been built without one cent of expense to them, and maintained without one cent of expense to them, at Government cost. They do not have to be taxed to build bridges across the main stream that borders their country like people have to do in every other district. The gentleman here has exercised such a great influence over this House from time to time that he gets for them exactly what they want. He had this fine two and one-half million dollar Francis Scott Key Bridge built for his Virginia people who daily come into Washington so that they would not have to go two or three hundred yards farther to another bridge, which was not quite so convenient to them. This new bridge was constructed so that they would have a handy bridge right at their front door, as it were. They are not satisfied. Now, when the District of Columbia wants to use its own bridge in order to let its colored children who need bathing go to their bathing beach on the other side of the river, he does not want such clouds to obscure the fair skies of patrician Virginia. [Laughter.] Now, when Congress wants to give him and his Virginia people a present of a colored bathing beach he does not want to take it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield some time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas must be facetious. Since I have been here I do not think there has been any original bridge legislation. It was before my advent here that Congress planned and authorized the construction of the Key Bridge. It is true that there have been additional appropriations made since I came here. The fact is that none of the water and land spanned by the Key Bridge is under the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia. That is true also with reference to the new railway bridge and with reference to the Highway Bridge, so that there is nothing in the point that the State of Virginia has not contributed anything to the construction of the Key Bridge. The matter now being considered is altogether aside from any such point. It is a question of large expediency. It relates to the wisdom of the action we should take. It relates to whether the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] shall be adopted in the terms in which it is framed or whether it shall be adopted by excluding any particular location. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the effect of the amendment would be to tie the Government to the selection of this specified place, instead of the Government having the right, as now, of establishing a bathing beach for colored people anywhere within the limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to vote with the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman will vote with me, and I hope the House will. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from Michigan, and it will only be reiterating to say what I have already said heretofore, that no harm can be done by the modification of his amendment, while there will be a great deal of harm done and embarrassment created by adopting his amendment as it is written.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the original appropriation act for 1923, was the language in that appropriation "at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge?"

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was it a general authorization, without any particular designation?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. So that now for the first time in this act it has been located?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say only this: The situation is that Colonel Sherrill tells me he has investigated this question and that the only available site suitable for this beach is the one specified in the bill. The gentleman from Virginia states that the Secretary of War, if he has the power, will not locate it at the point specified in the bill. So if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia you are making an idle appropriation because the Secretary of War will not put it at the one place which Colonel Sherrill says is the only available place. I hope therefore that the appropriation carried for the next year will specify it is to be put in the only place that is available.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is it not true that in the original appropriation the hearings show that it was intended to put the beach on that side of the river at the end of the other bridge?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's information goes further than mine.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Virginia whether this was the first time that this location was ever made, and if the original authorization was general, and he said yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was general, but this language was inserted in the Senate this year.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The Senate concluded that it was desirable to locate it at this place?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And if the location was not specified in the bill, it still could be located here?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but the gentleman from Virginia says that the Secretary of War would not put it there.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Virginia), there were 37 ayes and 44 noes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands tellers. All those in favor of tellers rise. [After counting.] Twenty-four Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it should be ascertained that a quorum is not present, will it be in order to ask for tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia?

The SPEAKER. No; that is passed, and the Chair was putting the other motion.

Mr. WINGO. I thought the Speaker had put the question and counted the ayes, and the noes had not been counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was putting the question as to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WINGO. We were in the midst of a vote on that?

The SPEAKER. There has been no vote. There has been no division.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The House having receded on its disagreement, will it be in order to vote down the concurrence?

The SPEAKER. Of course. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Virginia) there were 73 ayes and 35 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 19, insert the following:

"Provided, That the following areas and parcels described and delineated on map No. 2, contained in House Document No. 1114, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, as a part of total area to be acquired for said parkway shall be excluded from the total area finally to be acquired, to wit: Three hundred and fifteen square feet of lot 801 in square 2541, 349 square feet of lot 836, 1,303 square feet of lot 74 in square 2543, 549 square feet of lot 58, 2,106 square feet of lot 800 in square 1262, 3,600 square feet of lot 20 in square 23, 199 square feet of lot 80 in square 1238, and 50 square feet of lot 3 in square No. 1: Provided further, That the following-described lots and parcels that are without the taking line shall be included in the area finally to be acquired, namely, 4,483 square feet of lot No. 1, 2,919 square feet of lot 2, 3,259 square feet of lot 3 in square 2510, 6,879 square feet of lot 1 in square 47, and about 902 square feet of lot 803 in square 2543: Provided further, That in order to protect Rock Creek and its tributaries, none of the moneys herein or heretofore appropriated for the opening, widening, or extending of any street, avenue, or highway in the District of Columbia shall be extended for the opening, widening, or extension of any street, avenue, or highway which shall or may in the judgment of the District Commissioners permanently injure or diminish the existing flow of Rock Creek or any of its tributaries, nor shall permission so to do at private expense be granted to any private person or corporation except by the joint consent and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment 126 with an amendment, as follows: In line 28 of the Senate amendment strike out the word "extended" and insert "expended."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment restores the language originally reported to the House and the amendment I am proposing to the Senate amendment No. 126 is to correct a typographical error.

Mr. DALLINGER. What is the object of this language in the Senate amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. This was with reference to the Rock Creek-Potomac Park Driveway, which has boundaries that have been authorized heretofore, and this language is to modify those boundaries as in their actual survey and work they have found is to be desirable; in some places to take out little pieces of land that it is not desirable to have within the parkway and in others to add to the parkway similar small portions of land now outside.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 126 and concur in the same with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 127: Page 105, after line 4, insert:

"The authority of the commission is hereby extended to acquire, by purchase or condemnation or otherwise, the following additional tracts of land for park purposes, to wit: The tract known as the Klingle Valley Park, containing about 8 acres, as shown on map filed in the office of the executive officer of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission and designated as the map of Klingle Valley Park, dated January 12, 1923; the Piney Branch Valley Park, containing about 6 acres, as shown on map filed in the office of the executive officer of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission and designated as the map of Piney Branch Valley Park, dated January 12, 1923; and a portion of the tract known as the Patterson tract, being parcel 129/2, except the portion of the west side of said tract, indicated as eliminated from said tract by a map filed in the office of the executive officer of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission and designated as map of the Patterson tract, dated January 12, 1923, containing about 70 acres. The commission is further authorized to reduce the area to be acquired in either of said tracts, where, by reason of improvements constructed or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgment the public interest may require, and the limit hereinafter fixed to be paid for said tracts shall be reduced accordingly: Provided, That if acquired by purchase the cost of the respective tracts shall not exceed the following sums: The Klingle Valley Park, $155,950; the Piney Branch Valley Park, $94,050; and that portion of the Patterson tract above designated, $425,000, and there is hereby authorized and appropriated for the purposes specified herein the sum of $675,000: Provided further, That the tracts authorized to be acquired by this act shall become part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army: Provided further, That Cleveland Avenue from Thirty-fourth Street eastward to Thirty-third Place is hereby declared closed and the title thereto receded to the owner of the abutting property by whom it was dedicated, in consideration of the dedication by the same owner of a larger area for the widening and extension of Thirty-third Place, as shown by the map of Klingle Valley Park herein referred to."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 127.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask why these parcels should not be taken. As I understand it, they are tributaries of Rock Creek, and if they are closed up and filled in it will seriously affect the amount of water in Rock Creek, which is already small. It would seem to anyone coming here from another State that in any other city in the country those two branches of Rock Creek would be taken as a natural part of the park system, and I have always wondered why they were not originally taken.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are three parcels called for, one the Patterson tract, which was not in the Budget and has nothing whatever to do with the situation the gentleman speaks of, because it is in another part of the city; the Klingle Valley and Piney Branch portions are both tributaries of Rock Creek and have been urged that they would be desirable additions to the park. I have not heard it urged that these had any material bearing upon the water situation the gentleman speaks of. My own impression is that the reason that this land has not been acquired is that Congress has always felt that the owners of the land were trying to make a bonanza out of the Government by having the Government take it over at an unfair price. The lands are not good for anything else than park purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there has been a concerted effort for the last four years upon the part of owners of these tracts of land to unload them on the Government of the United States at this big price. They do not affect the waterway. That matter has been looked into carefully by men who are just as much interested in the District of Columbia and the city of Washington as any other person. I do not believe the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he understood the inside of it, would permit these owners to unload this property on the Government at this big price.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. I would like to make a statement in answer to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts. One of these tracts crosses Sixteenth Street at the bridge, with which we are all familiar, and the park as owned by the Government runs to the bridge. Immediately east of Sixteenth Street there is an avenue running from the north end of the bridge in a northeasterly direction, which runs in the direction in which those who wish to purchase this land for park purposes wish to have the parkway run, and there can be on the south side of this little valley at the south end of the bridge and from the park up to the south end of the bridge a roadway that is better than you can build on the east side of the bridge where it is proposed to develop a roadway. There is a flood-water sewer now constructed, the end of which is immediately west of Sixteenth Street Bridge, which carries all of the water, except that which falls on the small tract in question, down into the park. The other tract of land is over under Connecticut Avenue. There is now a roadway 50 feet wide, belonging to the Government, one of the proper highways of the District, and the proposed purchase of that land is simply to extend that highway 200 feet wide and put upon the Government the burden of fixing up nicely a property for a rich proprietor. That is its only advantage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 129: Page 108, line 10, after the figures "$1,500,000" insert: ": Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into contracts for materials and work necessary to the construction of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $6,150,000, including all appropriations and contract authorizations herein and heretofore made: Provided further, That no bid in excess of the estimated cost for that portion of the work or plant covered by the bid shall be accepted, nor shall any contract for any portion of the work, material, or equipment to constitute a part of the plant for which this appropriation is available be valid unless the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall have certified thereon that all its terms are within the requirements of the authorization and the revised estimates for the work: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of War causes proceedings to be instituted for the acquirement by condemnation of any lands or interests therein needed for the said work, the United States, upon the filing of the petition in any such proceedings, shall have the right to take immediate possession of said lands, easements, rights of way, or otherwise, to the extent of the interest to be acquired, and to proceed with the work herein authorized: Provided further, That certain adequate provisions shall have been made for the payment of just compensation to the party or parties entitled thereto, either by previous appropriation by the United States or by the deposit of moneys or other form of security in such amount and form as shall be approved by the court in which such proceedings shall be instituted. The respondent or respondents may move at any time in the court to increase or change the amounts or securities and the court shall make such order as shall be just in the premises and as shall adequately protect the respondents. In every case the proceedings in condemnation shall be diligently prosecuted on the part of the United States in order that such compensation may be promptly ascertained and paid: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of the next and each succeeding regular session of Congress, until the entire project shall have been completed, a report on said water system and increase of water supply showing, among other things, the progress of the work, construction under way and proposed within the District, connections with the present system of distribution, and revised estimates of cost."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 129 and concur in the same with an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "within," insert the words "or without."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a statement made upon this very important project.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the language covered by the Senate amendment No. 129 is the language originally reported to the House from the Committee on Appropriations, which went out on a point of order in the House. It has been restored by the Senate, and the amendment which I suggest is with reference to the report which the Secretary of War is required to submit to Congress on the first day of the next session of Congress, showing, among other things, progress of the work, the construction under way and proposed within and without the District. The language as the Senate inserted it does not refer to the work without the District, and the amendment proposes that the report shall deal with the work without the District as well as within.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I rose I was under the impression that when this matter was under consideration in the House and was stricken out on the point of order I believed at that time that without it the interests of the District would be jeopardized; that this safeguarded the interest of the District by placing certain limitations about this proposed project.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. EVANS], a member of the subcommittee last year and this year, as the gentleman from Wisconsin probably knows, gave a great deal of study and investigation to this subject of an addition to the Washington water supply, and in the subcommittee this year this language was prepared under the direction of Mr. EVANS. The subcommittee were very glad to follow his views with reference to this subject, because we knew that the interest of the Government and of the District would be fully safeguarded thereby.

Mr. STAFFORD. When is it proposed that this work of construction shall be completed, so that the District will have the benefit of this increased water supply?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to answer that question.

Mr. EVANS. In answer to the question——

Mr. BRIGGS. Just a minute. I would like to ask in that connection the gentleman from Michigan to explain——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to answer the question.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is along the same line, and that is whether any actual work has been undertaken yet in connection with the construction of this new conduit?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I presume it is best for me to make a preliminary statement.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to hear that.

Mr. EVANS. There was originally by act of Congress a comprehensive investigation of the conditions which related to the water supply of the city of Washington connected with the probability of utilizing the power which is contained in the conditions that are presented at Great Falls. One of the various projects reported and the one which it was advised should be adopted was called, as I recall it, project E, and provided only for an increase of the water supply. The condition present is a conduit taking the water from Great Falls by a tunnel under the canal and then bringing it into this conduit which follows what is known as the Conduit Road to the reservoir known as the Dalecarlia Reservoir.

Mr. BRIGGS. In that connection, can the gentleman answer the other question as to whether new property is to be acquired by condemnation. Has not the Government enough property that it owns that it can utilize that right of way for this additional conduit instead of acquiring new property?

Mr. EVANS. I may say this, that the amount of property which is owned by the Government between the District line and Great Falls is nearly sufficient, but there are places where it will be necessary to acquire, either by purchase or condemnation, additional ground to carry out the improvement proposed and approved by Congress, which is the construction of another conduit of similar size from Great Falls to the Dalecarlia Reservoir. Then there is also a portion of the project which contemplates the distribution, in so far as it carries the water from the Dalecarlia Reservoir, to certain areas in the city, and we must acquire a right of way for putting in the various pipes or mains which will be necessary for that purpose. For this particular purpose it is necessary to have the right of condemnation.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the gentleman any idea what the estimated cost would be for this new property which is to be acquired in this way?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman can find that in the report which was made by the commission, and I think I have in my office a revised and detailed estimate which covers that proposition, but I do not have it at my tongue's end so as to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. BRIGGS. Could the gentleman incorporate that in his remarks?

Mr. EVANS. I will endeavor to do so if I have it, but in any event the gentleman will get it approximately correct from the proceedings of the commission and likewise in the first volume, I think, of the Chief of Engineers' Report for the Army for the year 1921; at least there is much valuable information in that report if the gentleman is interested.

Mr. BRIGGS. I thought for the RECORD the gentleman would not mind incorporating it.

Mr. EVANS. I shall incorporate the latest estimates I have for the project.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
ROOM 250, OLD LAND OFFICE BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., November 18, 1922.

Subject: Supplemental report on increase of water supply, District of Columbia.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

1. Act (Public) No. 256, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved June 29, 1922, contains the following:

"For increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia, in accordance with project E, submitted in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, the estimated cost of which has been revised and placed at $8,738,000, there is hereby authorized an appropriation, including those heretofore made, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, of not to exceed the sum of $8,738,000, which shall include the cost of all land, rights of way, easements, materials, engineering, labor, equipment, service, and all things necessary to complete said project and its full and complete connection with the present water plant of said District and its distribution system, and of said sum there is hereby appropriated for said purpose the sum of $1,500,000, to be immediately available and to be expended in such a manner as will at the earliest possible date provide for the completion of said project. The Secretary of War may enter into contracts for materials and work necessary to the construction of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $1,450,000 in addition to the amount herein appropriated. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire all necessary land, easements, and rights of way necessary to the construction of said project by purchase or condemnation: Provided, That no bid in excess of the estimated cost for that portion of the work or plant covered by the bid shall be accepted, nor shall any contract for any portion of the work, material, or equipment to constitute a part of the plant for which this appropriation is available be valid unless the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall have certified thereon that all its terms are within the requirements of this authorization and the revised estimates: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of the next regular session a supplemental report on said water system and increase of water supply, showing among other things new or proposed construction within said District, connections with the present system of distribution, and revised estimates of cost."

2. In compliance with the foregoing provisions of law contracts were made with the low bidder for the construction of so much of the new conduit from Great Falls to the Dalecarlia Reservoir, at the District line, as the funds appropriated and authorized would permit. These contracts, three in number, were approved July 28, 1922, by the Chief of Engineers, and provide for the construction of 45,700 linear feet of the conduit from a point 2,800 linear feet below Great Falls to the Dalecarlia Reservoir. Construction is simultaneously under way at a number of points on this new conduit. There remains to be contracted for the conduit from Great Falls to the point of beginning of the existing contracts 2,800 linear feet, mostly in tunnel, which work can not be done until land and rights of way are secured. There also remains, not covered by existing contracts, one-half of each cross-connection foundations and cross-connection superstructures.

The work not contracted for and which is required to complete the new conduit, and which must be done before additional water can be brought from Great Falls, it is estimated will cost as follows:

Gate chamber at Great Falls	$80,000
Conduit, section No. 1	38,000
Tunnel at Great Falls	300,000
Cross-connection gatehouses	80,000
Land and rights of way	13,000
Total	511,000
Superintendence, inspection, and omissions	51,000
Total	562,000

3. This report is particularly directed to the provision of law quoted in paragraph 1 preceding, requiring a supplemental report on new or proposed construction within the District of Columbia, connections with the present system of distribution, and revised estimates of cost.

4. Since the enactment of the law quoted the question of purification and distribution of additional water has been very carefully restudied.

The conclusion reached is that the general plan of filtration and distribution proposed in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, is sound and for the reasons stated in that report should be put under construction at the earliest possible date.

5. Works proposed: The works proposed and required are as follows:

(a) A filtration plant complete, pumping station and power plant on Government-owned land near the District line.

(b) A distribution reservoir for the first high service, located on high ground about 1,200 feet northeast of the Georgetown Reservoir.

(c) A distribution reservoir for the second high service, located on high ground near Forty-fourth and Van Ness Streets NW.

(d) Pipe lines from the pumping station to the said new first and second high-service reservoirs and to the existing third high-service reservoir at Reno.

(e) A pipe line from the said new first high-service reservoir to connect with the existing first high-service mains at the existing gatehouse in the Georgetown Reservoir.

(f) A pipe line from the said new second high-service reservoir to connect with the existing second high-service main at the intersection of Seventeenth and Taylor Streets NW.

(g) New connection between the filtered water reservoir at the McMillan Park Filtration Plant and the existing gravity service mains to obtain 10 feet additional head on the gravity service.

(h) The installation of a chlorinating apparatus at the Georgetown Reservoir so that in case of emergency water may be supplied the gravity area directly from that reservoir.

(i) Repairs to existing works.

6. Filtration plant: This plant is located just west of the Conduit Road, near the District line, and will receive water by gravity from the Dalecarlia Reservoir. It is designed for an average capacity of 75,000,000 gallons per day. The location and general arrangement are shown on sheet No. 3. The plant consists essentially of an influent conduit to take water from the reservoir, a head house for controlling the operation of the plant with a tower in which is placed storage for chemicals and all mechanical equipment for applying them, covered mixing basins, open coagulating basins, 20 filters suitably housed, a covered filtered water reservoir, a pumping station and power plant for the development of power for the operation of the pumps, and dwellings for the operating force. The essential features of the plant are shown on sheets Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

7. First high-service distribution reservoir: A 15,000,000-gallon covered reservoir is located as shown on sheets Nos. 12 and 13, to supply the first high service by gravity. The reservoir will supply water to that service with a head of 220 feet instead of the present head on the service of 210 feet.

8. Second high-service distribution reservoir: A 15,000,000-gallon covered reservoir is located as shown on sheets Nos. 14 and 15, to supply the second high service with a head of 30 feet greater than that now furnished by the existing Brightwood Reservoir.

9. The pipe line to supply the first high-service reservoir is 48-inch cast-iron pipe laid along the Conduit Road as shown on the plans (sheet No. 1).

The pipe lines to supply the second high-service reservoir and the existing third high-service reservoir at Reno are 36-inch cast-iron pipes located as shown on the plans, sheet No. 1.

10. A 48-inch pipe line will connect the first high-service reservoir with the existing first high-service mains, and the details of the connections are shown on sheet No. 1.

11. The pipe line to connect the second high-service reservoir with the existing 36-inch second high-service main at Seventeenth and Taylor Streets NW. is 72-inch diameter concrete-lined tunnel from Forty-fourth Street NW. along the line of Upton Street for 3,300 feet, thence 42-inch cast-iron pipe, all as shown on sheet No. 1.

12. Desirability of obtaining additional head on gravity service: The head on gravity service is now about 146 feet above sea level. The desirability of a somewhat greater head has been obvious for many years, but the necessary work for accomplishing that purpose has been deferred until a general overhauling of the water-supply system was taken up.

An increase in pressure head on the gravity service of from 10 to 15 feet can be secured by laying a new pipe line to connect the filtered-water reservoir of the McMillan Park plant with the existing gravity mains, at a total cost of about $100,000. No extra pumping would be required to supply the extra pressure, so that the cost of the pipe line would be the only expense incurred. As it would cost about $12,000 per annum to produce the above extra pressure by pumping, it is evident that the cost of the pipe line will be a good investment.

13. Arrangement for emergency supply to gravity area from Georgetown Reservoir: Connections will be made for supplying unfiltered, chlorinated water to the gravity service in case a break occurs in the old tunnel or filtration plant, as shown on sheet No. 1. This water would be supplied through the existing 30 and 36 inch mains, making the conditions for the gravity service similar to those existing for many years before the filtration plant was built, with the very important exception that formerly the water was supplied in an entirely untreated state, whereas the future emergency supply would be clarified by the use of a coagulant and sterilized by the application of chlorine.

14. The normal operation of the entire water-supply system when the new works are put in operation will be as follows (see sheet No. 2):

Gravity-service area: The gravity-service area will be supplied from the existing filtration plant at McMillan Park "A" by gravity with a head of 156 feet. In case of any emergency which might interrupt service from this plant, water can be supplied from the Georgetown Reservoir "C" to this area with a head of 146 feet. This water would be chlorinated but not filtered.

First high-service area: The first high-service area will be supplied by gravity from the new first high-service reservoir "F," which will receive filtered water by pumping from the new filtration plant "D." In case of an interruption of this service, this area can be supplied by direct pumping from the existing pumping station "B," at First and Bryant Streets.

Second high-service area: The second high-service area will be supplied by gravity from the new second high-service reservoir "E," which will receive water by pumping from the new filtration plant "D." In case of interruption in this service, the area can be supplied by direct pumping from the existing pumping station "B," at First and Bryant Streets.

Third high-service area: The third high-service area will be supplied by gravity from the existing Reno Reservoir "C," as at present, but that reservoir will receive its water by pumping from the new filtration plant "D." In case of necessity, it can be supplied, however, as at present, from the old plant "A" through the First and Bryant Streets pumping station "B."

15. Repairs to existing works: The consumption of water is now so great that the existing works can not be put out of service long enough to permit repairs. As soon as the new conduit is completed the old conduit should be put out of commission and thorough and complete repairs should be made wherever they may be found to be necessary. With the new filtration plant and distribution system to the first, sec-

